

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE TO AMERICAN EDITION.

IN preparing this edition of Haydn's Dictionary of Dates for American publication, it has been the desire of the publishers to make as few and as slight alterations in the text of the latest English edition as might be. The American editor has corrected errors in the English work with respect to American matters; has added American dates to all important titles from which they were omitted in the English work; and has inserted such additional titles, relating to American subjects, as were necessary to fit the work for the use of American readers. He has omitted none of the many titles concerning English matters which would be deemed superfluous if the work were American in its origin, nor has it been possible, without swelling the book to undue size, to add an equally full list of American titles; but it is believed that the additions made include all important matters in American history which readers expect to find in such a work. The Dictionary, as it is now offered to the public, is simply the latest English edition of Haydn with American dates added, and errors of statement and date concerning American matters corrected.

GEORGE CARY EGGLESTON.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTEENTH EDITION.

WHEN Mr. Joseph Haydn first published this work (in 1841), it was well received, as in some degree supplying a public want; and six editions had been sold, in 1855, when I was earnestly requested by the publisher, Mr. Edward Moxon, to superintend the printing of a new edition. This led, eventually, to my undertaking its thorough renovation, which has been effected by long-continued labor in revision and in selection from an abundance of valuable materials, and now little of the original work remains; the present edition containing twice as much matter as the sixth, published in 1853, at the same price. The new features include Chronological Tables at the beginning of the volume, innumerable literary, scientific, topographical, and geographical facts inserted in the body of the work, and a Dated Index. To make room for these additions, the size of the page has been enlarged, many articles have been condensed or printed in smaller type, and much useless matter has been expunged. The SIXTEENTH EDITION was published in October, 1878.

THIS SEVENTEENTH EDITION has been thoroughly revised, and includes the general history of the world during the last three years, continued under the heads of the respective countries; the more important events being noticed in separate articles. Especial attention has been given to the affairs of our own country, political, ecclesiastical, social, commercial, and philanthropic. Details are given of our recent wars in Afghanistan and South Africa, and of the troubles in Ireland, Russia, and Turkey. The progress of science, and its applications (such as electricity and the electric light, the telephone, and the discovery of new planets and new metals), have been specially noticed, and many small articles have been inserted relating to topics liable to arise in general conversation. This edition contains forty-eight pages more than the last, published in 1878, and one hundred and forty-six more than that published in 1873.

Above a quarter of a century has elapsed since my first connection with this work, and I still feel encouraged to continue to endeavor to make it, not a mere Dictionary of Dates, but a dated Cyclopædia, a digested summary of every department of human history, brought down to the eve of publication; acting under the influence of the old maxims, "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto," and "Nulla dies sine linea." The kindness of those friends who have pointed out some of the errors and omissions, which are almost unavoidable in a work of such scope and magnitude, is gratefully acknowledged.

The more important events that have occurred during the printing of this edition are noticed in the Addenda, page 767.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE design of the Author has been to attempt the compression of the greatest body of general information that has ever appeared in a single volume, and to produce a Book of Reference whose extensive usefulness may render its possession material to every individual—in the same manner that a London Directory is indispensable, on business affairs, to a London merchant. . . .

The Compiler persuades himself that the DICTIONARY OF DATES will be received as a useful companion to all Biographical works, relating, as it does, to things as those do to persons, and affording information not included in the range or design of such publications.

LONDON, May, 1841.

DICTIONARY OF DATES.

AAR

Aargau (Switzerland), formerly included in Berne, was made an independent canton in 1803, and settled as such in 1815. It was much disturbed by religious dissensions in 1841; and the expulsion of the Jesuits was demanded in 1844.

Abacus, the tile on the capital of a column. That on the Corinthian column is ascribed to Callimachus, about 540 B.C.—This name is also given to a frame traversed by stiff wires, on which beads were strung, used for calculating by the Greeks, Romans, and Chinese. M. Lalanne published an ABACUS at Paris in 1845.—The multiplication-table has been called the Pythagorean abacus.

Abancay, a river in Peru, on the banks of which the Spanish marshal Almagro defeated and took prisoner Alvarado, a partisan of Pizarro, 12 July, 1537.

Abattoirs, slaughter-houses for cattle. In 1810 Napoleon decreed that five should be erected near Paris, which were opened in 1818. One was erected at Edinburgh in 1851; and they form part of the new London metropolitan cattle-market, opened on 13 June, 1855. Abattoirs were first introduced into America in 1866.

Abbassides, descendants of Mahomet's uncle, Abbas-Ben-Abdul-Motalleb. Merwan II., the last of the Omniades, was defeated and slain by Abul Abbas in 750, and became caliph. Thirty-seven Abbasside caliphs (including Haroun al Raschid, 786-809) reigned from 750 to 1258. They settled at Bagdad, built by Al-Mansour about 762. Their color was black; that of the Fatimites being green, and that of the Omniades white.

Abbaye, a military prison near St.-Germain-des-Prés, Paris, where 164 prisoners were murdered by infuriated republicans led by Maillard, 2 and 3 Sept. 1792.

Abbeville, N. France. Here Henry III. met Louis IX. of France and made peace, renouncing his right to Normandy and other provinces, 20 May, 1259.

Abbeys, monasteries for men or women; see Monachism and Convents. The first abbey founded in England was at Bangor in 560; in France, at Poitiers, about 360; in Ireland in the fifth century; in Scotland in the sixth century. 110 alien priories were suppressed in England, 2 Henry V. 1414.—Salmon. The gross disorders in these establishments occasioned their destruction in Britain. After visitations of inquiry, king Henry VIII. commenced the suppression of small monasteries to raise revenues for Wolsey's colleges at Oxford and Ipswich, 7 June, 1525; many small monasteries were suppressed in 1536; and all religious houses were suppressed throughout the realm by parliament, 1539-40.—186 large monasteries (revenue 104,919*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*), 347 less monasteries (revenue 33,479*l.* 13*s.* 7½*d.*), and 48 houses of the knights hospitaliers (revenue 2385*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*); total, houses, 608; estimated revenue, 140,784*l.* 19*s.* 6½*d.*).—Tamer. Many abbeys were suppressed in France in 1790, in Spain in 1837 and 1868, and in Italy in 1866-73.

Abbot (from Ab, father), the head of an abbey. In England, mitred abbots were lords of parliament; twenty-seven abbots and two priors thus distinguished, 1329; the number reduced to twenty-five, 1396.—Coke. The abbots of Reading, Glastonbury, and St. John's, Colchester, were executed as traitors for denying the king's supremacy, probably for not surrendering their abbeys, 1539; see Glastonbury.

Abbot's Ripton, see Railway Accidents, 1876.

A B C Club, a name adopted by certain republican enthusiasts in Paris, professing to relieve the abaissés, or depressed. Their insurrection, 5 June, 1832, was suppressed with bloodshed, 6 June. These events are described by Victor Hugo in "Les Misérables" (1862).

Abecedarians, followers of Storch, an Anabaptist in the sixteenth century, derive their name from their rejection of all worldly knowledge, even of the alphabet.

Abecedarium, a logical machine, constructed by Mr. William Stanley Jevons, and described in his "Principles of Science," 1874. He states that, by means of symbolic terms, it can perform all the processes of analytic reasoning with infallible accuracy.

Abelard, a celebrated teacher of theology and logic, in 1118 fell in love with Heloise, the niece of Fulbert, a canon of Paris, became her tutor, and seduced her. After a compulsory marriage, he placed her temporarily in a convent. Having been cruelly mutilated at the instigation of her relatives, he entered the abbey of St. Denis, from which he was compelled to depart, accused of heresy, on account of his censuring the dissoluteness of the monks. He then built and lectured at the oratory of the Paraclete (or Comforter) which eventually he made a convent, with Heloise for the abbess. He died under the charge of heresy, 21 April, 1142, and was buried in the Paraclete, where also Heloise was laid, 17 May, 1164. Their ashes were removed to the garden of the Muséum Français in 1800, and to the cemetery of Père la Chaise in 1817. Their epistles, etc., were published in 1616.

Abencerrages, a powerful Moorish tribe of Granada, opposed to the Zegris. From 1480 to 1492 their quarrels deluged Granada with blood and hastened the fall of the kingdom. They were exterminated by Boabdil (Abu Abdallah), the last king, who was dethroned by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492; his dominions were annexed to Castile.

Abensberg, Bavaria. The Austrians were here defeated by Napoleon I. 20 April, 1809.

Abeokuta, see Dahomy.

Aberdeen (N. Scotland), said to have been founded in the third century after Christ, and erected into a city about 893. Old Aberdeen was made a royal burgh in 1154; it was burned by the English in 1336; and soon after New Aberdeen was built. A statue of the prince consort was inaugurated by the queen 13 Oct. 1863; and one of queen Victoria by the prince of Wales, 20 Sept. 1866.

The University was founded by bishop William Elphinstone, who had a bull from pope Alexander VI. in 1494. King's college was erected in 1500-6. Marischal college was founded by George Keith, earl marischal of Scotland, in 1595; rebuilt in 1837. In 1858 the university and colleges were united. By the reform act of 1868, the universities of Aberdeen and Glasgow send one member to parliament. Above thirty persons drowned by overcrowding a boat, 5 April, 1876.

Malcolm III., having gained a great victory over the Danes in the year 1010, resolved to found a new Bishopric, in token of his gratitude for his success, and pitched upon Mortlach in Banffshire, where St. Beatus was first bishop, 1015. The sec. removed to Aberdeen early in the twelfth century, was discontinued at the revolution, 1689, and is now a post-revolution bishopric, instituted in 1721; see Bishops in Scotland.

Aberdeen Act, introduced by the earl of Aberdeen, and passed, 1845, to enforce the observance of a convention made with Brazil in 1826 to put down the slave-trade. Repealed in April, 1869.

Aberdeen Administration, called the Coalition Ministry, as including Whigs, Radicals, and followers of sir R. Peel. Formed in consequence of the resignation of the first Derby administration; sworn in, 28 Dec. 1852; resigned 30 Jan. 1855; succeeded by the Palmerston administration, which see.

Earl of Aberdeen, * first lord of the treasury.

Abhorers, a name given in 1679 (reign of Charles II.) to the court party in England, the opponents of the Addressers (afterwards Whigs), so called from their address to the king praying for the immediate assembly of the parliament, which was delayed on account of its being adverse to the court. The former (afterwards Tories) expressed their abhorrence of those who endeavored to encroach on the royal prerogative, 1680.—Hum. The commons expelled several members for being Abhorers, among them sir Francis Withens (whom they sent to the Tower), and prayed his majesty to remove others from places of trust. They also resolved, "that it is the undoubted right of the subject to petition for the calling of a parliament, and that to traduce such petitions as tumultuous and seditious is to contribute to the design of altering the constitution." Oct. 1680.

Abingdon Law. In 1645, lord Essex and Waller held Abingdon, an ancient abbey town in Berks, against Charles I. The town was unsuccessfully attacked by sir Stephen Hawkins in 1644, and by prince Rupert in 1645. On these occasions the defenders put every Irish prisoner to death without trial; hence the term "Abingdon law."

Abiogenesis (α , not, β ios, life), a term given to spontaneous generation by professor Huxley in his British Association address, 1870.

Abjuration of the pope was enjoined by statute in the reigns of Henry VIII., Elizabeth, and James I., and of certain doctrines of the church of Rome by stat. 25 Charles II. 1673. The oath of abjuration of the house of Stuart was enjoined by stat. 13 & 14 Will. III. 1702; the form was changed in after-reigns. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48 (1858) one oath for the three oaths of abjuration, allegiance, and supremacy was substituted; see Oaths.

Abkasia, a province of the Caucasus, annexed by Russia, the last prince (Michael Shervashiji) being deposed. An insurrection against the Russian authorities, 8 Aug. 1866, was quelled with much bloodshed.

Abney Park, see Cemeteries.

Abo, a port of Russia, founded prior to 1157, was till 1809 capital of Swedish Finland. It has suffered much by fire, especially in 1775 and 1827; was seized by the Russians in Feb. 1808; ceded to them, 17 Sept. 1809; and rebuilt by them after the great fire in 1827. The university, erected by Gustavus Adolphus and Christina, 1640 et seq., was removed to Helsingfors, 1827. The peace of Abo, by which Sweden ceded part of Finland to Russia, was signed 18 Aug. 1743.

Abolitionists, the party in the northern part of the United States opposed to slavery. They formed a small society at Boston about 1832, which became the nucleus of a great political party, and ultimately attained its object by the war of 1861-5. During the revolution, and when the constitution was made, various societies were formed for the abolition of slavery. The first of these originated in Philadelphia, 14 April, 1775, Benjamin Franklin president. John Jay, and after him Alexander Hamilton, were the first presidents of a second society for the same purpose, formed in New York, 25 Jan. 1785. Others followed in different parts of the Union.

The meetings, publications, and petitions of these bodies were treated respectfully until the development of cotton-planting in the early part of the nineteenth century raised the value of slaves. Then began the struggle between the antislavery and proslavery interest, which culminated in the emancipation proclamation of 1 Jan. 1863. By the 13th article of amendment to the constitution, adopted by congress, 31 Jan. 1865, and proclaimed, after ratification by the requisite number of state legislatures, 18 Dec. 1865, slavery was forever prohibited "within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

Aborigines (without origin), a name given to the earliest known inhabitants of Italy (whence came the Latini); now applied to the original inhabitants of any country.—The Aborigines Protection Society was established in 1838. Reports on the condition of the aborigines in the British colonies were presented to parliament in 1834 and 1837. The society was active in 1874.

Aboukir (Egypt), the ancient Canopus. In the bay Nelson defeated the French fleet, 1 Aug. 1798; see Nile. A Turkish army of 15,000 was defeated here by 6000 French under Bonaparte, 25 July, 1799. A British expedition to Egypt under general sir Ralph Abercromby landed here, and Aboukir surrendered to them after an obstinate and sanguinary conflict with the French, 8 March, 1801; see Alexandria.

Abraham, ERA OR, used by Eusebius; so called from the patriarch Abraham, who died 1822 a.c. The era began 1 Oct. 2015 a.c. To reduce this era to the Christian, subtract 2015 years and three months.—Nicolas.

Abraham, HAZORR OR, near Quebec, Lower Canada. The French were defeated and Montcalm, their commander, killed here by general Wolfe, who fell in the moment of victory, 13 Sept. 1759; see Quebec.

Abrahamites, a sect holding the errors of Paulus, was suppressed by Cyriacus, the patriarch of Antioch, early in the ninth century. A deistical sect of this name was banished from Bohemia by Joseph II. in 1783.

Abrantes (Portugal). By a treaty between France and Portugal, signed here 29 Sept. 1801, the war was closed, and the French army withdrew; a money compensation having been agreed to, and territories in Guiana ceded to France.

Abasalom's Rebellion and death (1024-28 a.c.) is described 2 Sam. xv.-xix.

Abasconding Debtors' Act, passed 9 Aug. 1870.

Absentee Tax (4s. in the pound), levied in Ireland in 1715 on the incomes and pensions of absentees (long complained of), ceased in 1753. A tax of 2s. in the pound was proposed in vain by Mr. Flood in 1778 and by Mr. Molyneux in 1783.

Absolution. Till the third century, the consent of the congregation was necessary to absolution; but soon after the power was reserved to the bishop; and in the twelfth century the form "I absolve thee" had become general; see Holy Cross.

Abstinence. It is said that St. Anthony lived to the age of 105 on twelve ounces of bread and water daily, and James the hermit to the age of 104; that St. Epiphanius lived to 115; Simeon the Stylite to 112; and Kentigern, commonly called St. Mungo, to 185 years of age.—Spotiswood.

Cirely de Ridgway said to have fasted forty days rather than plead when charged with the murder of her husband, John; discharged as miraculously saved, 1347.

Ann Moore, the fasting woman of Tutbury, Staffordshire, was said to have lived twenty months without food, but her imposture was detected by Dr. A. Henderson, Nov. 1808.

A man named Cavanagh at Newry, in Ireland was reported to have lived two years without meat or drink Aug. 1840. His imposture was discovered in England, where he was imprisoned as a cheat, Nov. 1841.

Sarah Jacobs, the Welsh fasting girl, aged thirteen, said by her father to have lived for more than a year without food, after being closely watched for a week, died from exhaustion 17 Dec. 1860. Her parents were sentenced at Carmar-Abydos, see Hellepont. The tablet of Abydos, dedicated to the memory of his ancestors by Pharaoh Ramesses II. (1811-1245 a.c.), was bought for the British Museum, 1837.

Abyssinia, the country of the Habesh, N. E. Africa. Its ancient history is very uncertain. The kingdom of the Auxumitis (its chief town Auxum) flourished in the first and second centuries after Christ. The religion of the Abyssinians is a corrupt form of the Christianity introduced about 329 by Frumentius. About 960, Judith, a Jewish princess, murdered a great part of the royal family, and reigned forty years. The young king escaped; and the royal house was restored in 1268 in the person of his descendant Leon Amlac. In the middle ages it was said to be ruled by Prester John, or Prete Janni. The Portuguese missions, commenced in the sixteenth century, after much struggling against opposition, were expelled about 1633. The encroachments of the Gallas and intestine disorders soon after broke up the empire into petty governments. From the visits of James Bruce, 1768-73; Henry Salt, 1809-10; Edward Knapell, 1834-7; major Harria, 1841; Mansfield Parkyns, 1844-7, much information respecting Abyssinia has been gained. Several expeditions into Abyssinia have been organized by the French government. The brothers Antoine and Arnauld Abbé visited the country 1837-45. Abyssinia was divided into four provinces. In 1847 Ras Ali was ruler of Amhara; Ras Ubie of Tigre and Samien; and Sabala Selassie of Shoa. Population between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000.

Academia. Academia was a shady grove without the walls of Athens (bequeathed by Academicus for gymnastic exercises), where Plato first taught philosophy, and his followers took the title of Academici, 378 a.c. Stanley.—Rome had no academies.*—Ptolemy Heter is said to have founded an academy at Alexandria, about 314 a.c. Abderrahman I., caliph of Spain, founded academies about a.d. 778. Theodosius the Younger, Charlemagne, and Alfred are also named as founders of academies. Italy is celebrated for its academies, and Jarchius mentions 550, of which 25 were in Milan. In 1874 Girolamo Ponti, of Milan, bequeathed about 25,000*l.* to the academies of science of London, Paris, and Vienna.

Acclimatization of ANIMALS. This has been prosecuted with great vigor since the establishment of the Zoological Society of London in 1829, and of the Société d'Acclimatation in Paris. Numbers of European animals have been naturalized in Australia; the camel has been conveyed to Brazil (1859); alpacas are bred at Paris; and ostriches in Italy (1859). On 6 Oct. 1860, the Bois de Boulogne, near Paris, was opened as a zoological garden, containing only acclimatized animals. An English acclimatization society was founded 10 June, 1860, by hon. Grantley Berkeley, Mr. J. Crockford, Mr. F. Buckland, etc., and the prince of Wales became president in April, 1865. It was not successful. An acclimatizing garden was established at Melbourne, Australia, in Feb. 1861, and efforts made to naturalize English birds, fishes, etc.

Accoltellatori (gladiators), secret assassins, at Ravenna and other places in Italy, 1874.

Accordion, a small free-reed wind-instrument with keys, invented at Vienna by Damian about 1829, and soon after introduced into England.

Accountant-General in CHANCERY, etc., an office instituted in 1726, and abolished by an act passed 6 Aug. 1872. In 1841, the office of accountant-general of the court of exchequer was abolished, and the duties transferred to the accountant in chancery.

Accountants' INSTITUTE, established at a meeting, 30 July, 1870; the Accountants' Society in 1872. Five societies were incorporated as "The Chartered Institute of Accountants of England and Wales" in 1880.

Accusers. By occult writers, such as Agrippa, accusers are the eighth order of devils, whose chief is called Asteroth, or Spy. In Rev. xii. 10, the devil is called "the accuser of the brethren." False accusers were to be hanged, by 24 Henry VI. 1446; and burned in the face with an F, by 37 Henry VIII. 1545.—Stow.

Acelanda, a field said to have been the one bought with the thirty pieces of silver given to Judas Iscariot for betraying Christ, is still shown to travellers. Matt. xxvii. 8; Acts i. 19.—This name was given to an estate purchased by judge Jeffreys after the "bloody assizes" in 1685.

Accephali (Greek α, no; κεφαλή, head), a term applied to certain sects who resisted their bishops and met privately, about 450; and since to levellers.

* "This admirable institution has supplied the nation with 2200 accomplished officers, of which any army might well be proud; has filled every arm of the service with talent, efficiency, and integrity; has materially aided in successfully conducting three great wars; has constructed and armed our fortifications, improved our harbors, lakes, and rivers, defined our boundaries, surveyed and lighted our coasts, and explored the length and breadth of our land; has given to our militia and volunteers large numbers of valuable officers, and to our colleges able presidents and professors; has furnished distinguished civil engineers, who have bound our territory together with a network of railways and canals; . . . and through the contributions and text-books of its graduates has greatly elevated the scientific standard of most of the educational institutions throughout our country, and even extended its influence abroad."—G. W. Cullom.

Acetylene, a luminous hydrocarbon gas resembling coal gas, discovered by Berthelot, and made known in 1862.

Achaia (N. Peloponnesus), Greece, said to have been settled by Achæus, the son of Xuthus, about 1330 B.C. (?). The kingdom was united with Sicyon or subject to the Ætolians until about 284 B.C. The Achæi, descendants of Achæus, originally inhabited the neighborhood of Argos; but when the Heraclidæ drove them thence they retired among the Ionians, expelled the natives, and seized their thirteen cities, viz. Pellene, Ægira, Ægium, Bura, Tritæa, Leontium, Rhypes, Ceryneæ, Olenos, Helice, Patræ, Dyme, and Pharæ, forming the ACHÆAN LEAGUE.

Acheen, capital of a kingdom N.W. of Sumatra, was visited by the Portuguese about 1509. Factories were set up here by the Dutch, 1596; by the English, 1602; by the French, 1621. For the war with the Dutch, see Sumatra.

Achonry, Sligo (N. Ireland), a bishopric founded by St. Finian, who erected the church of Achad, or Achonry, about 520, and conferred it on his disciple Nathy (Dathy, or David), the first bishop. The see, held with Kilala, since 1612, was united with Tuam in 1834.

Achromatic Telescopes, in which color is got rid of, were invented by John Dollond, and described in Phil. Trans. of the Royal Society, London, 1753-8.

Acids (now defined as salts of hydrogen) are generally soluble in water, redden organic blues, decompose carbonates, and destroy the properties of alkalies, forming alkaline salts. The number of acids was increased by the Arabs; Geber (8th century) knew nitric acid and sulphuric acid. Theories of the constitution of acids were put forth by Becher (1669), Lemery (1675), and Stahl (1723). After the discovery of oxygen by Priestley, 1 Aug. 1774, Lavoisier (1778) concluded that oxygen was a constituent of all acids; but about 1810 Davy, Gay-Lussac, and others proved the existence of acids free from oxygen. In 1816 Dulong proposed the binary or hydrogen theory of acids, and in 1837 Liebig applied the theories of Davy and Dulong to explain the constitution of several organic acids. Oxygen acids were termed anhydrides by Gerhardt (died 1856). Many acids have been discovered through the advance of organic chemistry.—Watts.

Acolytes, an inferior order of clergy in the Latin church, unknown to the Greek church for four hundred years after Christ.

Acoustics (from Greek ἀκούω, I hear), the science of sound, so named by Sauveur in the 17th century. The formation of sound in the air by the vibrations of the atmosphere, strings, etc., was explained by Pythagoras about 500 B.C., and by Aristotle, 330 B.C.; see Telephone, Microphone, Megaphone.

The speaking-trumpet said to have been used by Alexander the Great, 335 B.C.

Galileo's discoveries, about A.D. 1600.

His theorem of the harmonic curve demonstrated by Dr. Brook Taylor in 1714; further perfected by D'Alembert, Euler, Bernoulli, and La Grange, at various periods of the eighteenth century.

Hooke calculated the vibration of sounds by the striking of the teeth of brass wheels, 1681.

Sauveur determined the number of vibrations belonging to a given note, about 1700.

Velocity of sound said to be 1473 feet in a second by Gaspari; 1172 feet by Cassini, Römer, and others; 968 feet by Newton; 1090 feet, at the temperature of 32° Fahrenheit, by Tyndall. The velocity increases with the rise of temperature.

Chladni (who raised acoustics to an independent science) published his important discoveries on the figures produced in layers of sand by harmonic chords, etc., in 1787, and since.

Cagniard-Latour, invented the Sirène (which see), 1819.

Savart determined the range of the perception of the human ear to be from 7 to 24,000 vibrations a second, 1830.

Blot, Savart, Wheatstone, Lissajous, Helmholtz, Tyndall, and others, in the present century, have greatly increased our knowledge of acoustics.

Over-tones, harmonics, well investigated by Helmholtz; under-tones by Auerbach, 1878.

Tyndall's experiments off the South Foreland on fog signals and gun-cotton demonstrated that the transmission of sound is checked by the non-homogeneity of the air, independently of fog and rain, July, 1873.

The results of Tyndall's experiments showed that the parabolic muzzle gun with gun-cotton, and that of sir Richard Collinson's gun-cotton rocket, are very effective fog-signals. Fine-grain gunpowder with howitzers is the best sound-producer; pebble powder the worst, 1874-7.

Sound produced by electricity, light, and from radiant heat, see Telephone and Photophone, 1881.

Acre, a land measure, formerly of uncertain quantity, and differing in various parts of the country, was reduced to a standard by Edward I., about 1305. In 1824 the standard acre was ordered by statute to contain 4840 square yards.

Acre, Acca, anciently Ptolemais, in Syria, was taken by the Saracens in 638; by the crusaders under Baldwin I. in 1104; by Saladin in 1187; and again by Richard I. and other crusaders, 12 July, 1191, after a siege of 2 years, with a loss of 6 archbishops, 12 bishops, 40 earls, 500 barons, and 300,000 soldiers. It was then named St. Jean d'Acre. It was retaken by the Saracens in 1291, when 60,000 Christians perished, and the nuns, who had mangled their faces to preserve their chastity, were put to death. Acre was gallantly defended by Djeddar Pacha against Bonaparte, till relieved by sir Sidney Smith, who resisted twelve attempts by the French, between 16 March and 20 May, 1799, when Bonaparte retreated. Acre, as a Turkish pachalic, was seized 27 May, 1832, by Ibrahim Pacha, who had revolted. On 3 Nov. 1840, it was stormed by the allied fleet under sir Robert Stopford, and taken after a bombardment of a few hours, the Egyptians losing upwards of 2000 in killed and wounded, and 3000 prisoners, while the British had but 12 killed and 42 wounded; see Syria and Turkey.

Acropolis, the ancient citadel of Athens, built on a rock. Near it stood the temple of Minerva, the Parthenon, which see. Other cities had similar fortresses.

Acrostic, a poem in which the first or last letters of each line, read downwards, form a word, is said to have been invented by Porphyrius Optalianus in the fourth century. Double acrostics became very popular in 1867.

Acz, or Acz (Hungary). The Hungarians under Görgey were defeated here by the Austrians and Russians on 2 and 10 July, 1849.

Act of SETTLEMENT, etc., see Accession, Succession, Supremacy, and Uniformity Acts.

Acta Diurna, see Newspapers.

Acta Sanctorum ("acts of the saints"), a work begun by the Jesuits. The first volume appeared in 1643: the publication was interrupted in 1794, when 54 volumes, bringing the work down to 15 Oct., had been published. The work was resumed by the Jesuits in 1837, and 6 more volumes had been published in 1867. The writers have been named Bollandists, from John Bolland, who published the first two volumes.

Actinometer, an instrument to measure the heating power of the solar rays, invented by sir John F. Herschel, and described by him in 1825; see Sun.

Actium, a promontory of Acarnania, W. Greece, near which was fought, 2 Sept. 31 B.C., the battle between the fleet of Octavius Caesar and that of Marc Antony and Cleopatra, which decided the fate of Antony, 300 of his galleys going over to Caesar. This victory made Octavius master of the world, and the Roman empire is commonly dated 1 Jan. 30 B.C. (the Actian Era). The conqueror built Nicopolis (the city of victory), and instituted the Actian games.

Acton-Burnel, or Shrewsbury. At the parliament held here by Edward I., Oct. 1283, the "statute of merchants" against debtors was enacted.

Acton Murder, see Trials, 1880.

Actresses appear to have been unknown to the ancients, men or eunuchs performing the female parts. Charles II. is said to have first encouraged the public appearance of women on the stage in England in 1662, but Anne, queen of James I., had previously performed in a theatre at court. Theat. Biog. Mrs. Colman was the first English public actress; she performed the part of Jamie in Davenant's "Siege of Rhodes," in 1656.—Victor.

Acts, in dramatic poetry, first employed by the Romans. Five acts are mentioned by Horace ("Art of Poetry") as the rule (about 8 A.C.).

Acts of the Apostles, supposed to have been written by Luke in continuation of his Gospel. It terminates A.D. 63.

Acts of Parliament, or STATUTES, see Parliament. The following are among the most celebrated early statutes:

Provisions of Merton, 1236-4.

Statute of Marlborough, 1267.

" of Bigamy, 1275-6.

" of Gloucester the earliest statute of which any record exists, 6 Edw. I. 1278.

" of Mortmain, 1279.

Quo Warranto, Oct. 1290.

Statute of Merchants or Acton-Burnel, 1283.

Statutes of Wales, 1284.

" of Winchester, Oct. 1294.

" of Westminster, 1275, 1285, 1290.

Statute forbidding the levying of taxes without the consent of parliament, 1297.

" of Premunire, 1306.

Statutes first printed in the reign of Richard III., 1483.

" of the Realm from Magna Charta to George I., printed from the original records and MSS. in 12 vols. folio, under the direction of commissioners appointed in 1801, 1811-23.

The statutes passed during each session were formerly printed annually in 4to and 8vo, now in 8vo only. Abstracts are given in the Cabinet Library.

Between 1823 and 1829, 1126 acts were wholly repealed, and 443 repealed in part, chiefly arising out of the consolidation of the laws by Mr. (afterwards sir Robert) Peel. Of these acts, 1344 related to the kingdom at large, and 225 to Ireland solely, and in 1866 many obsolete statutes (enacted between 1265 and 1777) were repealed.

By the Statute Law Revision Act of 1861, 770 acts were wholly repealed, and a great many partially. By similar acts since passed a great number of enactments have been repealed, commencing with the Provisions of Merton, 20 Henry III. (1235-6), and ending 1844.

" Acts of parliament abbreviation bill," introduced by lord Brougham 12 Feb., passed 10 June, 1850.

1410 acts (passed between 1089 and 1770) partially or wholly repealed, 1867.

" Chronological Table and Index to the Statutes to the end of 1866," published 1870.

New Index to acts 1235-1874, published 1876.

Publication of the revised edition of the statutes (1325-1868), 15 volumes published, 1870-8.

Report of select committee on acts of parliament, published July, 1875.

The greatest number of acts passed in any one year since 1800 was 570, in 1846 (the railway year), 402 were local and personal, 61 private, and 117 public acts. In 1841 only 13 were passed (the lowest number), of which two were private. In three instances only, the annual number was under a hundred. The average number of the first ten years of the present century was 132 public acts. In the ten years ending 1850, the average number of acts, of public interest, was 112.

The number of public general acts passed in 1851 was 106; in 1852, 88; in 1853, 137; in 1854, 123; in 1855, 134; in 1856, 120; in 1857, 86; in 1858, 109; in 1859, 101; in 1860, 154; in 1861, 134; in 1862, 114; in 1863, 126; in 1864, 121; in 1865, 127; in 1866, 122; in 1867, 146; in 1868, 130; in 1869, 117; in 1870, 112; in 1871, 117; in 1872, 98; in 1873, 91; in 1874, 96; in 1875, 96; in 1876, 81; in 1877, 69; in 1878, 79; in 1879, 78; in 1880, 19 and 49 (new parliament).

Actuary, ACTUARIUS, the Roman accountant. The Institute of Actuaries, founded in 1848, publishes its proceedings in the Assurance Magazine.

Adam and Eve, ERA 'OK, in the English Bible, 4004 A.C.; see Creation.

Adamites, a sect said to have existed about 130, and to have been quite naked in their religious assemblies, asserting that if Adam had not sinned there would have been no marriages. Their chief was named Prodicus; they defied the elements, rejected prayer, and said it was not necessary to confess Christ. Eusebius. A sect with this name arose at Antwerp in the 12th century, under Taudemus or Tanchelin, whose followers, 3000 soldiers and others, committed many crimes. It became extinct soon after the death of its chief; but another of the same kind, named Turlupin, appeared shortly after in Savoy and Dauphiny. Picard, a Fleming, revived this sect in Bohemia, about 1415; it was suppressed by Ziska, 1420.

Adda, a river N. Italy, passed by Suwarrow after defeating the French, 27 April, 1799.

Addington Administration. Mr. Pitt, having engaged to procure Roman Catholic emancipation to promote the union with Ireland, and being unable to do so as a minister, resigned 3 Feb. 1801. A new ministry was formed by Mr. Addington, March-July, 1801; after various changes it terminated about 10 May, 1804.

Henry Addington, * first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer.

Lord Eldon, lord chancellor.

Duke of Portland, lord president.

Earl of Westmorland, lord privy seal.

Lord Pelham, home secretary.

Mr. R. B. Jenkinson (lord Hawkebury, 1803; and earl of Liverpool, 1805), foreign secretary.

Lord Hobart, colonial secretary.

Earl St. Vincent, first lord of admiralty.

Earl of Chatham, ordnance.

Charles Yorke, secretary-at-war.

Viscount Lewisham, lord Auckland, etc.

Addiscombe College, near Croydon, Surrey, purchased by the East India company in 1803, for education of candidates for scientific branches of the Indian army, was closed in 1861.

Addison's Disease, a dangerous affection of the renal capsules, described by its discoverer, Dr. Thomas Addison, in 1855.

Additional Curates, the society for their employment in populous places was founded in 1837 (High Church).

Added Parliament, see Parliament.

Addressers, see Abhorrrers.

Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, was founded in 1836. It contained 14,000 inhabitants in 1850, and 18,259 in 1855; about 30,000 in 1875. It was made a bishopric in 1847. University founded, 1876. It was visited by the duke of Edinburgh, 1 March, 1869.

* Born 1787, became viscount Sidmouth, Jan. 1803; held various offices afterwards, and died in 1844. His circular to the lords lieutenant, dated 27 March, 1817, directed them to adopt severe measures against the authors of blasphemous and seditious pamphlets, was greatly censured, and not carried into effect.

Adelphi (Greek for brothers), several streets on the south side of the Strand, London, erected about 1768 by the brothers John, Robert, James, and William Adam, after whom the streets are named. ADELPHI THEATRE, built 1806, rebuilt 1858; see under Theatres.

Aden, a free port on the S.W. corner of Arabia, where in Dec. 1836 a British ship was wrecked and plundered. The sultan promised compensation, and agreed to cede the place to the English. The sultan's son refusing to fulfil this agreement to captain Haynes, a naval and military force, under captain H. Smith, of the Volage, was despatched to Aden, which captured it, 19 Jan. 1839. It is now a garrison and coal depot for Indian steamers, etc.

Adiaphorists (from adiaphora, indifferent things), a term applied to Melancthon and others, who were willing to give up certain things to the Romanists as indifferent, about 1548.

Adige, a river in N. Italy, near which the Austrians defeated the French on 26, 30 March, and 5 April, 1799.

Adjutors, see Agilators.

Administrations OF ENGLAND AND OF GREAT BRITAIN. Until the Restoration, 1660, there was not any cabinet in the modern sense. The sovereign was aided by privy-councillors, varying in number, the men and offices being frequently changed. The separation of the cabinet from the privy council became greater during the reign of William III., and the control of the chief, now termed the premier, began in the reign of Anne. "The era of ministries may most properly be reckoned from the day of the meeting of the parliament after the general election of 1698."—Macaulay.^{*} For a fuller account of each administration since 1700, see separate articles headed with the name of the PREMIER, given below in italics.

HENRY VIII. —Archbishop Warham; bishops Fisher and Fox; earl of Surrey, etc.	A. D. 1509
Cardinal Thomas Wolsey, etc.	1514
Earl of Surrey; Tunstall, bishop of London, etc.	1523
Sir Thomas More; bishops Tunstall and Gardiner, and Cranmer (afterwards archbishop of Canterbury), and Archbishop Cranmer; lord Cromwell, afterwards earl of Essex; Thomas Boleyn, earl of Wiltshire, etc.	1529
Thomas, duke of Norfolk; Henry, earl of Surrey; Thomas, lord Audley; bishop Gardiner; sir Ralph Sadler, etc.	1532
Lord Wriothesley; Thomas, duke of Norfolk; lord Lisle; sir William Petre; sir William Paget, etc.	1540
EDWARD VI. —Lord Wriothesley, now earl of Southampton, lord chancellor (expelled); Edward, earl of Hertford, lord protector, created duke of Somerset; John, lord Russell; Henry, earl of Arundel; Thomas, lord Seymour; sir William Paget; sir William Petre, etc.	1544
John Dudley, late lord Lisle and earl of Warwick, created duke of Northumberland; John, earl of Bedford; bishop Goodrich; sir William Cecil, etc.	1547
MARY. —Stephen Gardiner, bishop of Winchester; Edmund Bonner, bishop of London; William, marquess of Winchester; s r Edward Hastings, etc.	1551

^{*} Till 1850 the cabinet council usually consisted of the following twelve members: First lord of the treasury; lord chancellor; lord president of the council; chancellor of the exchequer; lord privy seal; home, foreign, and colonial secretaries; first lord of the admiralty; president of the board of trade; president of the board of control; chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. In 1850 the number was fifteen, and included the secretary-at-war, the postmaster-general, and the chief secretary for Ireland. In the Palmerston-Russell cabinet (which see), the president of the poor-law board replaced the secretary for Ireland. In 1868 the Gladstone cabinet consisted of 15; that of Mr. Disraeli, in Feb. 1874, of 12. The average duration of a ministry has been set down at four, five, and six years; but instances have occurred of the duration of a ministry for much longer periods: sir Robert Walpole was minister from 1721 to 1742 (21 years); Mr. Pitt, 1783 to 1801 (18 years); and lord Liverpool, 1812 to 1827 (15 years). Several ministries have not lasted beyond a few months, as the Coalition Ministry in 1783, and the "Talents" Ministry in 1806. The "Short-lived" Administration lasted 10 to 12 Feb. 1746.

Lord Burleigh; s r Thomas Bromley; Robert Devereux, earl of Essex (a favorite); earl of Leicester; earl of Lincoln; sir Walter Mildmay; sir Francis Walsingham, etc.	1579
Lord Burleigh; Robert, earl of Essex; sir Christopher Hatton, etc.	1587
Thomas Sackville, lord Buckhurst, afterwards earl of Dorset; sir Thomas Egerton, afterwards lord Ellesmere and viscount Brackley; sir Robert Cecil, etc.	1590
JAMES I. —Thomas, earl of Dorset; Thomas, lord Ellesmere; Charles, earl of Nottingham; Thomas, earl of Suffolk; Edward, earl of Worcester; Robert Cecil, afterwards earl of Salisbury, etc.	1603
Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury; Thomas, lord Ellesmere; Henry, earl of Northampton; Charles, earl of Nottingham; Thomas, earl of Suffolk, etc.	1609
Henry, earl of Northampton; Thomas, lord Ellesmere; Edward, earl of Worcester; sir Ralph Winwood; Charles, earl of Nottingham; Robert, viscount Rochester, afterwards earl of Somerset, etc.	1612
Thomas, lord Ellesmere; Thomas, earl of Suffolk; Charles, earl of Nottingham; sir George Villiers (a favorite), afterwards viscount Villiers, and successively earl, marquess, and duke of Buckingham.	1615
Sir Henry Montagu, afterwards viscount Mandeville and earl of Manchester.	1620
Lionel, lord Cranfield, afterwards earl of Middlesex; Edward, earl of Worcester; John, earl of Bristol; John Williams, dean of Westminster; George Villiers, marquess of Buckingham; sir Edward Conway, etc.	1621
CHARLES I. —Richard, lord Weston, afterwards earl of Portland; sir Thomas Coventry, afterwards lord Coventry; Henry, earl of Manchester (succeeded by James, earl of Marlborough, who, in turn, gave place to Edward, lord, afterwards viscount, Conway); William Laud, bishop of London; sir Albert Morton, etc.	1628
William Laud, archbishop of Canterbury; Francis, lord Cottington; James, marquess of Hamilton; Edward, earl of Dorset; sir John Coke; sir Francis Windebank, etc.	1635
William Juxon, bishop of London; sir John Finch, afterwards lord Finch; Francis, lord Cottington; Wentworth, earl of Strafford; Algernon, earl of Northumberland; James, marquess of Hamilton; Laud, archbishop of Canterbury; sir Francis Windebank; sir Henry Vane, etc.	1640
[The king beheaded, 30 Jan. 1649.]
COMMONWEALTH. —Oliver Cromwell, protector, named a council, the number not to exceed 21 members, or be less than 13.	1653
Richard Cromwell, son of Oliver, succeeded on the death of his father. A council of officers ruled at Wallingford house.	1658
CHARLES II. —Sir Edward Hyde, afterwards earl of Clarendon; George Monk, created duke of Albemarle; Edward Montagu, created earl of Sandwich; lord Saye and Sele; earl of Manchester; lord Seymour; sir Robert Long, etc.	1660
George Monk, duke of Albemarle, made first commissioner of the treasury, etc.	1667
" Cabal " Ministry: Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, Lauderdale (see Cabal).	1670
Thomas, lord Clifford; Anthony, earl of Shaftesbury; Henry, earl of Arlington; Arthur, earl of Anglesey; sir Thomas Osborne, created viscount Latimer; Henry Coventry; sir George Carteret; Edward Seymour, etc.	1672
Thomas, viscount Latimer, afterwards earl of Danby, made lord high treasurer.	26 June, 1673
Arthur, earl of Essex (succeeded by Lawrence Hyde, afterwards earl of Rochester); Robert, earl of Sunderland, etc.	1679

Administrative Reform Association derived its origin from an opinion that the disasters which occurred to the army in the Crimea in 1854-5 were attributable to the inefficient and irresponsible management of the various departments of the state. The association was organized in London, 5 May, 1855. A meeting was held in Drury-lane theatre on 13 June, and Mr. Layard's motion on the subject in parliament was negatived 18 June following. The association was reorganized in 1856, Mr. Roebuck, M.P., becoming chairman, but soon became unimportant; see Civil Service.

Admiral. The title does not appear to have been adopted in England until about 1300, but was previously in use in France.—Sir Harris Nicolas. Alfred, Athelstan, Edgar, Harold, and other kings were commanders of their own fleets. The first French admiral is said to have been appointed 1284. The rank of admiral of the English seas was first given to William de Leybourne by Edward I. in 1297.—Spelman; Rymer. The first Lord High Admiral in England was created by Richard II. in 1385; there had been previously high admirals of districts—the north, west, and south. The duties have generally been executed by lords commissioners; see Admiralty. A similar dignity existed in Scotland from the reign of Robert III. In 1673, Charles II. bestowed it upon his natural son Charles Lennox, afterwards duke of Richmond, then an infant, who resigned the office to the crown in 1703: after the union it was discontinued.—The dignity of lord high admiral of Ireland (of brief existence) was conferred upon James Butler by Henry VIII. in May, 1534. The Admiral of the Fleet is the highest rank in the Royal navy, corresponding to that of field-marshal in the army. We have now 5 admirals of the fleet, 16 admirals, 19 vice-admirals, 31 rear-admirals, and 174 captains (April, 1881). The rank of admiral in the United States navy was created July 25, 1866, for the purpose of honoring David G. Farragut and suitably rewarding him for his eminent services.

Admiralty, COURT OF, a court for the trial of causes relating to maritime affairs, said to have been erected by Edward III. in 1357. It was enacted in the reign of Henry VIII. that criminal causes should be tried by witnesses and a jury, some of the judges at Westminster (or, as now, at the Old Bailey) assisting. The judgship of the admiralty was constituted in 1514, and was filled by two or more functionaries until the Revolution, when it was restricted to one.—Beulson. The judge has usually been an eminent doctor of the civil law. In 1844 the criminal jurisdiction of this court was removed, and by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 (1857), the judge of the Probate court was to be also judge of the Admiralty court. The judge of the Admiralty court, Dr. Stephen Lushington (appointed in 1838), resigned 1 July, 1867, and was succeeded by Sir Robert Phillimore. The jurisdiction of this court was extended in 1861; see Supreme Court. In the United States admiralty jurisdiction is exercised by the circuit and district courts.

Admiralty, Whitehall. "At the south end of Duke street, Westminster, was seated a large house made use of for the admiralty office, until the business was removed to Greenwich, and thence to Wallingford house, against Whitehall." It was rebuilt by Ripley about 1726, the screen was erected, to conceal the ugliness of the building, by the brothers Adam, in 1776.—Lord Nelson lay in state in one of the apartments on 8 Jan. 1806, and on the next day was buried at St. Paul's.

Admiralty and War-office Act, to facilitate improvements in the organization of these offices, by the retirement of clerks from certain of the civil departments by granting gratuities, was passed 10 Aug. 1878.

Admiralty Office dates from 1512, when Henry VIII. appointed commissioners to inspect his ships of war. During the Commonwealth the admiralty affairs were managed by a committee of the parliament; and at the restoration in 1660, James, duke of York, became lord high admiral. In 1662 the admiralty was first put into commission, the great officers of state being the commissioners; see succeeding changes below. In 1688-9 the admiralty was put into commission, and the board appears to have assembled at admiral Herbert's lodgings, in Channel row, Westminster, he being at that time first lord. In 1830, 1832, and 1836 various changes were made in the civil departments, several offices being abolished or consolidated with others. In March, 1861, a royal commission recommended the abolition of the board of admiralty and the appointment of a minister of the navy department. The board was reconstituted 14 Jan. 1869, and 4 May, 1872.

"Admonition to the PARLIAMENT," condemning all religious ceremonies but those commanded by the New Testament, was published by certain Puritans in 1571. Its presumed authors, Field and Wilcox, were imprisoned. A second Admonition, by Thomas Cartwright, was answered by archbishop Whitgift.

Adorno and Fregoso, two families, of which the doges were frequently members, disturbed Genoa from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century; the former favoring the emperor, the latter the French king. Their power was annihilated by Andrea Doria about 1528.

Adrian's (or Hadrian's) Wall (to prevent the irruptions of the Scots and Picts into the northern counties of England, then under the Roman government) extended from the Tyne to Solway frith, and was eighty miles long, twelve feet high, and eight feet in thickness, with watch-towers; built 121. It was repaired and strengthened by Severus, 207-210.

Adrianople, in Turkey, so named after its restorer, the emperor Adrian, or Hadrian (who died 10 July, 138). Near here Constantine defeated Licinius and gained the empire, 8 July, 323; also, near here the emperor Valens was defeated and slain by the Goths, 9 Aug. 378. Adrianople was taken by the Turks, under Amurath, in 1361, and was their capital till the capture of Constantinople in 1453. It was taken by the Russians on 20 Aug. 1829, and restored 14 Sept. same year; occupied by the Russians, without resistance, 20 Jan. 1878; see Turkey.

Adriatic. The ceremony of the doge of Venice wedding the Adriatic sea (instituted about 1173) took place annually on Ascension-day. The doge dropped a ring into the sea from his Bucentaur, or state barge, being attended by his nobility and foreign ambassadors. The ceremony was first omitted in 1797.

Adullam, a cave to which David fled from the persecution of Saul about 1062 B.C. (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2).

Mr. Horman, Mr. R. Lowe, earl Grosvenor, lord Elcho, and other liberals who opposed the Franchise bill in 1866 were termed "Adullamites." During a debate on this bill on 13 March, 1866, Mr. Bright said of Mr. Horman that he "had retired into what may be called his political cave of Adullam, to which he invited every one who was in debt, and every one who was discontented," etc. On 19 April, lord Elcho said, "No improper motive has driven us into this cave, where we are a most happy family, daily—I may say, hourly—increasing in number and strength where we shall remain until we go forth to deliver Israel from oppression." Although their opposition led to the defeat and resignation of the Russell ministry, they declined to take office under lord Derby in July, 1866. They did not vote together uniformly in 1867, and (lord Elcho and Mr. Wyld excepted) voted with Mr. Gladstone for the disestablishment of the Irish church, 1 May, 1868.

Adulteration. That of food was prohibited in England in 1267, and punishments for it enacted, 1561, 1604, 1836, 1851, etc. Much attention was drawn to it in 1822, through Mr. Accum's book, called "Death in the Pot," and in 1835 through Dr. Hassall's book, "Food and its Adulterations." By an act for preventing the adulteration of food, passed in 1860, parochial chemical analysts may be appointed. An act to prevent adulteration of seeds passed 16 Aug. 1869, amended 1878. Another to prevent adulteration of food and drugs passed 10 Aug. 1872. Penalties for adulterating liquors were imposed by the new licensing act passed same time. The report of a commission, issued in July, 1874, declared that the public "were cheated rather than poisoned." All the anti-adulteration acts were repealed by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, passed 11 Aug. 1875; which was amended in 1879.

Adultery was punished with death by the law of Moses (1490 B.C.; Lev. xx. 10), and by Lycurgus (884 B.C.). The early Saxons burned the adulteress and erected a gibbet over her ashes, whereon they hanged the adulterer. The ears and nose were cut off under Canute, 1031. Adultery was ordained to be punished capitally by the parliament, May 14, 1650; but there is no record of this law taking effect; and it was repealed at the restoration. In New England the punishment for adultery was made capital to both parties, and several suffered for it, 1662.—Hardie. Till 1857 the legal redress against the male offender was by civil action for a money compensation, the female being liable to divorce. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (1857), the "action for criminal conversation" was abolished, and the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes established with power to grant divorces for adultery and ill-usage; see Divorce. An act was passed in 1869 permitting parties to suits for adultery to give evidence. In the United States adultery is variously punished under differing state laws, usually by fine or imprisonment or both. It is also good ground for absolute divorce in all the states.

Advent (adventus, arrival). The season includes four Sundays, previous to Christmas, the first the nearest Sunday to St. Andrew's day (Nov. 30), before or after. Homilies respecting Advent are mentioned prior to 378. Advent Sunday, 1880, 28 Nov.; 1881, 27 Nov.; 1882, 3 Dec.; 1883, 2 Dec.; 1884, 30 Nov.; 1885, 29 Nov.

Adventists. An American sect who look for the early second coming of Christ. A fanatical member of the sect in Pocasset, Mass., professing to imitate Abraham, sacrificed his child, the mother looking on, May, 1879.

Adventure Bay, S.E. end of Van Diemen's Land, discovered in 1773 by capt. Furneaux in his first voyage to the Pacific, and named from his ship Adventure. It was visited by capt. Cook 1777; by capt. Bligh in 1788 and 1792.

Adventurers, see Merchants.

Advertisements IN NEWSPAPERS, as now published, were not general in England till the beginning of the eighteenth century. A penalty of 50*l.* was inflicted on persons advertising a reward with "No questions to be asked" for the return of things stolen, and on the printer, 1754. The advertisement duty (first enacted 1712), formerly charged according to the number of lines, was afterwards fixed, in England, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, and in Ireland at 2*s.* 6*d.* each advertisement. The duty (further reduced, in England to 1*s.* 6*d.* and in Ireland to 1*s.* each, in 1833) was abolished in 1853.

Early advertisements are found in Perfect Occurrences of every Day, 26 March to 2 April, 1647, and Mercurius Elencicus 4 Oct. 1648
H. Sampson's "History of Advertising," published, Nov. 1874
The whole libretto of Macfarren's opera "Robin Hood" inserted as an advertisement in the Times (4*½* columns) 16 Oct. 1860
A debate in the Portuguese parliament, translated, inserted as advertisement in the Daily News (8 columns) 3 May, 1877
ADVERTISING VANS, a great nuisance, prohibited 1853

The American system of advertising agencies was originated by Orlando Bourne in 1828. The system was brought to perfection in 1860.

Advocate, THE KING'S (always a doctor of the civil law), was empowered to prosecute at his own instance certain crimes about 1597. The LORD ADVOCATE in Scotland is the same as the attorney-general in England with judicial powers.—It was decided in the parliament of Paris in 1685 that the king's advocate of France might at the same time be a judge; and in Scotland, sir William Oliphant (1612) and sir John Nesbit (1666) were lord advocates and lords of session at the same time.—Beaton. The Advocates' library in Edinburgh was established by sir G. Mackenzie about 1682; see Judge Advocate.

Ædiles. Roman city officers of three degrees, said to owe their name to having had charge of the ardes, or temple, of Ceres. 1. Two plebeian ædiles were appointed with the tribunes to assist them in looking after buildings, weights, and measures, the supply of provisions and water, etc., 494 B.C. 2. The ædiles curules, at first patricians, were appointed 365 B.C. 3. Julius Cæsar appointed ædiles cereales for watching over the supply of corn. The ædiles became a kind of police under the emperors.

Ædui, or Hedui, a Celtic people, N.E. France, who were delivered from subjection to the Sequani by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 58; but afterwards, opposing him, were subjugated by him, 52. Their insurrection, headed by Julius Sacrovir, A.D. 21, was quelled by C. Silius.

Ægates Isles, W. of Sicily: near these, during the first Punic war, the Roman consul C. Lutatius Catulus gained a decisive victory over the Carthaginian fleet under Hanno, 10 March, 241 B.C. Peace ensued, the Romans obtaining Sicily and a tribute of 3200 talents.

Ægina, a Greek island, a rival of Athens, was humbled by Themistocles, 485 B.C.; and taken and its works destroyed, 455. Its inhabitants expelled, 431, were restored by the Spartans, 404; they renewed war with Athens, 388, and made peace, 387.

Ægospotami (the Goat-rivers), in the Chersonesus, where Lysander, the Lacedæmonian, defeated the Athenian fleet, 405 B.C., and ended the Peloponnesian war.

A. E. I. O. U. (for "Austria est imperare orbi universi," "Austria is to rule all the world") was the motto of the weak and unfortunate emperor Frederick III., 1440-93.

Ælfric Society, founded 1842; closed 1856; published "Homilies of Ælfric, Archbishop of Canterbury," and other Anglo-Saxon works.

Ælia Capitolina, built on the ruins of Jerusalem by the emperor Adrian, 130.

Æmia, the name given to the provinces of Parma, Modena, and the Romagna, united to Sardinia in 1860, and now part of the kingdom of Italy.

Æneid, the great Latin epic poem relating the adventures of Æneas, written about 24 B.C. by Virgil, who died 22 Sept. 19 B.C., before he had finally corrected the poem. It was first printed in 1469 at Rome.

Ænigma. Samson's riddle (about 1141 B.C.; Judg. xiv. 12) is the earliest on record. Gale attributes ænigmatical speeches to the Egyptians. The ancient oracles frequently gave responses admitting of perfectly contrary interpretations. In Nero's time, the Romans had recourse to this method of concealing truth. The following epitaph on Fair Rosamond (mistress of our Henry II. about 1173) is a mediæval specimen: "Hic jacet in tombâ Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda; Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet."

Æolia, in Asia Minor, was colonized by a principal branch of the Hellenic race about 1124 B.C. The Æolians built several large cities both on the mainland and the neighboring islands; Mitylene, in Lesbos, was considered the capital.

Æolian Harp. Its invention is ascribed to Kircher, 1650, who wrote on it, but it was known before.

Æolina, a free-reed wind-instrument, invented by Wheatstone in 1829.

Æolopile, a hollow ball with an orifice in which a tube might be screwed, was used in the seventeenth century as a boiler for experimental steam-engines; a similar apparatus is described by Vitruvius, first century, A.D.

Æqui, an ancient Italian race, were subdued by the Romans, and their lands annexed, after a severe struggle, 471-302 B.C.

Æras, see Eras.

Aerated Waters. Apparatus for combining gases with water were patented by Thomson in 1807, F. C. Bakewell in 1832 and 1847, Tylor in 1840, and by others.—ÆRATED BREAD is made by processes patented by Dr. Daughish, 1856-7.

Aerians, followers of Aerius, a presbyter in the fourth century, who held that there was no distinction between a bishop and a presbyter; that there was no Pasch to be observed by Christians; that the Lent and other fasts should not be observed; and that prayers should not be offered for the dead.—Epiphanius.

Aerolites, see Meteors.

Aeronautics AND Aerostatics, see Balloons and Flying. The Aeronautical Society of Great Britain was established by the duke of Argyll and others, 12 Jan. 1866.

Aerophore, an apparatus invented by M. Denayrouze to enable persons to enter a noxious inflammable atmosphere. It comprises an air-pump, lamp, and flexible tubing. It was tried at Chatham, 12-14 Jan. 1875, and reported successful. A gold medal was awarded to the inventor at the Vienna Exhibition, 1873.

Aero-steam Engine, see under Air.

Æsculapius, god of medicine: his worship introduced at Rome, about 291 B.C.

Æsop's Fables, see Fables.

Æsthetics (from the Greek αἰσθητικὴ, perception), the science of the beautiful (especially in art); a term invented by Baumgarten, a German philosopher, whose work "Æsthetica" was published in 1750.

Affinity. Marriage within certain degrees of kindred was prohibited in almost every age and country, but has yet taken place to a considerable extent. The Jewish law is given in Lev. xviii. (1490 A.C.). In the English Prayer-book the table restricting marriage within certain degrees was set forth by authority, 1563. Prohibited marriages were adjudged to be incestuous and unlawful by the 99th canon, in 1603. All marriages within the forbidden degrees are declared to be absolutely void by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 54, 1835; see Marriage (of Wife's Sister). The prohibited degrees were set forth in 25 Hen. VIII. c. 22, 1533-4.

SEVENTH AGE, to the present time.

* Prince was born in 1811; educated for the medical profession, and licensed to practise, 1832; gave it up for the church and entered St. David's college, Lampeter, and there commenced ultra-revivalist movements in 1836; and finally claimed to be an incarnation of the Deity, with corresponding authority over his followers. On 22 May, 1860, Thomas Robinson sought to recover the possession of his child from the care of its mother (from whom he had separated), the application was refused by the vice-chancellor, to "have the child from the pollution of the parent's teaching."—On 21 Aug. 1860, Miss Louisa Jane Nottidge died, having transferred her property to Mr. H. J. Prince. Her brother, Mr. Nottidge, by an action, recovered from Prince £720, as having been fraudulently obtained. Extraordinary disclosures were made during the trial, 26 July, 1860. In the autumn of 1860, the Rev. Mr. Price, after several vain attempts, succeeded in rescuing his wife from the Agapemones. They had both been early supporters of it.

Age. In Greece and Rome twenty-five was full age for both sexes, but a greater age was requisite for the holding certain offices: e. g. thirty for tribunes, forty-three for consuls. In England the minority of a male terminates at twenty-one, and of a female in some cases, as that of a queen, at eighteen. In 1647, the majority of Edward VI. was, by the will of his father, fixed at eighteen years; previously to completing which age, his father, Henry VIII., had assumed the reins of government, in 1509.—A male of twelve may take the oath of allegiance, at fourteen he may consent to a marriage or choose a guardian, at seventeen he may be an executor, and at twenty-one he is of age; but according to the statute of wills, 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26, 1837, no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid. A female at twelve may consent to a marriage, at fourteen she may choose a guardian, and at twenty-one she is of age. In the United States the legal age of majority is twenty-one years, but in some of the states eighteen is the legal age for women. Men of eighteen and women of sixteen may devise property by will, and at fourteen and twelve, respectively, they may contract marriage. The president and vice-president of the United States must be thirty-five years of age, senators thirty, and members of the House of Representatives twenty-five.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society, founded 1807; asylums, 1826 and 1871.

Agincourt, or AZINCOURT (N. France), a village where Henry V. of England, with about 9000 men, defeated about 60,000 French on St. Crispin's day, 25 Oct. 1415. Of the French, there were, according to some accounts, 10,000 killed, including the dukes of Alençon, Brabant, and Bar, the archbishop of Sens, one marshal, thirteen earls, ninety-two barons, and 1500 knights; and 14,000 prisoners, among whom were the dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, and 7000 barons, knights, and gentlemen. The English lost the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk, and about 20 others. St. Rémy asserts, with more probability, that the English lost 1600 men. Henry V. soon after obtained the kingdom of France.

Agincourt iron-clad, see Nary, 1871.

Agitators (or Adjutors), officers appointed by the Parliamentary army in 1647 to take care of its interests: each troop or company had two. The general, Cromwell, was eventually obliged to repress their seditious power. At a review he seized the ringleaders of a mutiny, shot one instantly, in the presence of his companions and the forces on the ground, and thus restored discipline.—Hume. Daniel O'Connell, the agitator of Ireland, was born in 1775. He began to agitate at the elections in 1826; was elected for Clare, 5 July, 1828; the election being declared void, he was re-elected 30 July, 1829. After the passing of the Catholic Emancipation bill, he agitated in vain for the repeal of the union, 1834 to 1843. He died 15 May, 1847.—Richard Cobden and John Bright were the chief Anti-corn-law agitators, 1841-5. Mr. Bright became a Reform agitator in 1866.

Agnadello (N.E. Italy). Here Louis XII. of France gained a great victory over the Venetians, some of whose troops were accused of cowardice and treachery; 14 May, 1509. The conflict is also termed the battle of the Rivolta.

Agnostæ (from ἀγνοια, Greek, ignorance). I. A sect founded by Theophrastus of Cappadocia about 370; said to have doubted the omniscience of God. II. The followers of Themistius of Alexandria, about 580, who held peculiar views as to the body of Christ, and doubted his divinity.

Agnostics, name given to philosophers who assert that we have no knowledge but what we acquire by means of our senses, about 1876. Mr. Herbert Spencer and Mr. John Fiske are eminent agnostics.

Agonistici (from ἀγών, Greek, a conflict), also termed circutores, a branch of the Donatists (which see) in the fourth century. They preached with great boldness, and incurred severe persecution.

Agra (N.W. India), founded by Akbar in 1566, was the capital of the Great Mogul; see Mausoleums. In 1658 Aurungzebe removed to Delhi.—The fortress of Agra, "the key of Hindostan," in the war with the Mahrattas surrendered to the British forces, under gen. Lake, 17 Oct. 1803, after one day's siege: 162 pieces of ordnance and 240,000*l.* were captured.—In June, 1857, the city was abandoned to the mutineers by the Europeans, who took refuge in the fort, from which they were rescued by major Montgomery and colonel Greathed. Visit of the prince of Wales, 25 Jan. 1876.—Allahabad was made capital of the N.W. provinces of India, instead of Agra, in 1861.

Agram (formerly Zagrab), a city of Croatia, Hungary, residence of the ban; suffered much by earthquakes, 9-12 Nov. 1880.

Agrarian Law (Agraria lex) decreed an equal division among the Roman people of all the lands acquired by conquest, limiting the acres which each person should enjoy. It was first proposed by the consul Spurius Cassius, 486 B.C., and occasioned his judicial murder when he went out of office in 485.—An agrarian law was passed by the tribune Licinius Stolo, 376; and for proposing further amendments Tiberius Gracchus in 133, and his brother Cornelius in 121, were murdered. Livius Drusus, a tribune, was murdered for the same cause, 91. Julius Cæsar propitiated the plebeians by passing an agrarian law in 59.—In modern times the term has been misinterpreted to signify a division of the lands of the rich among the poor, frequently proposed by demagogues, such as Gracchus Babeuf, editor of the Tribun du Peuple, in 1794. In 1796 he conspired against the Directory with the view of obtaining a division of property, was condemned, and killed himself, 27 May, 1797.

Agricola's Wall, see Roman Walls.

Agricultural Children Act prohibits employment of children under eight years of age, and provides for the education of older children, 5 Aug. 1873.

Agricultural Holdings Act, passed 13 Aug. 1875, relates to compensations of landlords and tenants, for improvements, etc.

Agriculture. "Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground," Gen. iv. 2. The Athenians asserted that the art of sowing corn began with them; and the Cretans, Sicilians, and Egyptians made the same claim.

Cato the Censor (died 149 B.C.) and Varro (died 28 B.C.) were eminent Roman writers on agriculture. Virgil's Georgics, 30 B.C. Agriculture in England improved by the Romans after A.D. 44.

Fitzherbert's "Book of Husbandry," printed 1524.

Tusser's "Five Hundred Points of Husbandry," 1562.

Blythe's "Improver," 1649.

Hartlib's "Legacy," 1650.

Jethro Tull's "Horse hoeing Husbandry," 1701.

About the end of the eighteenth century, fallowing was gradually superseded by turnips and green crops.

In Aug. 1855, a committee presented a report on the best mode of obtaining accurate agricultural statistics. There were, in 1831, 1,056,982 agricultural laborers in Great Britain, and in 1831, 1,131,715.

Acres of crops, and number of cattle, sheep, and pigs in Great Britain and Ireland, beginning with 1866, published in the annual "Statistical Abstract," since 1869.

It was reckoned by the Agricultural Committee that the cultivation of waste lands would yield above 20,000,000*l.* a year. It was calculated in 1854 that there were in England 32,160 acres in cultivation, of the annual value of 37,412,000*l.* Since that time, much land has been brought into cultivation; see Wheat.

"History of Agriculture and Prices in England (1259-1400)," by prof. James T. Rogers, published June, 1866.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.—The earliest mentioned in the British Isles was the Society of Improvers of Agriculture in Scotland, instituted in 1723. A Dublin Agricultural Society (1749) gave a stimulus to agriculture in Ireland; its origin is attributed to Mr. Prior of Rathdowney, Queen's County, in 1731. The Bath and West of England Society established 1777; and the Highland Society of Scotland, 1793. County Agricultural Societies are now numerous. London Board of Agriculture established by act of parliament, 1793.

Francis, duke of Bedford, a great promoter of agriculture, died 2 March, 1802.

American Institute of Agriculture, New York, incorporated 1829.

Royal Agricultural Society of England established in 1838 by noblemen and gentlemen, the chief landed proprietors in the kingdom, and incorporated by royal charter, 26 March, 1840. It holds two meetings annually—one in London, the other in the country. It awards prizes, and publishes a valuable journal.

International Agricultural Exhibition, promoted by the Society, and held at Kilburn, London, N.W. Occupied 106 acres. It was opened by the prince of Wales 30 June, visited by the queen in July, and closed finally 10 July, 1879.

Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland, instituted 1841.

"Chambers of Agriculture" were established in France in 1851. In Great Britain, 1868, they had increased from 36 to 70. A journal commenced early in 1868.

Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester, organized 1842; chartered, 1845.

Suffolk Agricultural College at Bury St. Edmunds opened 1874. Other colleges opened.

British Dairy Farmers' Association.—Inaugurated; first show opened at Agricultural Hall, London, 24-28 Oct. 1876.

Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution.—It relieves farmers and their widows and orphans; founded chiefly by Mr. Mechi, 1860.

The Associated Agriculturists of Great Britain, a limited company, proposed April, 1881.

AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY.—Sir Humphry Davy delivered lectures on this subject (afterwards published), at the instance of the Board of Agriculture, in 1812; but it excited little attention till the publication of Liebig's work in 1840, which made a powerful impression. Bousisingault's "Economie Rurale," an equally important work, appeared in 1844. The immoderate expectations from this study having been somewhat disappointed, a partial reaction took place. Liebig's "Letters on Agriculture" appeared in 1859.

AGRICULTURAL GANGS.—In the spring of 1867, most painful exposures were made of the prevalence of much cruelty and immorality in the gang system (in which boys and girls are employed) in several of the eastern and midland counties; and, in consequence, an act was passed 20 Aug. for regulating these gangs, licensing gang-masters, etc.

A Union of Agricultural Laborers, managed chiefly by Joseph Arch, formerly a laborer, afterwards a Methodist preacher, was inaugurated at Leamington, Warwickshire, 29 March, 1872. The movement spread, being countenanced by Auberger Herbert, M.P., and others. The Union met in London, Arch re-elected president, 16 17 May, 1877.

Lock-out of agricultural laborers belonging to the Union (lasted 18 weeks, costing the Union much money), began at Alderton, Suffolk, March, 1872.

Dispute between Lincolnshire farmers and laborers settled, 18-20 May; Suffolk and Norfolk farmers refuse compromise about 25 May; the Union ceased to support the locked-out laborers, leaving them to emigration, or to seek employment. 27 July, 1872.

The agitation subsided; the laborers were employed autumn, 1876; agricultural return for Great Britain, 1873; reported steady increase in prosperity, 1875.

A partial strike and lock-out of laborers in Kent and Sussex, Oct.-Dec. 1878.

The delegates of the National Agricultural Laborers' Union met 26 Oct. 1875.

Very great agricultural depression through bad seasons, and foreign importations; many landlords remit large part of rents, 1877-9.

Royal Commission of Inquiry appointed 4 July, 1879.

The following table, drawn up by Mr. William Couling, C.E., in 1827, is extracted from the Third Report of the Emigration Committee:

Country.	Cultivated.	Waste Capable of Improvement.	Uncultivated.	Total.
England...	25,632,000	3,454,000	3,266,400	32,352,400

AGRICULTURE IN THE UNITED STATES.—Cattle first carried to America by Columbus in his second voyage, 1493.

Swine brought into the present territory of the United States by De Soto, 1538.

First slave labor within present territory of the United States at the founding of St. Augustine, 1565.

Tobacco carried to England from America by Raleigh, 1586.

First cattle and swine brought to Massachusetts, 1624.

Hops first brought to present territory of the United States, 1628.

First horses in Massachusetts, 1629-30.

First apples picked in present territory of the United States in Boston, 1639.

Sugar-cane brought into Louisiana, 1761.

First improved cattle brought into the United States, 1763.

South Carolina and Philadelphia Agricultural Societies founded, 1784.

[Most of the other states now have them.]

First cotton (8 bales) sent from the United States to England, and seized by custom house on the ground that the United States cannot have produced so much, 1784.

First recorded United States thresher patent, 1791.

Thence to 1810 were granted in the United States 30 patents for reapers; from 1810 to 1835, 240 more; and many have been granted since.

Whitney's cotton gin invented, 1793.

First cast-iron plough patent issued to Newbold of New Jersey, 1797.

Jefferson investigates scientifically the Mould Ward question, 1798.

First Agricultural Exhibition in the United States at Georgetown, D.C., May 10, 1810.

First useful mowing-machine (Manning's) patented in the United States, 1831.

First useful reaper patents in the United States, Schnebly's and Hume's, both of Maryland, granted, 1833.

Goano begins to come into use about 1840.

Yale College Agricultural Department established, 1852.

World's Fair, New York, promotes use of agricultural machinery, 1853.

Great trial of threshing, reaping, and mowing machines in France—the American machines gaining a complete victory, 1855.

The United States Government Agricultural Department established by an act of Congress, May 15, 1862.

First great cotton fair held at Atlanta, Ga., 1881.

The following table, furnished by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, shows the acreage, quantity, and money value of the principal crops of the United States for the year 1890.

In addition to these are the grass crop, market gardening, fruit products, sugar-cane, rice, and several minor crops. The dairy industry is a manufacture founded on and mainly included in grass and grain production. Meat products are also secondary, giving increased value to the primary products from which they are made. An exact estimate of all farm production has never been made and is difficult to calculate with close precision, but it is probable that the figures given above are about two thirds of the real value of the primary products of American agriculture.

Agricultural Hall, Islington, N. London, chiefly for the meetings of the Smithfield Club. The foundation-stone was laid by the president, Lord Berners, 5 Nov. 1861. The hall has been much used for industrial exhibitions, public meetings, equestrian and pedestrian performances, concerts, etc.

It was opened for an exhibit on dogs, 24 June, 1863; horses and donkeys exhibited, July, 1864, and annually since.

First Smithfield annual cattle show here, 3 Dec. 1862.

A great reform demonstration was made here, 30 July, 1866.

Grand ball to the Belgian visitors, volunteers, and garde civique, prince of Wales present, 18 July, 1867.

Excellent horse shows held here, May, 1868 et seq.

Theatrical bull fights here stopped, on account of cruelty, 20 March, 1870.

Workmen's International Exhibition opened by the prince of Wales, 16 July, 1870.

National Exhibition of machinery, appliances, manufactures, and produce, opened 29 Sept. 1879.

Exhibition by the building trades, opened 12 April, 1880.

International food exhibition, opened 13 Oct. 1880.

Milling exhibition (under direction of National Association of British and Irish Millers), 10-15 May, 1881.

Agigentum (now Girgenti), a city of Sicily, built about 582 B.C. It was governed by tyrants from 566 to 470; among these were—Phalaris (see Brazen Bull); Alcamares; Theron, who, with his stepfather Gelon, defeated the Carthaginians at Himera, 480; and Thrasydæus, his son, expelled in 470, when a republic was established. It was taken by the Carthaginians in 405 B.C., and held, except during short intervals, till gained by the Romans in 262 B.C. From A.D. 825 till 1086 it was held by the Saracens.

Ahmednuggur (W. India), once capital of a state founded by Ahmed Shah, about 1493. After having fallen into the hands of the Moguls and the Mahrattas, it was taken from the latter by Arthur Wellesley, 12 Aug. 1803, and restored to the British dominions, June, 1817.

Aid, see Ayde.

Aid to the Sick and Wounded, NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR. On 4 Aug. 1870, soon after the breaking-out of the Franco-German war, a meeting was held in London, which established this society under the rules of the Geneva Convention (which see).

The queen, patron; the prince of Wales, president; col. Loyd Lindsay, chairman of committees, active supporters, duke of Manchester, earl of Shaftesbury, lords Overstone and Bury, s.r. Harry Verney, gen. sir John Burgoyne, surgeon-gen. Longmore, and capt. Douglas Galton. The operations were chiefly directed by capt. Henry Brackenbury at the seat of war, and by Mr John Furley and gen. sir Vincent Eyre.

A fruitless meeting to promote the incorporation of the society. It was then reported that 290,298 had been received, together with stores valued at 45,000*l*. 1 Aug. 1871 Col. Loyd Lindsay conveyed to Versailles and Paris from the society 40,000*l*, equally divided between the Germans and French (gratefully acknowledged) about 11 Oct. 1870.

The crown prince of Prussia wrote to col. Loyd Lindsay—“In this, as on other occasions of distress, the help of the English public has been poured out with a liberal and an impartial hand. The gifts which have been offered in a truly Christian spirit have excited a feeling of heart-felt gratitude among those on whose behalf I speak.”..... ..2 Nov. 1870

Air, or ATMOSPHERE. Anaximenes of Miletus (530 B.C.) declared air to be a self-existent deity, and the first cause of everything created. Posidonius (about 79 B.C.) calculated the height of the atmosphere to be 800 stadia. The pressure of air, about 15 lbs. to the square inch, was discovered by Galileo, 1564, and demonstrated by Torricelli (who invented the barometer) about A.D. 1643, and was found by Pascal, in 1647, to vary with the height. Halley, Newton, and others up to the present time have illustrated the agency and influences of this great power by various experiments, and numerous inventions have followed; among others, the AIR-GUN of Guter of Nuremberg about 1656; the AIR-PUMP, invented by Otto von Guericke of Magdeburg about 1650; improved by Robert Boyle in 1657, by Robert Hooke about 1659;* and the AIR-PIPE, invented by Mr. Sutton, a brewer of London, about 1756. The density and elasticity of air were determined by Boyle; and its relation to light and sound by Hooke, Newton, and Derham. The extension of our atmosphere above the surface of the earth has been long considered as about 45 miles.—Its composition,† about 77 parts of nitrogen, 21 of oxygen, and 2 of other matters (such as carbonic acid, watery vapor, a trace of ammonia, etc.) was ascertained by Priestley (who discovered oxygen gas in 1774), Scheele (1775), Lavoisier, and Cavendish; and its laws of refraction were investigated by Dr. Bradley, 1737. The researches of Dr. Schönbein, a German chemist of Basel, between 1840 and 1859, led to his description of two states of the oxygen in the air, which he calls ozone and autozone. Dr. Stenhouse's Air-filters (in which powdered charcoal is used) were first set up at the Mansion-house, London, in 1854. In 1858, Dr. R. Angus Smith made known a chemical method of ascertaining the amount of organic matter in the air, and published his "Air and Rain" in 1872; see Oxygen, Nitrogen, Ozone, Atmospheric Railway, Balloons, and Pneumatic Despatch.

The Aero-steam Engine, the invention of George Warsop, a mechanic of Nottingham, who, by employing compressed air united with steam, is said to have effected the saving of 47 per cent. of fuel. The plan was reported to the British Association at Exeter in Aug. 1869, and was said to act successfully in a tug steamer (for China) in the Thames, 26 March, 1870.

Col. Beaumont's air-engine for propelling railway-carriages, tried at Woolwich, reported successful (a little steam is used), 6 Oct. 1880.

*Victor Popp applies compressed air as a motive power to clocks, 1881.

An Air-telegraph, in which the waves of air in a tube are employed instead of electricity, invented by sig. Guattari, was exhibited in London in 1870. It obtained a gold medal in Naples.

Isaac Wilkinson patented a method of compressing air by a column of water in 1757, and William Mann patented stage-pumping by compressed air in 1829. The force of compressed air was employed in boring the Cenis tunnel (which see).

Air-Gas-light COMPANY: proposed to use hydro-carburetted air as a source of light; established 1872.

Air-tight Stove, designed to economize fuel, invented by Isaac Orr, 1836.

Air-whistle. A shrill whistle worked by an air-pump, and audible at three or four miles distance, used as a marine fog-signal; invented by C. Daboll, of New London, Conn. 1850.

* Sprengel's excellent air-pump, in which water or mercury is employed, was invented in 1863.

† Air, as well as its gaseous components, has been compressed into the liquid state by means of great pressure and intense cold, 1877–8, by Raoul Pictet of Geneva, and Calletet of Paris, Dec. 1877, Jan. 1878.

Aix-la-Chapelle (Aachen), a Roman city, now in Rhenish Prussia. Several ecclesiastical councils held here (799–1165). Here Charlemagne was born, 742, and died, 814; having built the minster (796–804), and conferred many privileges on the city, in which fifty-five emperors have since been crowned. The city was taken by the French in Dec., 1792; retaken by the Austrians, March, 1793; by the French, Sept. 1794; ceded to Prussia, 1814.

First Treaty of Peace signed here was between France and Spain, when France yielded Franche-Comté, but retained her conquests in the Netherlands, 2 May, 1668.

The second celebrated treaty between Great Britain, France, Holland, Germany, Spain, and Genoa. (By it the treaties of Westphalia in 1648, of Nimwegen in 1678 and 1679, of Ryswick in 1697, of Utrecht in 1713, of Baden in 1714, of the Triple Alliance in 1717, of the Quadruple Alliance in 1718, and of Vienna in 1734, were renewed and confirmed.) Signed on the part of England by John, earl of Sandwich, and sir Thomas Robinson, 7 Oct. 1748.

Congress of the sovereigns of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, assisted by ministers from England and France, met at Aix-la-Chapelle, and a convention signed, 9 Oct. 1818, which led to the withdrawal of the army of occupation from France.

Ajnadin, or Aznadin (Syria). Here the Mahometans defeated the army of the emperor Heraclius, 13 July, 633. They took Damascus in 634.

Akerman (Bessarabia). After being several times taken, it was ceded to Russia in 1812. Here the celebrated treaty between Russia and Turkey was concluded, 4 Sept. 1826, which secured for the former the navigation of the Black Sea, recognized the Danubian principalities, etc.

Akhalkikh (Armenia). Near here prince Paskievitch and the Russians defeated the Turks, 24 Aug., and gained the city, 28 Aug. 1828.

Alabama, a Southern state of the United States of America; originally a part of Georgia; made a state in 1819; commercial metropolis, Mobile. Passed an ordinance of secession, 11 Jan. 1861; was readmitted to representation in Congress, 1868. Pop. 1880, 1,262,794.

Alabama, a steam-vessel of 900 tons, with engines of 300 horse-power, constructed by Messrs. Laird at Birkenhead, for the Confederate service; launched 15 May, 1862. During the judicial inquiries after her character, she sailed from the Mersey, 28 July, the day before the British government telegraphed to detain her. Under the command of capt. Semmes, she did great damage to the American mercantile shipping, until her destruction by the federal iron-clad Kearsarge, capt. Winslow, off Cherbourg, 19 June, 1864. Several of her crew were saved by Mr. John Lancaster in his yacht. Admiral Semmes died Sept. 1877.

Aladja Dagh, near Kars, Armenia. Here the Turks, under Ahmed Mukhtar, after severe conflicts, were totally defeated by the Russians under the grand-duke Michael, and gens. Loris Melikoff, Lazareff, and Heimann, 14, 15 Oct. 1877.

The Turkish army was divided and broken up, the strong camp taken, with many prisoners, including 7 pashas and 38 guns. The Russian strategy was highly commended. This overwhelming disaster, which led to the investment of Kars, was attributed to Mukhtar's maintaining too extended lines, which were turned (20 miles with only 40,000 men; when 200,000 were required).

Alamo, a fort in Texas, near San Antonio. Here occurred the massacre of the Alamo, 6 March, 1836, on which day a Mexican force of 1500 or 2000 men, under Santa Anna, after having in vain besieged and bombarded its garrison of 140 Texans, under col. Travis, ever since the 23d of the preceding month, stormed the place and took it, after being twice repulsed. But six Texans were left alive after the assault, and these were murdered in cold blood in Santa Anna's presence, by his order, after surrender on promise of protection.

Albania, a province in European Turkey, formerly part of the ancient Epirus. The Albanians became independent during the decline of the Greek empire. • They were successfully attacked by the Turks in 1388. About 1443, under George Castriot (Scanderbeg), they baffled the efforts of Mahomet II. to subdue them till the siege of Scutari in 1478, when they submitted. Ali Pacha, of Janina, in 1812, defeated the Turkish pashas, and governed Albania ably, but cruelly and despotically, till Feb. 1822, when he and his two sons were slain, after surrendering under a solemn promise of safety. A revolt in Albania was suppressed in 1843.

Albans, St. (Hertfordshire), near the Roman Verulam, derived its name from Alban, the British protomartyr, said to have been beheaded during the persecution by Diocletian, 23 June, 286. A stately monastery to his memory was erected about 795, by Offa, king of Mercia, who granted it many privileges. Its superior sat as premier abbot in parliament till the dissolution in 1539. A meeting was held 22 June, 1871, to raise a fund for the restoration of the abbey, the earl of Verulam chairman. The results were favorable, and the work was confided to Mr. G. Gilbert Scott, who issued a report in June, 1872. Verulam was built on the site of the capital of Cassivelaunus, taken by Julius Caesar, 54 B.C. It was retaken, after much slaughter, by Boadicea or Boudicca, queen of the Iceni, A.D. 61.

First battle of St. Albans, when the Lancastrians were defeated, their leader, Edmund, duke of Somerset slain, and king Henry VI. taken prisoner by the duke of York and his partisans, 22 or 23 May, 1455.

Second battle, queen Margaret totally defeated the Yorkists under the earl of Warwick, and rescued the king, Shrove-Tuesday, 17 Feb. 1461.

St. Albans incorporated by Edward VI. 1553.

Disfranchised for bribery, 17 June, 1852.

Act passed to make arrangements for erecting a bishopric of St. Albans, 29 June, 1875. See constituted, 30 April; made a city, 28 Aug. 1877.

Albany, or ALBAINN, the ancient name of the Scottish Highlands. Robert Stewart, the brother of king Robert III., was created the first duke of Albany in 1398, and the title has ever since been connected with the crown of Scotland. The young pretender, prince Charles Edward, and his wife took the title of count and countess of Albany; see York.

DUCKS OF ALBANY.

1398. Robert; regent; 1406; died 3 Sept. 1420.

1420. Murdoch, son; regent; executed for treason by king James I., 1424.

1452. Alexander, brother of king James II.; acted treasonably; exiled; killed accidentally at Paris, 1485.

1514. John, son; regent; went abroad; died at Paris, 1526.

See York and Albany, dukes.

1881. Prince Leopold, fourth son of queen Victoria, was created duke of Albany 24 May, 1881.

Albany, the capital city of the state of New York; founded by the Dutch, 1614; incorporated as a city, 1686; made the capital, 1797; capital built, 1807; act authorizing the building of a new capitol passed, 1865; first appropriation for that purpose, 1867; corner-stone laid 24 June, 1871. Dudley Observatory incorporated, 1852; dedicated, 1856. Except Jamestown, Va., Albany is the oldest settlement in the thirteen original states. Henry Hudson visited the place in his ship the Half Moon, Sept. 1609. The town was originally named New Orange; name changed to Albany, 1664. First convention for the union of the colonies (B. Franklin, president) assembled at Albany, 1754.

Albert Memorials (see England, Queen). The Prince-consort died on 14 Dec. 1861, deeply lamented by the whole civilized world. His remains were transferred to the mausoleum of Frogmore, 18 Dec. 1862. The sarcophagus is composed of the largest known block of granite without flaw. A meeting to organize a method of receiving contributions for a great national memorial was held at the Mansion-house, 14 Jan. 1862; and a large sum was quickly subscribed. 36,000*l.* had been received on 1 March; 50,220*l.* on 11 June, 1862; and parliament voted 50,000*l.*, in addition to the 60,000*l.* received by voluntary contributions, 23 April, 1863.

The nature of the memorial was referred to the queen herself. In a letter to the lord mayor, dated 19 Feb. 1862, sir Charles Grey says, on behalf of her majesty, "It would be more in accordance with her own feelings, and she believes with those of the country in general, that the monument should be directly personal to its object. After giving the subject her maturest consideration, her majesty has come to the conclusion that nothing would be more appropriate, provided it is on a scale of sufficient grandeur, than an obelisk to be erected in Hyde park on the site of the Great Exhibition of 1851, or on some spot immediately contiguous to it. Nor would any proposal that could be made be more gratifying to the queen herself personally, for she can never forget that the prince himself had highly approved of the idea of a memorial of this character being raised on the same spot in remembrance of the Great Exhibition." In a second letter the queen expressed her intention of personally contributing towards erecting the memorial, that "it might be recorded in future ages as raised by the queen and people of a grateful country to the memory of its benefactor." Shortly after a committee was appointed to fulfil her majesty's desire. As a suitable block of granite could not be obtained, the proposal for an obelisk was given up.

The queen approved of the design of Mr. Gilbert G. Scott for an Eleanor Cross, with a spire 150 feet high, accompanied by statues, etc., 22 April, 1863; work begun 13 May, 1864.

The sculptors employed were McDowell, Foley, Theed, John Bell, and Armistead: material, Sicilian marble. (Jan. 1865.) The gilt statue by Foley uncovered 9 March, 1876. The memorial, complete, except the statue by Foley (delayed through illness), was given up to her majesty privately, 1 July, 1876.

Many other memorials of the prince have been set up throughout the empire.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL OF ARTS AND SCIENCES: The erection of a great building for congresses, concerts, etc., was proposed by the prince-consort at the close of the exhibition of 1861, and an estate at Kensington was purchased; a committee, with the prince of Wales at the head, to erect the building, was appointed 6 July, 1865; circulars soliciting subscriptions were issued April, 1866; and the first stone was laid by the queen, 20 May, 1867.

The building was erected by col. Scott, chiefly after designs by capt. Fowke, and cost about 200,000*l.* The organ, by Willis, is said to be the largest in the world. An experimental concert was given to the workmen 25 Feb., and the hall was opened by the queen 29 March, 1871, when a grand concert was given.

Royal Albert Orphan Asylum, Bagshot; founded 1864.

Albigenses, a name given to various persons who opposed the doctrines and corruptions of the Church of Rome, living at Albi, in Languedoc, and at Toulouse in the 12th century. They were persecuted as Manichæans, 1163, and a crusade (proclaimed by pope Innocent III.) against them commenced in 1207. Simon de Montfort commanded 500,000 men, and at Beziers, 1209, he and the pope's legate put friends and foes to the sword, saying, "God will find his own!" At Minerva he burned 150 of the Albigenses alive; and at La Vaur he hanged the governor, and beheaded the chief people, drowning the governor's wife, and murdering other women. He defeated Raymond, count of Toulouse, but was himself killed in 1218. Louis VIII. and IX., kings of France, patronized the crusade; count Raymond was subdued, and abdicated in 1229; and the heretics were given up to the Inquisition. They had little in common with the Waldenses (which see).

Albion. Britain is so called by Aristotle (died 322 B.C.). Julius Caesar and others are said to have given it the name (from albus, white) on account of its chalky cliffs.

Albuera, or ALBUERA, Estremadura, Spain. Here a battle was fought between the French, commanded by marshal Soult, and the British and Anglo-Spanish army, under marshal (afterwards lord) Beresford, 16 May, 1811. The allies obtained a brilliant victory. The French loss exceeded 8000 men previously to their retreat; but the allies lost a large number. The chief brunt of the action fell on the British; colonel Inglis, 22 officers, and more than 400 men, out of 570 who had mounted a hill, fell—out of the 57th regiment alone; the other regiments were scarcely better off, not one third being left standing: "1500 unwounded men, the remnant of 6000 unconquerable British soldiers, stood triumphant on this fatal hill."—Napier.

Albufera (Spain, East Central), a lagoon near which the French marshal Suchet (afterwards duke of Albufera) defeated the Spaniards under Blake, 4 Jan. 1812: this led to his capture of Valencia on 9 Jan.

Alcala, Spain, near the Roman Complutum. At the university here was printed the Complutensian Polyglot Bible, at the expense of cardinal Ximenes, 1502-15.

Alcantara, a town on the Tagus, W. Spain. A fine bridge was built here by Trajan about 104. The duke of Alva acquired Portugal for Spain by defeating the Portuguese army here, 24 June, 1580. The Spanish military order of knighthood of Alcantara was established in 1156. The sovereign of Spain has been grand-master since 1495.

Alcazar-Quiver, near Fez, N.W. Africa, where the Moors totally defeated the Portuguese, whose gallant king Sebastian was slain, 4 Aug. 1578. The Portugunner disbelieved his death and long expected his return; this led to the appearance of five impostors.

Alchemy, the forerunner of chemistry; its chief objects being the discovery of the philosopher's stone (which was to effect the transmutation of metals into gold), an alkahest, or universal menstruum, and the elixir of life.* The alchemists assert that their founder was Hermes Trismegistus (thrice greatest), an ancient Egyptian king.—Pliny says the emperor Caligula was the first who prepared natural arsenic, in order to make gold of it, but left it off, because the charge exceeded the profit.

Zosimus wrote on the subject about 410.

The Arabians cultivated alchemy and were followed (in the thirteenth century) by Roger Bacon, Albertus Magnus, Aquinas, Raymond Lullius, Basil Valentine (born 1304), Paracelsus (died 1541), and others.

In 1404 the craft of multiplying gold and silver was made felony by 5 Hen. IV. c. 4, which act was repealed in 1688.

A license for practicing alchemy with all kinds of metals and minerals was granted to one Richard Carter, 1476.—Rymer's Fodera.

Dr Price, of Guildford, in 1782 published an account of his experiments, and brought specimens of gold to the king, affirming that they were made by means of a red and white powder. Being a fellow of the Royal Society, he was required, under pain of expulsion, to repeat his experiments before Messrs. Kirwan and Wolfe (some say Higgins), but after much equivocation and delay he took poison and died, Aug. 1783.

Alcohol. Pure spirit of wine or hydrated alcohol is said to have been obtained by the distillation of fermented liquors by Abocanis in the twelfth century; and the dehydration of this liquor to have been partially effected by Raymond Lullius in the thirteenth century by carbonate of potassium. Alcohol has never been reduced to the solid state, but becomes viscid at very low temperatures. In 1820, Faraday and Hennell obtained traces of alcohol by passing olefiant gas (bicarburetted hydrogen) through sulphuric acid; and in 1862 this process was examined and confirmed by Berthelot; see Distillation, Spirits, Brandy, Gin, Rum. About 250 medical men, including the president of the Royal College of Physicians, and many hospital officials, issued a cautionary declaration concerning the use of alcohol in medicine, Dec. 1871; see Temperance.

Alcolea (Andulania, S. Spain). Near the bridge a sharp engagement took place between the royalists under gen. Pavia y Lacy, marquis de Novaliches, and the insurgents under marshal Serrano, 27 Sept. 1868. The former was defeated, and, being severely wounded, surrendered 28 Sept. About 600 were killed on both sides.

Al-coran, or AL-KORAN, see Koran, Mahometanism, etc.

Alderman. The Saxon ealdorman was next to the king and frequently a viceroy; but after the settlement of the Danes the title was gradually displaced by that of aurt. Aldermen in corporations are next in dignity to the mayor. They were appointed in London (where there are twenty-six) in 1242; and in Dublin (where there are twenty-four) in 1323. Aldermen chosen for life, instead of annually, 17 Rich. II. 1394. Present mode of election established, 11 Geo. I. 1725. Aldermen made justices of the peace, 15 Geo. II. 1741.

London aldermen are elected by the wards. In 1877 the court of aldermen exercised their ancient right of veto against Mr John Bennett (thrice chosen alderman for the ward of Cheap), and chose Mr Edgar Brett, 23 Oct. 1877.

Alderney (English Channel), with Jersey, etc., was acquired by William the Conqueror, 1066. The "Race" is celebrated for two fatal occurrences; William of Normandy, son of Henry I. of England, and many young nobles (140 youths of the principal families of France and Britain), were overtaken by a storm, and all lost, 25 Nov.

* M. Martin Ziegler patented a method of producing a "vital fluid" by combining nitrogen and carbon in a porous cell containing ammonia, immersed in a vessel filled with molasses. The current was to flow through silk threads attached to the vessel, about 1866.

1120. The British man-of-war Victory, of 100 guns and 1160 men, was wrecked here, 5 Oct. 1744; the admiral, sir John Balchen, and all his crew, perished. Through this strait the French escaped after their defeat at La Hogue by admirals Russell and Rooke, 19 May, 1692. The construction of a breakwater, in order to make Alderney a naval station, was begun in 1852, and after having cost 1,237,100*l.*, was suspended by parliament in 1871. In 1874 the harbor and lands were transferred from the control of the board of trade to that of the admiralty and the war department.

Aldershot Camp, on a moor near Farnham, about 85 miles from London. In April, 1854, the War-office, having obtained a grant of 1,000,000*l.*, purchased 4000 acres of land for a permanent camp for 20,000 men.

Additional land purchased in 1864. Barracks since erected for 4000 infantry, 1800 cavalry, and several batteries of artillery. Great improvements in military cookery introduced (see Cookery) under the superintendence of capt. John Grant, 1867.

Visited by the queen, 18, 19 April, 1866. The troops returned from the Crimea, reviewed by her, 7, 16 July 1855.

About 18,000 men were stationed here, 1869.

Cost of the camp, said to be 1,291,531*l.* up to Feb. 1860.

An industrial and fine-art exhibition, furnished by officers and men and their wives, opened 28 June, closed 14 July, 1864.

Camp set up for 40,000 men to execute military manoeuvres, Aug. Sept. 1871. Many horses broke away through a fright, 30 Aug. 1871.

Review of 14,000, etc., by the queen, 6 July, 1872.

Summer manoeuvres here, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877.

Review by the queen, 13 May, 1878.

Aldine Press, that of Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius) at Venice, where were printed many of the first editions of the Greek, Latin, and Italian classics, commencing in 1494 with Museus.

Ale, Bean, AND WINE are said to have been invented by Bacchus. Ale was known as a beverage at least in 404 B.C. Herodotus ascribes the first discovery of the art of brewing barley-wine to Isia, the wife of Osiris, and a beverage of this kind is mentioned by Xenophon, 401 B.C. The Romans and Germans very early learned from the Egyptians the process of preparing a liquor from corn by means of fermentation.—Tuckius. Ale-houses are mentioned in the laws of Ina, king of Wessex. Booths were set up in England, 728, when laws were passed for their regulation. None but freemen were allowed to keep ale-houses in London, 13 Edw. I. 1285. They were further subjected to regulation by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 25, 1551. By 1 James I. c. 9, 1603, one full quart of the best, and two quarts of small ale, were to be sold for one penny. Excise duty on ale and beer was imposed by the parliament in 1643, and continued by Charles II., 1660; repealed, 1 Will. IV. c. 51, 1830; see Porter, Wine, Victuallers.

Alemanni, or ALL MEX (i. e. men of all nations), hence Allemand, German. A body of Suevi, who took this name, were defeated by Caracalla, 214. After several repulses, they invaded the empire under Aurelian, who subdued them in three battles, 271. They were again vanquished by Julian, 356, 357; by Jovinus, 368. They were defeated and subjugated by Clovis at Tolbiac (or Zulpich), 496. The Suabians are their descendants.

Alançon (N. France) gave title to a count and duke.

1264-65. Peter, made Count by his father king Louis IX.

1283. Charles I. of Valois, made Count by his brother, king Philip the Fair.

1325. Charles II. (his son), killed at Crécy.

1346. Charles III. (his son), became a priest.

1361. Peter, his brother.

1404. John (his son), made Duke in 1416, killed at Agincourt, 1418.

1418. John II. (his son), prisoner in England, 1424-9. Imprisoned against the French king, died in prison, 1470.

1476. Charles IV. Died after the battle of Paris in 1525, and died shortly after of chagrin. The duchy was annexed by the crown.

Aleppo (N. Syria), a large town named Icona by Seleucus Nicator, about 299 B.C. The pacha of Aleppo is one of the five governments of Syria. It was taken by the Saracens, A.D. 638, who restored its ancient name Haleb, or Chaleb; by Saladin, 1183; and sacked by Timour, Nov. 1400. Its depopulation by the plague has been frequent: 60,000 persons were computed to have perished by it in 1797, many in 1827. The cholera raged here in 1832. Aleppo suffered severely from the terrible earthquakes in 1622 and 1680, and has often been the scene of fanatical massacres. On 16 Oct. 1850, the Mahometans attacked the Christians, burning everything. Three churches were destroyed, five others plundered, and thousands of persons slain. The total loss of property amounted to about a million sterling; no interference was attempted by the pacha.

Alessandria, a city of Piedmont, built in 1168 under the name of Casar by the Milanese and Cremonese, to defend the Tanaro against the emperor, and afterwards named after pope Alexander III. It has been frequently besieged and taken. The French took it in 1796, but were driven out by Suwarrow, 21 July, 1799. They recovered it after the battle of Marengo, 14 June, 1800, and held it till 1814, when the strong fortifications erected by Napoleon were destroyed. These have been restored since June, 1856.

Aleutian Isles, in the N. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Behring, 1741; visited by Cook, 1778; and settled by Russians, 1786.

Alexander, ERA OF, dated from the death of Alexander the Great, 12 Nov. 323 B.C. In the computation of this era, the period of the Creation was considered to be 5502 years before the birth of Christ, and, in consequence, the year 1 A.D. was equal to 5503. This computation continued to the year A.D. 284, which was called 5786. In the next year (A.D. 285), which should have been 5787, ten years were discarded, and the date became 5777. This is still used in the Abyssinian era (which see). The date is reduced to the Christian era by subtracting 5502 until the year 5786, and after that time by subtracting 5492.

Alexandrian Codex, a MS. of the Septuagint translation of the Bible in Greek, said to have been transcribed by a lady named Thecla, in the sixth century, and to have belonged to the patriarch of Alexandria in 1028. It was presented to Charles I. of England in 1626 by Cyrillus Lucaris, patriarch of Constantinople, and was placed in the British Museum in 1753. It was printed in fac-simile, 1786-1821.

Alexandrian Schools of Philosophy. The first school arose soon after the foundation of Alexandria, 332 B.C. It flourished under the patronage of the Ptolemies till about 100 B.C. It included Euclid (300), Archimedes (287-212), Apollonius (250), Hipparchus (150), and Hero (150). The second school arose about A.D. 140, and lasted till about 400. Its most eminent members were Ptolemy, the author of the Ptolemaic system (150), Diophantus the arithmetician (200), and Pappus the geometer (350).

Alexandrine, verses of twelve syllables, first written by Alexander of Paris, about 1164, and since called after him. The last line of the Spenserian stanza is an Alexandrine. In Pope's "Essay on Criticism" this verse is thus happily exemplified:—

"A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along."

The longest English poem wholly in Alexandrine verse is Drayton's "Polycolbon," published 1612-22.

Alexinatz, a town in Servia. Severe fighting took place here between the Turks and Servians, Aug.-Sept. 1876. The town, headquarters of the Servians, was captured 31 Oct. This led to an armistice and peace, see Turkey.

Alford (N. Scotland), BATTLE OF. Gen. Baillie, with a large body of covenanters, was defeated by the marquess of Montrose, 2 July, 1645.

* The saying of Omar—"That if the books agreed with the book of God, they were useless; if they disagreed, they were pernicious"—is denied by Mahometans. It is also attributed to Theophilus, archbishop of Alexandria (380), and to cardinal Ximenes (1600).

Algebra: Diophantus, said to be the inventor, wrote upon it probably between the third and fifth centuries. It was cultivated in the ninth century by the Arabs, who brought it into Spain; and in Italy by Leonardo Bonaccio of Pisa, in 1220. In 1494 Luca Pacioli published the first printed book on Algebra in Europe.—Serret. Some of the algebraic signs were introduced either by Christophe Rudolph (1522-6) or Michael Stifelius of Nuremberg, 1544, and others by Francis Vieta, in 1590, when algebra came into general use.—Moréri. Jerome Cardan published his "Ars Magna," containing his rule, 1545. Thos. Harriot's important discoveries appeared in his "Artis Analyticæ Praxis," 1631. Descartes applied algebra to geometry about 1637. The binomial theorem of Newton, the basis of the doctrine of fluxions, and the new analysis, 1668. Dean Peacock's "Algebra" is a first-class work.

Algesiras, or OLD GIBRALTAR (S. Spain). Here the Moors entered Spain in 711, and held it till taken by Alfonso XI., March, 1344.—Two engagements took place here between the English fleet under sir James Saumarez and the United French and Spanish fleets, 6 and 12 July, 1801. In the first the enemy was victorious; but the British honor was redeemed in the latter conflict, the San Antonio, 74 guns, being captured. Two Spanish ships fired on each other by mistake, and took fire; of 2000 men on board, 250 were saved by the English.—Alison.

Algiers, now ALGERIA, N. W. Africa; part of the ancient Mauritania, which was conquered by the Romans, 46 B.C.; by the Vandals, A.D. 439; recovered for the empire by Belisarius, 534; and subdued by the Arabs about 690. Population of Algeria in 1866, 2,921,146; 1872, 2,146,225; 1875, 2,448,691.

Alhambra, a Moorish palace and fortress near Granada, S. Spain, founded by Mohammed I. of Granada about 1253. It was surrendered to the Christians about Nov. 1491. The remains have been described in a magnificent work by Owen Jones and Jules Goury, published 1842-5. Washington Irving made the palace and its surroundings the subject of an exquisitely graceful and pleasing work, entitled The Alhambra, published 1832. A fac-simile of a part of this palace in the Crystal Palace at Sydenham was destroyed by the fire, 30 Dec. 1866.—The Panopticon (which see) was opened as a circus, etc., under the name of Alhambra, in March, 1858. The Alhambra Palace Company, incorporated in July, 1863, applied for dissolution in Jan. 1865.

Ali, SECT OF (Shiites, or Fatimites). Ali married Mahomet's daughter Fatima, about 632, and became vizier, 613; and caliph, 655. Ali was called by the prophet "the lion of God, always victorious;" and the Persians follow the interpretation of the Koran according to Ali, while other Mahometans adhere to that of Abubeker and Omar. Ali was assassinated 23 Jan. 661.†

Alien and Sedition Laws. In 1798, when war between France and the United States was threatened, there were in the United States, by estimate, 30,000 Frenchmen organized in clubs, and 50,000 sympathizers with France, who had been British subjects. In apprehension of danger from these men, Congress passed an act June 25 authorizing the president to banish alien enemies at his discretion during the ensuing two years. Another act authorizing the president to apprehend and remove alien enemies was passed 6 July. These alien laws were never actively enforced. On 14 July, 1798, the sedition act became a law. This statute defined sedition and affixed severe penalties to offences of that nature. These alien and sedition laws were very unpopular, and the fall of the Federal party from power was due in part to the ill-feeling aroused by them.

Aliens, or FOREIGNERS, were banished in 1155, being thought too numerous. In 1343 they were excluded from enjoying ecclesiastical benefices. By 2 Rich. II. st. 1, 1378, they were much relieved. When they were to be tried criminally, the juries were to be half foreigners, if they so desired, 1430. They were restrained from French, and Sardinian sovereigns. He visited Paris and London in Aug. 1865. He offered to serve in the French army in July, 1870.

† The first four successors of Mahomet—Abubeker, Omar, Othman, and Ali, his chief agents in establishing his religion and extirpating unbelievers, and whom on that account he styled the "cutting swords of God"—all died violent deaths; and his family was wholly extirpated within thirty years after his own decease.

New registration act, 7 Geo. IV. 1826. This last act was repealed and another statute passed, 6 Will. IV. 1836.

The rigor of the alien laws was mitigated by acts passed in 1844 and 1847.

"Foreigners have reclaimed our marshes, drained our fens, fished our seas, and built our bridges and harbors."—Smiles, 1861.

Their status defined by the Naturalization Act, passed 12 May, 1870.

By act of Congress passed 1798, alien enemies might be restrained, secured, or removed from the territories of the United States. An act of Congress relieving the children born abroad of United States fathers from alienage was passed 1854. In 1857, the United States attorney-general officially asserted that a United States citizen may renounce his citizenship. Aliens may readily naturalize themselves in the United States; see Naturalization. In the United States aliens may sue and be sued, but cannot serve a process, vote, or hold office. With respect to the power of aliens to hold real estate, the laws of the several States are not alike. Some impose restrictions, while others do not. The question of the inheritance of the property of aliens has been the subject of several treaties between the United States and foreign nations.

Aliwal, a village of N.W. India, the site of a battle, 28 Jan. 1846, between the Sikh army under sirdar Runjeet Singh Majethea, 19,000 strong, supported by 68 pieces of cannon, and the British under sir Harry Smith, 12,000 men with 32 guns. The contest was obstinate, but ended in the defeat of the Sikhs, who lost nearly 6000 killed or drowned.

Alizarine, a crystalline body, the coloring principle of madder, discovered in it by Robiquet and Colin in 1831. Schunck showed that all the finest madder colors contained only alizarine combined with alkalies and fatty acids. Gräbe and Liebermann obtained anthracene from alizarine in 1868, and alizarine from anthracene in 1869. The crystalline body anthracene was discovered in coal oils by Dumas and Laurent in 1832; see Madder.

Alkalies (from kali, the Arabic name for the plant from which an alkaline substance was first procured) are ammonia, potash, soda, and lithia. Black discovered the nature of the difference between caustic and mild alkalies in 1736.

The fixed alkalies, potash and soda, decomposed, and the metals potassium and sodium formed, by Humphry Davy at the Royal Institution, London, 1807.

Dr. Ure invented an alkaliometer, 1816.

The manufacture of alkalies, very extensive in Lancashire and Cheshire, is based on the decomposition of common salt (chloride of sodium) by a process invented by a Frenchman named Le Blanc, about 1792.

Mr. Loeb obtained crystals of soda from brine about 1814. Various modifications of these processes are now in use.

"Alkali works" are defined as works for the manufacture of alkali, sulphates of soda, sulphate of potash, and in which muriatic gas is evolved.

Mr. William Gossage's process for condensing muriatic acid gas patented in 1836.

The "ammonia process" of making soda invented by Dyer and Hemming in 1838; patents respecting it taken out by Solvay, 1863, 1867, 1872; Gossage, 1854; Schloosing, 1854, 1858; Young, 1871, 1872; Weldon, 1872, 1873; and by others.

Mr. Walter Weldon received the French Lavoisier medal for his most important improvements in the alkali manufacture, July, 1877.

In consequence of the injury to vegetation produced by the alkali works in Lancashire and Cheshire, the Alkali Works Act "for the more effectual condensation [of 95 per cent.]

of muriatic acid gas" (or hydrochloric acid) was passed, 28 July, 1863. It came into operation 1 Jan. 1864, proved successful, was re-enacted 1868, and amended 1874; see Chemical Works.

Allahabad (N.W. Hindostan), the "holy city" of the Indian Mahometans, situated at the junction of the rivers Jumna and Ganges. The province of Allahabad was successively subject to the sovereigns of Delhi and Oude, but in 1801 was partially and in 1803 wholly incorporated with the British possessions. By treaty here, Bengal, etc., was ceded to the English in 1765.—During the Indian mutiny several sepoy regiments rose and massacred their officers, 4 June, 1857; col. Neil marched promptly from Benares and suppressed the insurrection. In Nov. 1861, lord Canning made this city the capital of the N.W. provinces. Visit of the prince of Wales, 7 March, 1874.

Allatoona Pass (Ga.), BATTLE OF, fought 6 Oct. 1864. After his evacuation of Atlanta, Hood covered the road to Macon. Soon, however, he shifted southward to the West Point road, and then boldly pushed northward against Sherman's communications. Sherman followed him with the bulk of his army, but on 6 Oct. had only reached Kenesaw. Hood, farther north, that day attacked Allatoona Pass, the most important station on the road, and stored with one and a half million of rations. Gen. Corse conducted the defence, and all day long held out against the assailing force, retaining his position until relief approached and Hood was compelled to withdraw. Corse was severely wounded.

Allegiance, see Oaths.

Allegory abounds in the Bible and in Homer: see Jacob's blessing upon his sons, Gen. xlix. (1689 A.C.), Psa. lxxx., and all the prophets. Spenser's Fuërie Queene (1590) and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (1678) are allegories throughout. The Spectator (1711), by Addison, Steele, and others, abounds in allegories. The allegorical interpretation of the Scriptures is said to have begun with Origen in the third century; but see Gal. iv. 24.

All-saints' Day (Nov. 1), or ALL-HALLOW'S, a festival said to have been begun by pope Boniface IV. about 607, celebrated in the Pantheon at Rome, and established by pope Gregory IV. (about 830) for the commemoration of all those saints and martyrs in whose honor no particular day is assigned. The reformers of the English church, 1549, struck out of their calendar a great number of anniversaries, leaving only those which at their time were connected with popular feeling or tradition.

Alma, a river in the Crimea, near which was fought a great battle on 20 Sept. 1854; see Russo-Turkish War and Crimea. The English, French, and Turkish army (about 57,000 men) moved out of their first encampment in the Crimea on 19 Sept., and bivouacked for the night on the left bank of the Bulganak. The Russians (commanded by prince Menschikoff), mustering 40,000 infantry, had 180 field-pieces on the heights, and on the morning of 20 Sept. were joined by 6000 cavalry from Theodosia (or Kaffa). The English forces, under Lord Raglan, consisted of 26,000 men; the French of 24,000, under marshal St-Arnaud. At 12 o'clock the signal to advance was made; the river Alma was crossed, while prince Napoleon took possession of the village under the fire of the Russian batteries; and at 4, after a sanguinary fight, the allies were completely victorious. The enemy, utterly routed, threw away their arms and knapsacks in their flight, having lost about 5000 men, of whom 900 were made prisoners, mostly wounded. The loss of the British was 26 officers and 827 men killed, and 73 officers and 1539 men wounded (chiefly from the 23d, 7th, and 33d regiments); that of the French, 3 officers and 233 men killed, and 54 officers and 1033 men wounded. Total loss of the allies about 3400.

Almack's Assembly-rooms, King street, St. James's, London, at first very exclusive, were erected by a Scotchman named Almack, and opened 12 Feb. 1765. They are now termed Willis's Rooms, from the name of the present proprietors.

Almanacs (from the Arabic al manah, to count). The Egyptians computed time by instruments; the Alexandrians had almanacs, and log calendars are ancient. In the British Museum and universities are specimens of early almanacs. Michael Nostradamus, the astrologer, wrote an almanac in the style of Merlin, 1556.—Dufresnoy. Prof. Augustus De Morgan's valuable "Book of Almanacs, with an index of reference, by which the almanac may be found for every year," was published in March, 1851.* Among the earlier and more remarkable almanacs were

Most of the great daily journals in New York and other American cities publish almanacs containing elaborate and detailed political and industrial statistics.

The Stationers' Company claimed the exclusive right of publishing almanacs in virtue of letters patent from James I., granting the privilege to them and the two universities; but the monopoly was broken up by a decision of the Court of Common Pleas in 1775. A bill to renew the privilege was lost in 1779.

The Stamp Duty on English almanacs first imposed in 1710, was abolished in Aug. 1834; since when almanacs have become innumerable, being issued by tradesmen with their goods.

Of Moore's (under the management of Henry Andrews, the able compiler of the "Nautical Ephemeris") at one time upwards of 430,000 copies were annually sold. He died in 1820.

Of Foreign Almanacs, the principal are the "Almanach de France," first published in 1699, and the "Almanach de Gotha," 1764.

Almanza (S.E. Spain). Here on 25 April (o.s. 14), 1707, the English, Dutch, and Portuguese forces under the earl of Galway were totally defeated by the French and Spanish commanded by James Fitzjames, duke of Berwick (illegitimate son of James II.). Most of the English were killed or made prisoners, having been abandoned by the Portuguese at the first charge.

Almeida (Portugal), a frontier town, captured by Massena, 27 Aug. 1810. The French entered Spain, leaving a garrison at Almeida; blockaded by the English 6 April, 1811. Almeida was retaken by Wellington (11 May), and Massena retired from Portugal.

Almenara, a village N.E. Spain, where, on 28 July, 1710, an English and German army defeated the Spanish army supporting Philip V., the grandson of Louis XIV. of France. Stanhope, the English general, killed the Spanish general, Amezaiga, in single conflict; an act almost unexampled in modern warfare.

Almohades, Mahometan partisans, followers of Mohammed ben Abdalla, surnamed El-Mehedi, in Africa, about 1120. They subdued Morocco, 1145; entered Spain and took Seville, Cordova, and Granada, 1146-56; and founded a dynasty and ruled Spain till 1232, and Africa till 1278.

Almoner, an office anciently allotted to a dignified clergyman who gave the first dish from the royal table to the poor, or an alms in money. By an ancient canon all bishops were required to keep almoners. The grand-almoner of France was the highest ecclesiastical dignity in that kingdom before the revolution, 1789. Queen Victoria's almoner (Rev. Dr. Wellesley, dean of Windsor, appointed 28 May, 1870), or the sub-almoner, distributes the queen's gifts on Maundy-Thursday (which see).

Almoravides, Mahometan partisans in Africa, rose about 1050; entered Spain by invitation, 1086; were overcome by the Almohades in 1147.

Almshouses for aged and infirm persons have been erected by many public companies and benevolent individuals, particularly since the abolition of religious houses at the Reformation in the sixteenth century. A list of them, with useful information, will be found in "Low's Charities of London," 1862; frequently republished.

Alney, an island in the Severn, near Gloucester. Here a combat is asserted to have taken place between Edmund Ironside and Canute the Great, in sight of their armies, 1016. The latter was wounded, and proposed a division of the kingdom, the south part falling to Edmund. Edmund was murdered at Oxford shortly after, it is said, by Ædric Streon; and Canute obtained possession of the whole kingdom.

Alnwick (Saxon Ealnwic), on the river Alne in Northumberland, was given at the Conquest to Ivo de Vesci. It has long belonged to the Percies. Malcolm, king of Scotland, besieged Alnwick, and he and his sons were killed 13 Nov. 1093. It was taken by David I. in 1136, and attempted in July, 1174, by William the Lion, who was defeated and taken prisoner. It was burned by king John in 1215, and by the Scots in 1448. Since 1854 the castle has been repaired and enlarged with great taste and at unsparing expense.

Alpaca, or Paco, a species of the S. American quadruped, the llama, the soft hairy wool of which is now largely employed in the fabrication of cloths. It was introduced into this country, about 1836, by the earl of Derby. An alpaca factory (covering eleven acres), with a town, park, almshouses, etc., for the work-people, was erected at Saltaire, near Shipley, Yorkshire, by Mr. (afterwards sir) Titus Salt in 1852. A statue of him at Bradford was unveiled 1 Aug. 1874. He died 29 Dec. 1876.

Alphabet. Athotes, son of Menes, is said to have been the author of hieroglyphics, and to have written thus the history of the Egyptians, 2122 B.C. — Blair. But Josephus affirms that he had seen inscriptions by Seth, the son of Adam: this is deemed fabulous.

The Egyptian alphabet is ascribed to Memnon, 1822 B.C. The first letter of the Phœnician and Hebrew alphabet was aleph, called by the Greeks alpha, and abbreviated by the moderns to A. The Hebrew is supposed to be derived from the Phœnician.

Cadmus, the founder of Cadmea, 1493 B.C., is said to have brought the Phœnician letters (fifteen in number) into Greece, viz.—A, B, Γ, Δ, I, K, A, M, N, O, Π, P, Σ, T, Y. These letters were originally either Hebrew, Phœnician, or Assyrian characters, and changed gradually in form till they became the ground of the Roman letters, now used all over Europe. Palamedes of Argos invented the double characters Θ, X, Φ, Ξ, about 1224 B.C.; and Simonides added Ζ, Ψ, Η, Ω, about 489 B.C.—Arundelian Marbles. When the E was introduced is not precisely known. The Greek alphabet consisted of 16 letters till 399 (or 403) B.C., when the Ionic of 24 characters was introduced. The small letters are of later invention. The alphabets of the different nations contain the following number of letters:

Alphonsine Tables, astronomical tables, composed by Spanish and Arab astronomers, and collected in 1253 under the direction of Alphonso X. of Castile, surnamed the Wise, who is said to have expended upwards of 400,000 crowns in completing the work; he himself wrote the preface. The Spanish government ordered the work of Alphonso to be reprinted from the best MSS.; the publication begun in 1663.

Alps, European mountains. Those between France and Italy were passed by Hannibal, 218 B.C.; by the Romans, 154 B.C.; and by Napoleon I., May, 1800. Roads over Mont Cenis and the Simplon, connecting France and Italy, were constructed by order of Napoleon, between 1801–6; see Simplon. The "Alpine Club," which consists of British travellers in the Alps, was founded in 1858, and published its first work, "Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers," 1859; and a journal since; see Matterhorn.

Mont Cenis or Col de Fréjus Tunnel.—A tunnel, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles long through Mont Cenis, connecting Savoy and Piedmont, was proposed by M. Medail, and, after long lying dormant, was discussed and plans drawn up in 1848. The execution was prevented by the war of 1849.

The work of excavation was begun by king Victor Emmanuel, 31 Aug. 1857.

The boring was at first effected by ordinary piercing machinery; steam power was employed in 1860; and latterly compressed air.

Engineers—Grattoni, Grandis, and Sommeiller; the boring was completed 25 Dec. 1870.

The total cost was about 2,600,000*l*. As the Italians had executed the work within the given time, the French government bore the chief expense.

The first experimental trip was made in 40 minutes, 13 Sept., and the tunnel was solemnly inaugurated by the passage of 22 carriages in 20 minutes, 17 Sept. 1871; regular trains pass through, 16 Oct. 1871.

A railway for locomotives over Mont Cenis was constructed upon Mr. Fell's plan in 1867 (see Railways), and opened for traffic, 15 June, 1868.

The overland mail first travels through the tunnel to Brindisi, saving 24 hours, 5 Jan. 1872.

St. Gotthard Tunnel (part of a railway system to connect the North Sea and the Mediterranean), about $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles, $21\frac{1}{2}$ broad; compressed air employed in boring; begun June, 1870; completed 29 Feb. 1880; through failure in vaulting, May, 1880, opening deferred.

Alresford, BATTLE OF, or Cheriton, which see.

Alsace, ELSAZS, formerly part of the kingdom of Austria, afterwards the French departments of the Upper and Lower Rhine. It was incorporated with the German empire in the tenth century. A portion was restored to France, 1648, and the whole, including Strassburg, in 1697. Alsace was reconquered by the Germans, Aug.-Sept. 1870; and annexed to their empire, May, 1871; by law, 9 June, 1871. The Alsatians were permitted to choose their nationality, before 30 Sept. 1872. Many emigrated into France, with much regret.—ALSACE-LORRAINE was constituted a province of the German empire, having been ceded by France by the treaty of peace concluded 10 May, 1781; see Belfort. The province sends 15 members to the German parliament. Administrators, prince Bismarck, 1781; field-marshal Manteuffel, 1 Oct. 1879. Population of Alsace-Lorraine, 1875, 1,529,408.

Alsatia, a name given to the precinct of Whitefriars, London, is described in Scott's "Fortunes of Nigel." Its privilege of sanctuary was abolished in 1697.

Alsen (Denmark), besieged by the Prussians, and heroically defended, 26 June; taken, 29 June, 1864.

Altar. One was built by Noah, 2348 B.C. (Gen. viii. 20); others by Abraham, 1921 (Gen. xii. 8). Directions for making an altar are given, Exod. xx. 24, 1491 B.C. Altars were raised to Jupiter, in Greece, by Cecrops, 1556 B.C. He introduced among the Greeks the worship of the deities of Egypt.—Herodotus. The term "altar" was applied to the Lord's table for the first three centuries after Christ (Heb. xiii. 10). Christian altars in churches were instituted by pope Sixtus I. A.D. 135; and were first consecrated by pope Sylvester. The Church of England terms the table on which the elements are placed an akar. Since the time of Elizabeth there has been much controversy on the subject, and the Puritans in the civil war destroyed many of the ancient stone altars, substituting wooden tables. In Jan. 1845 it was decided, in the Arches Court, that stone altars were not to be erected in English churches.

Altenkirchen (Prussia). The French, who had defeated the Austrians here, 4 June, 1796, were themselves defeated, and their general, Marceau, killed, 19 Sept. following.

Alter ego (another or second I), a term applied to Spanish viceroys when exercising regal power; used at Naples when the crown-prince was appointed vicar-general during an insurrection in July, 1820.

Alton Riot. On the night of 7 Nov. 1837 a riot occurred in Alton, Ill., growing out of the attempt of a mob to destroy the printing-press of the Observer, a newspaper published by the Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, and devoted to the advocacy of the abolition of slavery. The attacks on the printing-office were repulsed, but Mr. Lovejoy was shot as he stepped out of his door. The leaders of the riot were tried and acquitted.

Altona (Holstein, N. Germany), acquired by the Danes, 1660, and made a city, 1664. It was occupied first by the German federal troops, 24 Dec. 1863, and then by the Prussians (the federal diet protesting) 12 Feb. 1864.

Alt-Ranstadt (Prussia), where the treaty of peace dictated by Charles XII. of Sweden, to Frederick Augustus of Poland, was signed 24 Sept. 1706, o.s. Frederick deposed in 1704, regained the throne of Poland after the defeat of Charles XII., in 1709.

Alum, a salt, is said to have been first discovered at Roccha, in Syria, about 1800; it was found in Tuscany about 1470; its manufacture was brought to perfection in England by sir T. Challoner, who established large alum works near Whitby in 1608; it was discovered in Ireland in 1787; and in Anglesey in 1790. Alum is used as a mordant in dyeing, to harden tallow, to whiten bread, and in the paper manufacture.

Alumbagh, a palace with other buildings near Lucknow, Oude, India, taken during the mutiny from the rebels, 23 Sept. 1857, and heroically defended by the British under sir James Outram. He defeated an attack of 30,000 sepoys on 13 Jan. 1858, and of 20,000 on 21 Feb., and was relieved by sir Colin Campbell in March.

Aluminium, a metal, the base of the earth alumina, which is combined with silica in clay, and which was shown to be a distinct earth by Marggraff in 1754, having been previously confounded with lime. Oerstedt in 1825 obtained the chloride of aluminium; and in 1827 the metal itself was got from it by F. Wöhler, but was long a scientific curiosity, the process being expensive. The mode of production was afterwards simplified by Bunsen and others, more especially by H. Ste-Claire Deville, who in 1856 succeeded in procuring considerable quantities of this metal. It is very light (sp. g. 2.25), malleable, and amorphous; when pure does not rust, and is not acted on by sulphur or any acid except hydrochloric. In March, 1856, it was 3l. the ounce; in June, 1857, 11s. or 12s., and it is now much cheaper (1873). The eagles of the French colors have been made of it, and many other ornamental and useful articles. Deville's work, "De l'Aluminium," was published in 1859. An aluminium manufactory was established at Newcastle in 1860, by Messrs. Bell. They obtain the metal from a French mineral, bauxite. Their aluminium bronze, an alloy of copper and aluminium, invented by Dr. John Percy, F.R.S., was made into watch-cases, etc., by Messrs. Reid of Newcastle, in 1862.

Amadis or GAUL, a Spanish or Portuguese romance, stated to have been written about 1342 by Vasco de Lobeira. It was enlarged by De Montalvo, about 1485; and first printed (in Spanish) 1519; in French, 1640-50.

Amalekites (descendants of Amalek, grandson of Esau, brother of Jacob) attacked the Israelites, 1491 a.c., when perpetual war was denounced against them. They were subdued by Saul about 1079; by David, 1058 and 1036; and by the Simeonites about 715 a.c.

Amalfi, a city on the gulf of Salerno, Naples, in the eighth century became the seat of a republic, and flourished by its commerce till 1075, when it was taken by Roger Guiscard, and eventually incorporated with Naples. The Pisans, in their sack of the town in 1135, are said to have found a copy of the Pandects of Justinian, and thus to have induced the revival of the study of Roman law in Western Europe; the story is now doubted. Flavio Giola, a native of Amalfi, is the reputed discoverer of the mariner's compass, about 1302.

ampton on her first voyage, Friday, 2 Jan. 1852, and on Sunday morning, 4 Jan., was destroyed by fire at sea, about 110 miles W.S.W. of Scilly (ascribed to the spontaneous ignition of combustible matter placed near the engine-room). Out of 161 persons on board, 102 persons must have perished by fire or drowning: 21 persons were saved by the life-boat of the ship, 25 more were carried into Brest harbor by a Dutch vessel passing by, and 13 others were picked up in the bay of Biscay, also by a Dutch galliot. Eliot Warburton, a distinguished writer in general literature, was among those lost.

Amazon, a river in S. America, was discovered by Pinzon in 1500, and explored by Francisco Orellana in 1540. Coming from Peru, he sailed down the Amazon to the Atlantic, and, observing companies of women in arms on its banks, he called the country Amazonia, and gave the name of Amazon to the river, previously called Marañon.

Amazons. Three nations of Amazons have been mentioned—the Asiatic, Scythian, and African. They are said to have been the descendants of Scythians inhabiting Cappadocia, where their husbands, having made incursions, were all slain, being surprised in ambuscades by their enemies. Their widows formed a female state, and decreed that matrimony was a shameful servitude. —Quintus Curtius. They were said to have been conquered by Theseus, about 1231 a.c. The Amazons were constantly employed in wars; and, that they might throw the javelin with more force, their right breasts were burned off, whence their name from the Greek—a, no, *ma*stos, breast. Others derive the name from maza, the moon, which they are supposed to have worshipped. About 830 a.c. their queen, Thalestris, visited Alexander the Great, while he was pursuing his conquests in Asia, with 300 females in her train.—Herodotus.

Ambassadors. Accredited agents, and representatives from one court to another, are referred to in early ages. In most countries they have great privileges, and in England they and their servants are secured against arrest. England usually has six ambassadors, twenty-seven ministers, and about thirty-six chief consuls, resident at foreign courts, exclusive of inferior agents; the ambassadors and other chief agents from abroad at the court of London in 1865 were 47; in 1868, 43; in 1872, 42; in 1874, 39.

Strictly speaking, the United States sends no ambassadors—who are supposed to represent the person of a sovereign—but only envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary; but American ministers are commonly called ambassadors, and the term is used in the act of Congress of 1836 relating to the diplomatic service.

The Russian ambassador being imprisoned for debt by a lac-merchant, 27 July 1708, led to the passing the statute of 7 Aug. for the protection of ambassadors, 1708.

Two men, convicted of arresting the arrival of an ambassador, were sentenced to be conducted to the house of the ambassador, with a label on their breasts, to ask his pardon, and then one of them to be imprisoned three months and the other fined 12 May, 1740.

The first ministers of the United States to France were Dr. Franklin, Silas Deane, and Arthur Lee, 1776. Deane and Lee were soon recalled, and Franklin made sole envoy.

The first minister plenipotentiary from the United States of America to England, John Adams, presented to the king, 1 June, 1785, the first from Great Britain to America was Mr. Hammond in 1791.

A Japanese minister received by the queen, 2 March, 1873. The first accredited ambassador from China, Kuo ta-Jen, landed at Southampton, 21 Jan. 1877.

Amber, a carbonaceous mineral,* principally found in the northern parts of Europe, of great repute in the world from the earliest time, esteemed as a medicine before the Christian era: Theophrastus wrote upon it, 500 a.c. Upwards of 150 tons of amber have been found in one year on the sands of the shore near Pillau.—Philips.

* Much diversity of opinion still prevails among naturalists and chemists respecting the origin of amber. It is considered by Bornelius to have been a resin dissolved in volatile oil. It often contains delicately formed insects. Sir D. Brewster concludes it to be indurated vegetable juice. When rubbed it becomes electrical, and from its Greek name, ἄμβρα, the term electricity is derived.

Amblesf, near Cologne, Germany. Here Charles Martel defeated Chilperic II., and Ragenfroi, mayor of the Neustrians, 716.

Amboise (Central France). A conspiracy of the Huguenots against Francis II., Catherine de' Medicis, and the Guises, was suppressed at this place in Jan. 1560. On 19 March, 1563, the Pacification of Amboise was published, granting toleration to the Huguenots. The civil war was, however, soon renewed.

Amboyna, chief of the Molucca isles, discovered about 1512 by the Portuguese, but not wholly occupied by them till 1580. It was taken by the Dutch in 1605. The English factors at this settlement were cruelly tortured and put to death, 17 Feb. 1623-4, by the Dutch, on an accusation of a conspiracy to expel them from the island, where the two nations jointly shared in the pepper trade of Java. Cromwell compelled the Dutch to give a sum of money to the descendants of the sufferers. Amboyna was seized by the English, 16 Feb. 1796, but was restored by the treaty of Amiens in 1802. It was again seized by the British, 17-19 Feb. 1810; and again restored at the peace of May, 1814.

Amen, an ancient Hebrew word meaning true, faithful, certain, is used in the Jewish and Christian assemblies at the conclusion of prayer: see 1 Cor. xiv. 16 (A.D. 59). It is translated "verily," in the Gospels.

Amende HONORABLE, in France, in the ninth century, was a punishment inflicted on traitors and sacrilegious persons: the offender was delivered to the hangman; his shirt was stripped off, a rope put round his neck, and a taper in his hand; he was then led into court, and was obliged to beg pardon of God and the country. Death or banishment sometimes followed. These words also denote a recantation in open court, or in presence of the injured person.

Amercement, in law, a fine assessed for an offence done, or pecuniary punishment at the mercy of the court; thus differing from a fine directed and fixed by a statute. By Magna Charta, 1215, a freeman cannot be amerced for a small fault, but in proportion to the offence he has committed; the mode was determined by 9 Hen. III., 1225.

America,* the great Western Continent, is about 9000 miles long, with an area of about 13,668,000 square miles. It is now believed to have been visited by the Norsemen or Vikings in the tenth and eleventh centuries; but the modern discovery is due to the sagacity and courage of the Genoese navigator, Christopher Columbus.†

* The name is derived from Amerigo Vespucci, a Florentine merchant, who died in 1512. He accompanied Ojeda in his voyage on the eastern coast in 1498; and described the country in letters sent to his friends in Italy. He is charged with presumptuously inserting "Tierra de Amerigo" in his maps. Irving discusses the question in the Appendix to the Life of Columbus, but comes to no conclusion. Humboldt asserts that the name was given to the continent in the popular works of Waldseemüller, a German geographer, without the knowledge of Vespucci. To America we are indebted, among other things, for maize, the turkey, the potato, Peruvian bark, and tobacco.

† Christopher Columbus was born about 1445; first went to sea about 1460; settled at Lisbon in 1470, where he married Felipa, the daughter of Perestrelo, an Italian navigator; whereby he obtained much geographical knowledge. He is said to have laid the plans of his voyage of discovery before the republic of Genoa, in 1485, and other powers, and finally before the court of Spain, where at length the queen Isabella became his patron. After undergoing much ingratitude and cruel persecution from his own followers and the Spanish court, he died on 20 May, 1506; and was buried with much pomp at Valladolid. His remains were transferred, in 1513, to Seville; in 1536 to San Domingo; and in Jan. 1796 to Havana, Cuba. The original inscription on his tomb is said to have been: "A Castilla y a Leon Nuevo Mundo dió Colon"—"To Castile and Leon Colon gave a New World." Humboldt says beautifully, that the success of Columbus was "a conquest of reflection."

Columbus sailed on his first expedition from Palos in Andalusia on Friday, with vessels supplied by the sovereigns of Spain..... 3 Aug. 1492

America, BRITISH, see British America.

America, CENTRAL, includes the republics of Guatemala, San Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica (which see). They declared their independence 21 Sept. 1821, and separated from the Mexican confederation 21 July, 1823. The states made a treaty of union between themselves, 21 March, 1847. There has been among them since much anarchy and bloodshed, aggravated greatly by the irruption of American filibusters under Kenny and Walker, 1854-5. In Jan. 1863, a war began between Guatemala (afterwards joined by Nicaragua) and San Salvador (afterwards supported by Honduras). The latter were defeated at Santa Rosa, 16 June, and San Salvador was taken 26 Oct.; the president of San Salvador, Barrios, fled; and Carrera, the dictator of Guatemala, became predominant over the confederacy. See Darien and Panama.

America, SOUTH, see Brazil, Argentine, Peru, Paraguay, Uruguay, etc.

"American" steamer; see Wrecks, 1880.

American Association FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, resembling the British Association, held its first meeting at Philadelphia, 20 Sept. 1848; 28th, Saratoga, 27 Aug. 1879; 29th at Boston, 23-28 Aug. 1880; 30th at Cincinnati, 17 Aug. 1881.

American Institute of Instruction, incorporated in Massachusetts, 1831. Meets annually in various cities for educational discussion. Francis Wayland was its first president.

American Organ, a free-reed keyed wind instrument, resembling the harmonium, with important differences; the principle was discovered, about 1835, by a workman employed by Alexandre of Paris. The invention was taken to America, where instruments were made by Mason & Hamlin, of Boston, about 1860.

Americanisms: a dictionary of these expressions compiled by John R. Bartlett, and first published in 1848; reprinted, 1859; revised ed. 1878.

Americanists, a name assumed by some persons devoted to the study of the archaeology, ethnology, etc., of North and South America, who held their first international congress at Nancy in July, 1875; one at Luxembourg, Sept. 1877; at Brussels, Sept. 1879; at Madrid, autumn 1881.

Amethyst, the ninth stone upon the breastplate of the Jewish high-priest, 1491 B.C. It is of a rich violet color. One worth 200 rix-dollars, having been rendered colorless, equalled a diamond in lustre, valued at 18,000 gold crowns.—De Boot. Amethysts discovered at Kerry, in Ireland, in 1775.

Amherst College, at Amherst, Mass. Founded 1821.

Amiens, a city in Picardy (N. France); the cathedral was built in 1220. It was taken by the Spanish, 11 March, and retaken by the French, 25 Sept. 1597. The preliminary articles of the peace between Great Britain, Holland, France, and Spain, were signed in London by lord Hawkesbury and M. Otto, on the part of England and France, 1 Oct. 1801; and the definitive treaty was subscribed at Amiens, on 27 March, 1802, by the marquis of Cornwallis for England, Joseph Bonaparte for France, Azara for Spain, and Schimmelpenninck for Holland. War was declared again in 1803. After a conflict, in which the French were defeated, 27 Nov. 1870, the German general, Von Goeben, entered Amiens, 28 Nov.

Ammonia, the volatile alkali, mainly produced by the decomposition of organic substances. Its name is ascribed to its having been procured from heated camels' dung near the temple of Jupiter Ammon in Libya. The discovery of its being a compound of nitrogen and hydrogen is ascribed to Joseph Priestley in 1774. By the recent labors of chemists both the oxide of the hypothetical metal ammonium, and ammonium amalgam, have been formed; and specimens of each were shown at the Royal Institution in 1856 by Dr. A. W. Hofmann, who has done very much for the chemical history of ammonia.

Ammonites, descended from Ben-Ammi, the son of Lot (1897 B.C.), invaded Canaan and made the Israelites tributaries, but were defeated by Jephthah, 1143 B.C. They again invaded Canaan, intending to put out the right eye of all they subdued; but Saul overthrew them, 1095 B.C. They were afterwards many times vanquished; and Antiochus the Great took Rabbah their capital, and destroyed the walls, 198 B.C.—Josephus.

Amnesty (a general pardon after political disturbances, etc.) was granted by Thrasybulus, the Athenian patriot, after expelling the thirty tyrants, 403 B.C. Acts of amnesty were passed after the civil war in 1651, and after the two rebellions in England in 1715 and 1745.—After his victorious campaign in Italy, Napoleon III. of France granted an amnesty to all political offenders, 17 Aug. 1859.—President Lincoln issued a proclamation of conditional amnesty to persons engaged in the rebellion, 8 Dec. 1863. President Johnson issued amnesty proclamations on 29 May, 1865; 7 Sept. 1867; 4 July, 1868; and 25 Dec. 1868. This last was a proclamation of complete amnesty to all persons who had participated in the rebellion; a contest arose as to its validity. A rather sweeping amnesty bill was passed by Congress, 10 April, 1871, and another on 22 May, 1872, which restored the political privileges of all participants in the rebellion, with certain exceptions, covering the cases of only about 600 persons.—An amnesty for political offences was granted by the emperor of Austria at his coronation as king of Hungary, 8 June, 1867.—An amnesty association on behalf of the Fenians was active in Britain, Oct. 1873.—2245 French communists pardoned by decree, published 17 Jan. 1879; many others during the year. A general amnesty for political offences passed by the chamber (333-140) 21 June, 1880.

Amoaful, near Coomassie, W. Africa. After a severe conflict, 31 Jan. 1874, the Ashantees were defeated at this place by sir Garnet Wolseley. Captain Buckle was killed, and about 20 officers and 200 men were wounded. The 42d Highland regiment was very energetic.

Amoy, see China, 1853-5.

Amphictyonic Council, asserted traditionally to have been established at Thermopylae by Amphictyon, for the management of all affairs relative to Greece. This celebrated council, composed of twelve of the wisest and most virtuous men of various cities of Greece, began 1498 [1113, Clinton] B.C., and existed 31 B.C. Its immediate office was to attend to the temples and oracles of Delphi. Its calling on the Greek states to punish the Phocians for plundering Delphi caused the Sacred wars, 595-586, and 356-346 B.C.

"Amphion," a British frigate of 38 guns, blown up while riding at anchor in Plymouth Sound, and the whole of her crew then on board, consisting of more than two hundred and fifty persons, officers and men, perished, 22 Sept. 1796.

Amphipolia, Macedon (N. Greece). A city founded here by the Athenians, 437 B.C.; was seized by Brasidas the Spartan, 424; both he and the Athenian general, Cleon, were killed in a fruitless attempt at the capture of the city by the Athenians, 422.

Amphitheatres, round or oval buildings said to have been first constructed by Curio, 76 B.C., and by Julius Cæsar 46 B.C. In the Roman amphitheatres the people witnessed the combats of gladiators with wild beasts, etc. They were generally built of wood, but Statilius Taurus made one of stone, under Augustus Cæsar; see Coliseum. The amphitheatre of Vespasian (capable of holding 87,000 persons) was built between A.D. 70 and 80; and is said to have been a fortress in 1312. The amphitheatre at Verona was next in size, and then that of Nîmes.

"Amphitrite," THE SHIP; see Wrecks, 30 Aug. 1833.

Amputation, in surgery, was greatly aided by the invention of the tourniquet by Morel, a French surgeon, in 1674, and of the flap-method by Lowdham of Exeter, in 1679.

Amsterdam (Holland). The castle of Amstel was commenced in 1100; the building of the city in 1203. Its commerce was greatly increased by the decay of that of Antwerp after 1609. The exchange was built in 1634, and the noble stadthouse in 1648; the latter cost three millions of guilders, then a large sum. It was built upon 13,659 piles. Amsterdam surrendered to the king of Prussia, when that prince invaded Holland, in favor of the stadtholder, in 1787. The French were admitted without resistance, 18 Jan. 1795. The Dutch government was restored in Dec. 1813. A crystal palace for an industrial exhibition was opened by prince Frederick of the Netherlands, 16 Aug. 1864. The canal, from Amsterdam to the North Sea, was inaugurated by the king 1 Nov. 1876. A new university was opened Dec. 1877.

Amulets, or CHARMS, employed from the earliest times. Amulets were made of the wood of the true cross about 328.

Amyl, a chemical alcohol radical (first isolated by professor Edward Frankland in 1849).

Amylene, a colorless, very mobile liquid, first procured by M. Balard of Paris, in 1844, by distilling fusel oil (potato-spirit) with chloride of zinc. The vapor was employed instead of chloroform first, by Dr. Snow, in 1856. It has since been tried in many hospitals here and in France. The odor is more unpleasant than chloroform, and more vapor must be used.

Anabaptists, those who baptize at full age and reject infant baptism; see Baptists. The name was first given to Thomas Münzer, Storck, and other fanatics who preached in Saxony in 1521, and excited a rebellion of the lower orders in Germany, which was quelled with bloodshed in 1525. A similar insurrection took place in Westphalia, headed by Matthias, 1533; and, after his assassination, by John Boccold of Leyden, who was crowned "king of Sion" in Münster, 24 June, 1534. Münster was taken in June, 1535; and John was executed 13 Feb. 1536. Several anabaptists were executed in England in 1535, 1538, and 1540. On 6 Jan. 1661, about eighty anabaptists in London appeared in arms, headed by their preacher, Thomas Venner, a wine-cooper. They fought desperately, and killed many of the soldiers brought against them. Their leader and sixteen others were executed 19 and 21 Jan.—Annals of England.

Anacreontic Verse, of the bacchanalian strain, named after Anacreon of Teos, the Greek lyric poet, whose odes are much prized. He is said to have been choked by a grapestone in his eighty-fifth year, about 514 B.C. His odes have been frequently translated; Thomas Moore's version was published in 1800.

Anæsthetics, see Opium, Chloroform, Ether, Amylene, Kerosolene, Nitrous Acid. Intense cold has been also employed in deadening pain.

Anadolia (Asia Minor) comprises the ancient Lycia, Caria, Lydia, Mysia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, and Phrygia (which see).

Anagrams, formed by the transposition of the letters of a word or sentence (as army from Mary), are said to have been made by ancient Jews, Greeks, etc. On the question put by Pilate to our Saviour, "Quid est veritas?" (What is truth?) we have the anagram, "Est vir qui adest" (The man who is here); from "Horatio Nelson" is "Honor est a Nilo" (Honor is from the Nile).

Analysts, Society of Public, founded by professor Redwood, Dr. Dupré, and others, 7 Aug. 1874; see Adulteration.

Anastatic Printing, see Printing, 1841.

Anathema, the sentence of excommunication (1 Cor. xvi. 22), used by the early churches, 365; see Excommunication. Pope Pius IX. propounded a series of anathemas, Feb. 1870.

Anatomy (Greek, cutting up). The human body was studied by Aristotle about 350 B.C., and became a branch of medical education, under Hippocrates, about 420 B.C. Erasistratus and Herophilus first dissected the human form, having been previously confined to animals; it is said that they practised upon the bodies of living criminals about 300 and 293 B.C. Galen, who died A.D. 193, was a great anatomist. In England the schools were long supplied with bodies unlawfully exhumed from graves; and, until 1832, the bodies of executed murderers were ordered for dissection.* Pope Boniface VIII. forbade the dissection of dead bodies, 1297.—The first anatomical plates, designed by Titian, were employed by Vesalius, about 1538. Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, and Michael Angelo studied anatomy. The great discoveries of Harvey were made in 1616. William and John Hunter were great anatomists: William died 1783, and John, 1793. Quain's and Wilson's large anatomical plates were published 1842, and Bourguery's great work by Jacob, 1830–55. Comparative anatomy has been treated systematically in the present century by Cuvier, Owen, Müller, Huxley, and others.—The anatomy of plants has been studied since 1680; see Botany.

Anchorites, see Monachism.

Anchors were invented by the Tuscans.—Pliny. The second tooth, or fluke, was added by Anacharsis the Scythian (592 B.C.).—Strabo. Anchors said to have been forged in England A.D. 578. The Admiralty anchor was introduced about 1841. Improved anchors were made by Pering and Rodgers about 1828; by Pater, 1838; by Costell, 1848; by Trotman, 1853; and by several other persons. Trotman's is attached to the queen's yacht the Fairy. The anchors of the Great Eastern are of enormous size. Acts for the proving and sale of chain cables and anchors were passed in 1864 and 1871.

Ancient Buildings. A society for their protection from injudicious restoration, etc., was established in

* By 32 Hen. VIII. c. 42 (1540), surgeons were granted four bodies of executed malefactors for "anatomies," which privilege was extended in following reigns; but in consequence of the crimes committed by resurrection-men in order to supply the surgical schools (robbing churchyards and even committing murder, see Burking), a new statute was passed in 1832, which abated the ignominy of dissection by prohibiting that of executed murderers, and made provision for the wants of surgeons by permitting, under certain regulations, the dissection of persons dying in workhouses, etc. The act also appointed inspectors of anatomy, regulated the schools, and required persons practising anatomy to obtain a license. It repeated the clauses of the act of 1828, which directed the dissection of the body of an executed murderer.

1877; lord Houghton, prof. S. Colvin, Thomas Carlyle, and many eminent artists, members.

Ancient Concerts, or "King's Concerts," London. "The Concert of Antient Music" was established in 1776 by the earls of Sandwich and Exeter, and others. Sir Henry Bishop was sole conductor from 1843 to 1848, when the concerts ceased.

Ancient History commences in the Holy Scriptures 4004 B.C., and in the history of Herodotus about 1687 B.C.; and is considered to end with the destruction of the Roman empire in Italy, A.D. 476. Modern history begins with Mahomet, A.D. 622, or with Charlemagne, 768.

Ancient Monuments in Britain. Bills for their preservation (especially of prehistoric) have been brought into parliament in vain. One by sir John Lubbock, read second time, 7 March, 1877, was withdrawn; again read second time, 19 Feb. 1878; read second time in the lords, 11 March, 1880.

Ancients, see Councils, French.

Ancona, an ancient Roman port on the Adriatic. The mole was built by Trajan, 107. After many changes of rulers (Lombards, Saracens, Greeks, and Germans), Ancona was annexed to the papal states in 1582. It was taken by the French, 1797; retaken by the Austrians, 1799; reoccupied by the French, 1801; restored to the pope, 1802. It was occupied by the French in 1832, evacuated in 1838; and, after an insurrection, was bombarded and captured by the Austrians, 18 June, 1849. The Marches (comprising this city) rebelled against the papal government in Sept. 1860. Lamoricière, the papal general, fled to Ancona after his defeat at Castellardo, but was compelled to surrender himself, the city, and the garrison, on 29 Sept. The king of Sardinia entered soon after.

Ancyra, now Angora or Engour, a town in ancient Galatia, Asia Minor. Councils were held here, 314, 358, 375. It was taken by the Persians, 616; by the Saracens, 1085; by the Crusaders, 1102. Near this city, on 28 July, 1402, Timour or Tamerlane defeated and took prisoner the sultan Bajazet, and is said to have conveyed him to Samarcand in a cage.

Andalusia (S. Spain), a province once part of the ancient Lusitania and Bética. The name is a corruption of Vandallia, it having been held by the Vandals from 419 to 429, when it was acquired by the Visigoths. The latter were expelled by the Moors in 711, who established the kingdom of Cordova, and retained it till 1236.

Andaman Islands, in the Bay of Bengal. The inhabitants are dwarfs, and in the lowest state of barbarism. At Port Blair, on South Island, made a penal settlement for the Sepoy rebels in 1858, the earl of Mayo, viceroy of India, was assassinated by Shere Alee, a convict, 8 Feb. 1872, when going on board the Glengow.

Andernach, Rhenish Prussia, once an imperial city. Near here, the emperor Charles I., while attempting to deprive his nephews of their inheritance, was totally defeated by one of them, Louis of Saxony, 8 Oct. 876.

Andersonville Prison. An open pen near Andersonville, Georgia, in which prisoners of war were first lodged by the Confederates, 15 Feb. 1864. In one year 41,882 prisoners were received, of whom 12,926 died of starvation and want of proper care. Henry Wirz, one of the prison officers, was hanged 10 Nov. 1865, for his cruelty to prisoners under his charge.

Andes, CORDILLERA DE LOS, the great mountain system of South America.

Chimborazo, perpetually snowclad, was ascended by Alexander von Humboldt to the height of 19,286 feet, 23 June, 1802; by Boussingault and Hall, 19,695 feet, 16 Dec. 1831; by Edward Whymper, 20,545 feet, 3 Jan.; and 20,489 feet, 3 July, 1880. Chimborazo, volcanic; ascended by Edward Whymper, 19,000 feet, 18 Feb. 1880.

He also first ascended Antisana, 19,260 feet, 10 March; and Cayambe, 19,200 feet, 4 April, 1880.
[All these mountains are in Ecuador.]

Andorra, a small republic in the Pyrenees, bearing the title of "the valleys and sovereignties of Andorra," was made independent by Charlemagne about 778, certain rights being reserved to the bishop of Urgel. The feudal sovereignty, which long appertained to the counts of Foix, reverted to the French king, Henry IV., in 1589; but was given up in 1790. On 27 March, 1806, an imperial decree restored the old relations between Andorra and France. The republic is now governed by a council elected for four years; but the magistrates are appointed alternately by the French government and the Spanish bishop of Urgel, to both of whom tribute is paid. The population is about 10,000. Andorra, though neutral, was attacked by the Carlists in Sept. 1874.

André's Execution, see United States, 1780.

Andrew, St., said to have been martyred by crucifixion, 30 Nov. 69, at Patrae, in Achaia. His festival was instituted about 359. The Royal Society's anniversary is kept on St. Andrew's day. The Russian Order of St. Andrew was instituted in 1698 by Peter I. For the British order, see Thistle.

Andrew's, St. (E. Scotland), made a royal burgh in 1140. Here Robert Bruce held his first parliament in 1309; and here Wishart was burned by archbishop Beaton, 1545, who himself was murdered here in 1546. The university was founded in 1411 by bishop Wardlaw. The cathedral (built 1159-1318) was destroyed by a mob, excited by a sermon of John Knox, June, 1559. Sir R. Sibbald's list of the bishops commences with Killach, 872. The see became archiepiscopal in 1470, ceased soon after 1689, but was reinstituted in 1844. See Bishops.

Andrussov, PEACE OF (30 Jan. 1667), between Russia and Poland, for 13 years, with mutual concessions, although the latter had been generally victorious.

Anemometer (Greek, ἀνέμος, the wind), a measure of the strength and velocity of the wind, was invented by Wolfius, in 1709. The extreme velocity was thought by Dr. Lind to be 93 miles per hour. Osler's and Whewell's anemometers were highly approved of in 1844. "Robinson's anemometer is the simplest and best."
—Buchan, 1867.

Aneroid, see Barometer.

Angel, a gold coin, impressed with an angel, weighing four pennyweights, valued at 6s. 8d. in the reign of Henry VI., and at 10s. in the reign of Elizabeth, 1562. The angelot, a gold coin, value half an angel, was struck at Paris when held by the English, 1431.—Wood.

Angelic Knights OF ST. GEORGE. This order is said to have been instituted by Constantine, who died 337. The Angelici were instituted by the emperor Angelus Comnenus, 1191.—The Angelicæ, an order of nuns, founded at Milan by Louisa Torelli, 1534.

Angers (W. Central France), the Roman Juliomagus, possessing an amphitheatre; afterwards Andegavum, the capital of Anjou (which see). It was frequently besieged, and many councils were held in it between 453 and 1448, relating to ecclesiastical discipline.

Angerstein Gallery, see National Gallery.

Anglesey, called by the Romans Mona (N. Wales), the seat of the Druids, who were massacred in great numbers when Suetonius Paulinus ravaged the isle, 61. It was conquered by Agricola in 78; occupied by the Normans, 1090; and, with the rest of Wales, annexed by Edward I. in 1284. He built the fortress of Beaumaris in 1295. The Menai suspension bridge was erected 1818-25, and the Britannia tubular bridge 1849-50.

Anglican Church, see Church of England.

Angling. Allusion is made to it in the Bible; Amos iv. 2 (787 B.C.).

Opplan wrote his "Halioutics," a Greek epic poem on Fishes and Fishing, about A.D. 198.

In the book on "Hawkyng and Huntynge," by Juliana Berners, or Barnes, prioress of Sopwith, near St. Albans, "em-printed at Westmestre by Wynkyn de Worde" in 1496, is "The treatise of fyshyng with an Angler."

Izaak Walton's "Compleat Angler" was first published in 1653.

Anglo-American Association, to cultivate more cordial relations between Great Britain and the United States, established 25 Jan. 1871.

Anglo-Continental Society, founded in 1853 to diffuse the principles of the Church of England abroad:
20th anniversary kept at St. Paul's, 27 Oct. 1874.

Anglo-Saxons, or ANGLES, derive their name from a village near Sleswick, called Anglen, whose population (called Angli by Tacitus) joined the first Saxon freebooters. East Anglia was a kingdom of the heptar-chy founded by the Angles, one of whose chiefs, Uffa, assumed the title of king, 571; the kingdom ceased in 792; see Britain. Cædmon paraphrased part of the Bible in Anglo-Saxon about 680; a translation of the gospels was made by abbot Egbert, of Iona, 721; of Boethius, Orosius, etc., by Alfred, 888. The Anglo-Saxon laws were printed by order of government in 1840.

A professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford was founded by Dr.
Richard Rawlinson in 1795; one at Cambridge by Dr. Joseph Bosworth in 1867.

Anglo-Turkish Convention, see Turkey, 4
June, 1878.

Angola (S.W. Africa), settled by the Portuguese soon after the discovery by Diego Cam, about 1484. Loanda, their capital, was built 1578.

Angora, see Ancyra.

Angoulême (the Roman Iculisma), capital of the province of Angoumois, Central France, W., was a bishopric in 260. Angoulême became an independent country about 856; was united to the French crown in 1308; was held by the English, 1360 to 1372, in the reign of Edward III. The count of Angoulême became king of France as Francis I. in 1515.

Angria's Fort, see India, 1756.

Anguilla, Snake Island, West Indies, settled by the British, 1666. Valuable deposits of phosphate of lime were found here in 1859.

Anhalt, House or, in Germany, deduces its origin from Barentobaldus, who made war upon the Thurin-gians in the sixth century. In 1606 the principality was divided among the four sons of Joachim Ernest by the eldest, John-George. Thus began the four branches
—Anhalt-Dessau (descended from John-George); Zerbst, extinct, 1793; Plotschau, or Coethen, extinct, 1847; and Bernburg, extinct, 1863 (the last duke died without issue, 22 Aug. 1863). The princes of Anhalt became dukes in 1809. Anhalt is an hereditary constitutional monarchy (by law 19 Feb. 1872); population in 1871, 203,437;
in 1875, 213,565.

Anhalt joined the North German Confederation, 18 Aug. 1866.
Leopold (born Oct. 1, 1794) became duke of Anhalt-Dessau, 9
Aug. 1817, and of Anhalt-Bernburg, 30 Aug. 1863; died 22
May, 1871.

Frederick, duke of Anhalt, born 29 April, 1831.

Heir: Leopold, born 18 July, 1855.

Anholt, ISLAND OF, Denmark, was taken possession of by England, 18 May, 1809, in the French war, on account of Danish cruisers injuring British commerce. The Danes made a fruitless attempt to regain it, 27 March, 1811.

Aniline, an oily alkaline body, discovered in 1826 by Unverdorben among the products of distillation of indigo. From benzole (which see) Bechamp, in 1856, obtained it by successive treatment with concentrated nitric acid and reducing agents. The scientific relations of aniline have been carefully examined by several chemists, especially by Dr. A. W. Hofmann. It was long known to yield a series of colored compounds, but it was not till 1856 that Mr. W. H. Perkin showed how a violet oxidation-product (mauve) could be applied in dyeing.
Aniline is now manufactured on a large scale for the commercial production of "mauve" and "magenta"

(rosaniline) (which see), and several other coloring matters—aniline blue, 1861; violet, 1863; "night" green, etc. After much litigation, the patent of Simpson, Maule, & Nicholson, for aniline colors, was annulled by the house of lords, 27 July, 1866. See Alizarine.

Animal Magnetism (to cure diseases by sympathetic affection) was introduced by father Hehl, a Jesuit, at Vienna, about 1774, and had its dupes in France and England about 1788-89. Hehl for a short time associated with Mesmer, but they soon quarrelled. Mr. Perkins (who died in 1799) invented "Metallic Tractors for collecting, condensing, and applying animal magnetism;"
but Drs. Falconer and Haygarth put an end to his pretensions by performing many wonders with a pair of wooden tractors. — Brande. See Mesmerism. Animal magnetism disproved by commissions of the French Academy of Sciences, 1837-8; investigation closed as of a "dead letter," 1840.

Animalcules. Leeuwenhoek's remarkable micro-scopical discoveries were published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society for 1677; in his "Arcana Nature," at Leyden, 1696. The great works of Ehrenberg, of Berlin, on the Infusorial Animalcules, etc., were issued 1838-57. Pritchard's "Infusoria," ed. 1861, is valuable; and Mr. W. Savile Kent's "Manual of Infu-soria" is an excellent summary of our present knowledge of animalcules (1881). The Rev. W. H. Dallinger and Dr. Drysdale, by their unwearied, continuous microscopical observations of bacteria and other low forms of life, have greatly increased our knowledge, 1878-8.

Animals. CRUELTY TO. Mr. Martin, M.P., as a senator, zealously labored to repress it; and in 1824 the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was instituted. Its new house in Jermyn Street, London, was founded 4 May, 1869. It opposed vivisection in 1860, in unison with a French society, and in Oct.
1878, offered premiums for improved trucks for conveying cattle. A jubilee congress of this and similar societies met in London 17 June, 1874. Convictions obtained by the society 1835 to June, 1876, 28,209; see Vivisection.
Mr. Martin's act was passed 1822, and similar acts were passed in 1827, 1835, 1837, 1849, and 1854. Dogs were forbidden to be used for draught in 1839.

"Fellowship of Animals' Friends," organized about 10 July, 1879; earl of Shaftesbury, president.
The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals
(Henry Bergh, president) was organized in New York city, 1865. It has branches and auxiliary societies in many of the chief cities of the Union, and nearly all the states have passed laws forbidding cruelty to animals, under penalty of fine and imprisonment.

Anjou, a province, W. France, was taken by Henry II. of England from his brother Geoffrey, in 1156; their father Geoffrey Plantagenet, count of Anjou, having married the empress Matilda in 1127. It was taken by king John from Philip of France in 1205; was recon-quered by Edward III.; relinquished by him at the peace of Brétigny in 1360, and given by Charles V. his brother Louis with the title of duke. The university was formed in 1349.

1360. Louis I., duke, invested by the pope with the dominions of Joanna of Naples, 1381; his invading army destroyed by the plague, 1383; he dies, 1384.

1384. Louis II., his son, receives the same grant, but is also unsuccessful.

Louis III., adopted by Joanna; dies 1434.

1434. Rognier or René le bon (a prisoner) declared king of Naples, 1435; his daughter, Margaret, married Henry VI. of England, 1445; he was expelled from Anjou by Louis XI., 1474, and his estates confiscated.

Francis, duke of Alençon, brother to Henry III. of France, became duke of Anjou; at one time he favored the Protestants, and vainly offered marriage to Elizabeth of England, 1581-82; died 1584.

Anjou of BEAUGE, BATTLE OF, between the English and French; the latter commanded by the dauphin of France, 22 March, 1421. The English were defeated: the duke of Clarence was slain by sir Allan Swinton, a Scotch knight, and 1500 men perished on the field; the earls of Somerset, Dorset, and Huntington were taken prisoners. Beaugé was the first battle that turned the tide of success against the English.

Annam, or ANAM, an empire of Asia, to the east of India, comprising Tonquin, Cochiu China, part of Cambodia, and various islands in the Chinese Sea; said to have been conquered by the Chinese, 234 B.C., and held by them till A.D. 263. In 1406 they reconquered it, but abandoned it in 1428. After much anarchy, bishop Adran, a French missionary, obtained the friendship of Louis XVI. for his pupil Gia-long, the son of the nominally reigning monarch, and with the aid of a few of his countrymen established Gia-long on the throne, who reigned till his death, in 1821, when his son became king. In consequence of the persecution of the Christians, war broke out with the French, who defeated the army of Annam, 10,000 strong, about 22 April, 1859, when 500 were killed. On 3 June, 1862, peace was made; three provinces were ceded to the French, and toleration of the Christians granted. An insurrection in these provinces against the French, begun about 17 Dec. 1862, was suppressed in Feb. 1863. Ambassadors sent from Annam with the view of regaining the ceded provinces arrived at Paris in Sept. 1863; had no success. Three provinces were annexed to the French empire by proclamation, 25 June, 1867. Several native Christians were massacred by order of a bonze, July, 1868.

By a treaty concluded 15 March, 1874, at Saigon, the independence of the king of Annam was recognized by France, the ports were opened to commerce, and toleration of the Christian religion was secured.

King: Hoang-Nam succeeded his father, Thicutri, 1847.

Anno Domini, A.D., the year of our Lord, of Grace, of the Incarnation, of the Circumcision, and of the Crucifixion (Trabecationis). The Christian era commenced 1 Jan. in the middle of the 4th year of the 194th Olympiad, the 753d year of the building of Rome, and in 4714 of the Julian period. This era was invented by a monk, Dionysius Exiguus, or Denys le Petit, about 532. It was introduced into Italy in the sixth century, and ordered to be used by bishops by the council of Chelsea, in 816; but was not generally employed for several centuries. Charles III. of Germany was the first who added "in the year of our Lord" to his reign, in 879. It is now held that Christ was born Friday, 5 April, 4 B.C.

"Annoyance Juries," of Westminster, chosen from the householders in conformity with 27 Eliz. c. 17, 1585, were abolished in 1861.

Annual Register, a summary of the history of each year (beginning with 1758, and continued to the present time), was commenced by R. & J. Dodsley. (Edmund Burke at first wrote the whole work, but afterwards became only an occasional contributor.—Prior.) A similar work, "Annuaire des Deux Mondes," begun in Paris, 1850.

Annals, a name given to richly bound volumes, containing poetry, tales, and essays, by eminent authors, illustrated by engravings, published annually, at first in Germany, and also in London in 1823. The duration of the chief of these publications is here given:

Forget-me-not (Ackerman's)	1823-48
Friendship's Offering	1824-44
Literary Souvenir (first as "the Graces")	1824-34
Amulet	1827-34
Keepsake	1828-66
Hood's Comic Annual	1830-42

Annuities or PENSIONS. In 1512, 20*l.* a year were given to a lady of the court for services done; and 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for the maintenance of a gentleman, 1536. 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* deemed competent to support a gentleman in the study of the law, 1554. An act was passed empowering the government to borrow one million sterling upon an annuity of fourteen per cent., 4-6 Will. & Mary, 1691-3. This mode of borrowing soon afterwards became general among governments. An annuity of 14*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* per annum, accumulating at 10 per cent., compound interest, amounts in 100 years to 20,000*l.* The Government Annuities and Life Assurances Act was passed in 1864, for the benefit of the working classes; since it enables the government to grant deferred annuities for sums payable in small instalments. Works on annuities were published by De Witt, 1671; De Moivre, 1724; Simpson, 1742; Tables by Price, 1792; Milne, 1815; Jones, 1843; Farre, 1864; Institute of Actuaries, 1872.

Annuity Tax: a tax levied to provide stipends for ministers in Edinburgh and Montrose, and which caused much disaffection, was abolished in 1860, and other provisions made for the purpose. These, however, proved equally unpalatable, and its abolition was provided for by an act passed 9 Aug. 1870.

Annunciation of the VIRGIN MARY, 25 March, Lady-day (which see), a festival commemorating the tidings brought to Mary by the angel Gabriel (Luke i. 26): its origin is referred to the fourth or fifth century. The religious order of the Annunciation was instituted in 1232, and the military order, in Savoy, by Amadeus, count of Savoy, about 1362, in memory of Amadeus I., who had bravely defended Rhodes against the Turks, 1355. New statutes, 1869.

Anointing, an ancient ceremony observed at the inauguration of priests, kings, and bishops. Aaron was anointed as high-priest, 1491 B.C.; and Saul as king, 1095 B.C. Alfred the Great is said to have been the first English king anointed, A.D. 871; and Edgar of Scotland, 1098.—The religious rite is derived from the epistle of James v. 14, about A.D. 60. Some authors assert that in 550, dying persons, and persons in extreme danger of death, were anointed with consecrated oil, and that this was the origin of extreme unction (one of the sacraments of the Roman Catholic church).

Anonymous Letters, see Threatening Letters.

Anorthoscope, a new optical apparatus, described by Dr. Carpenter in 1868. In it distorted figures lose their distortion when put into rapid motion.

Antalcidas, PEACE OF. In 387 B.C. Antalcidas the Lacedæmonian made peace with Artaxerxes of Persia, on behalf of Greece, but principally in favor of Sparta, giving up the cities of Ionia to the king.

Antarctic Pole, the opposite to the north, or arctic pole; see Southern Continent.

Antediluvian History, Gen. iv., v., vi. According to the tables of Mr. Whiston, the number of people in the ancient world previous to the Flood reached to 549,755 millions in the year of the world 1482.

Anthems. Hilary, bishop of Poitiers, and St. Ambrose composed them about the middle of the fourth century.—Lenglet. They were introduced into the church service in 386.—Baker. Ignatius is said to have introduced them into the Greek, and St. Ambrose into the Western, church. They were introduced into the Reformed churches in queen Elizabeth's reign, about 1560.

ENGLISH ANTHEM-WRITERS: 1520-1625, Tye, Tallis, Byrd, Gibbons; 1650-1720, Humphrey, Blow, Purcell, Croft, Clarke; 1730-1845, Greene, Boyce, Hayes, Kent, Battishill, Attwood, Walmisley.

Anthology, Greek, a collection of popular epigrams and small poems written by Archilochus, Sappho, Simonides, Meleager, Plato, and others, between 680 and 95 B.C. They were collected by Meleager, Philippos, Agathias, and others, especially by Maximus Planudes, a monk in the fourteenth century A.D., and a MS. collection by Constantine Cephalas was found at Heidelberg by Salmasius in 1606; and published by Brunck 1772-6. Translations have been made by Bland, Merivale, and others.

Anthracene, see Alizarine.

Anthracite Coal, first used as fuel by two Connecticut blacksmiths named Gore, 1768-9. First used for domestic purposes by judge Jesse Fell of Wilkes-barre, Pa., 1808.

Anthropological Society (ἀνθρωπος, Greek for man), for promoting the science of man and mankind, held its first meeting on 24 Feb. 1863; Dr. James Hunt, president, in the chair. The Anthropological Review first came out in May, 1863. The Anthropological and Ethnological Societies were amalgamated 17 Jan. 1871, and styled "The Anthropological Institute," sir John Lubbock president. The London Anthropological Society established 1873, ceased 1875. An Anthropological congress at Paris was opened 16 Aug. 1878.

Antietam Creek, near Sharpsburg, Md., U. S. Here was fought a terrible battle on 17 Sept. 1862, between the Federals under gen. McClellan and the Confederates under Lee. After his victory at Bull Run or Manassas, 30 Aug., Lee invaded Maryland, and was immediately followed by McClellan. On 16 Sept. Lee was joined by Jackson, and at five o'clock next morning the conflict began. About 100,000 men were engaged, and the battle raged till night. Victory rested with neither side; but at night both armies held their original positions, and the Confederates retreated and repossessed the Potomac on 18 and 19 Sept. The loss of the Federals was estimated at 12,469; of the Confederates, 9000 or 10,000. Antietam is commonly called a drawn battle, and, so far as the issue on the field is concerned, it was so; but in its effect it served all the purposes of a victory for the National troops; Lee was compelled, by his failure to overcome McClellan, to abandon an invasion of the North, which threatened very serious harm to the National cause. His offensive campaign was brought to an end, and he was compelled to retire to his defensive lines in Virginia. A national cemetery here was dedicated 17 Sept. 1867.

Antigua, a West Indian island, discovered by Columbus in Nov. 1493; settled by the English in 1632, made a bishopric, 1842. Population in 1874, 85,542.

Governor, sir B. C. C. Pine, 1689; hon. H. T. Irving, 1872; hon. Geo. Berkeley, 1874-80.

Antilles, or CARIBBEAN ISLANDS, an early name of the West Indies, which see.

Anti-masonry. A political movement in the United States. It had its origin in the alleged abduction of William Morgan, of Batavia, N. Y., 1826. Anti-masonic party organized in western New York, 1827; national convention, 1831, nominated Wirt and Ellmaker for president and vice-president of the United States. Ritner, anti-masonic candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, elected 1835.

Antimony, a white brittle metal, compounds of which were early known. It was, and is still, used to blacken both men's and women's eyes in the East (2 Kings ix. 30, and Jer. iv. 30). Mixed with lead it forms printing-type metal. Basil Valentine wrote on antimony about 1410.—Priestley. See Brucé Case.

Antinomians (from the Greek ἀντι, against, and νόμος, law), a name given by Luther (in 1539) to John Agricola, who is said to have held "that it mattered not how wicked a man was if he had but faith." (Opposed to Rom. iii. 28, and v. 1, 2.) He retracted these doctrines in 1540. The Antinomians were condemned by the British parliament, 1648.

Antioch, now ANTAKIAH, Syria, built by Seleucus, 300 B.C. (after the battle of Ipsus, 301), acquired the name "Queen of the East." Here the disciples were first called Christians, A.D. 42 (Acts xi. 26). Antioch was taken by the Persians, 540, by the Saracens about 638; recovered for the Eastern emperor, 966; lost again in 1086; retaken by the Crusaders in June, 1098, and made capital of a principality, 1099; and held by them till June, 1268, when it was captured by the sultan of Egypt. It was taken from the Turks in the Syrian war, 1 Aug. 1832, by Ibrahim Pacha, but restored at the peace. Antioch suffered much by an earthquake, and about 1800 persons were killed, 3 April, 1872.—The Enca of Antioch is much used by the early Christian writers of Antioch and Alexandria; it placed the Creation 5492 years B.C. 31 councils were held at Antioch, 252-1161.

Antipodes. Plato is said to be the first who thought it possible that antipodes existed (about 388 B.C.). Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, legate of pope Zachary, is said to have denounced a bishop as a heretic for maintaining this doctrine, A.D. 741. The antipodes of England lie to the southeast of New Zealand, near Antipodes Island.

Anti-popes, rival popes elected at various times, especially by the French and Italian factions, from 1305 to 1439. In the article Popes, the anti-popes are printed in italics.

Antiquaries. A college of antiquaries is said to have existed in Ireland, 700 B.C. The annual International Congress of Prehistoric Archaeology originated at La Spezia in 1865; meetings have been held since at Paris, Norwich, etc.

A society was founded by archbishop Parker, Camden, Stow, and others in 1572.—Spelman.

Application was made to Elizabeth for a charter, her death ensued, and her successor, James I., was far from favoring the design.

The "Antiquaries' Feast," mentioned by Ashmole, 3 July, 1659.

The Society of Antiquaries revived, 1707, received its charter of incorporation from George II., 2 Nov. 1751, met in Chancery Lane, 1763, apartments in Somerset House (granted 1776), occupied, 15 Feb. 1781, removed to Burlington House, 1874, first meeting 16 Jan. 1875. Memoirs entitled "Archæologia," first published in 1770, president, earl Stanhope, elected, 1846, died 24 Dec. 1875; succeeded by Frederic Ourry, by the earl of Carnarvon, 1878.

British Archaeological Association founded Dec. 1843.

Archæological Institute of Great Britain formed by a seceding part of the Association 1845.

Society of Antiquaries of Edinburgh founded in 1780.

Since 1845 many county archaeological societies have been formed in the United Kingdom.

The Society of Antiquaries of France (1814) began in 1806 as the Celtic Academy.

"The Antiquary," a magazine, began 1806.

Anti-Rent Riots, a series of disturbances, beginning about 1839, among the tenants of lands of patroons, or manorial owners, in the counties of Albany, Rensselaer, and several others, in New York. The trouble arose from the determination of these tenants to cease paying the dues exacted by the landlords under their old feudal tenure. Since 1847 the anti-rent controversy has been mostly in the form of lawsuits, and the course of the decisions has been in favor of the tenants.

Antisana, see Andes.

Anti-Trinitarians. Theodotus of Byzantium, at the close of the second century, is supposed to have been the first who advocated the simple humanity of Jesus. This doctrine, advocated by Arius about 318, spread widely after the Reformation, when it was adopted by Lælius and Faustus-Socinus; see Arians, Socinians, Unitarians.

Antium, maritime city of Latium, now Porto d'Anzio, near Rome, after a long struggle for independence, became a Roman colony, at the end of the great Latin war, 340-338 B.C. It is mentioned by Horace, and was a favorite retreat of the emperors and wealthy Romans, who erected many villas in its vicinity. The treasures deposited in the temple of Fortune here were taken by Octavius Cæsar during his war with Antony, 41 B.C.

Apocrypha. In the preface to the Apocrypha it is said, "These books are neyther found in the Hebrue nor in the Chaldee."—Bible, 1539. The history of the Apocrypha ends 135 B.C. The books were not in the Jewish canon, were rejected at the council of Laodicea about A.D. 366, but were received as canonical by the Roman Catholic church at the council of Trent on 8 April, 1546. Parts of the Apocrypha were admitted to be read as lessons by the church of England, by the 6th article, 1563. Many of these were excluded by the act passed 1871.

There are also Apocryphal writings in connection with the New Testament.

Apollinarists, followers of Apollinaris, a reader in the church of Laodicea, who taught (366) that the divinity of Christ was instead of a soul to him; that his flesh was pre-existent to his appearance upon earth, and was sent down from heaven, and conveyed through the Virgin; that there were two sons, one born of God, the other of the Virgin, etc. These opinions were condemned by the council of Constantinople, 381.

Apollo, the god of the fine arts, medicine, music, poetry, and eloquence, had many temples and statues, particularly in Greece and Italy. His most splendid temple at Delphi was built 1263 B.C.; see Delphi. His temple at Daphne, built 434 B.C., during a period in which pestilence raged, was burned A.D. 362, and the Christians were accused of the crime.—Lenglet. The statue of Apollo Belvedere, discovered at Antium, in Italy, in 1503, was purchased by pope Julius II., who placed it in the Vatican.

Apollonicon, an elaborate musical instrument constructed on the principle of the organ (keys and barrel), was invented by Messrs. Flight & Robson, of St. Martin's lane, Westminster, and exhibited by them first in 1817.—Timbs.

Apologies FOR CHRISTIANITY were addressed by Justin Martyr to the emperor Antoninus Pius about 139, and to the Roman senate about 164. Other apologies were written by Quadratus, Aristides, and other early fathers of the church.

Apostles (Greek, ἀπόστολος, one sent forth). Twelve were appointed by Christ, A.D. 31—viz., Simon Peter and Andrew (brothers), James and John (sons of Zebedee), Philip, Nathanael (or Bartholomew), Matthew (or Levi), Thomas, James the Less (son of Alphæus), Simon the Canaanite and Jude or Thaddeus (brothers), and Judas Iscariot. Matthias was elected in the room of Judas Iscariot, A.D. 33 (Acts i.); and Paul and Barnabas were appointed by the Holy Spirit, A.D. 45 (Acts xiii. 2).

* Some ascribe the authorship to Cerinthus, the heretic, and others to John, the presbyter, of Ephesus. In the first centuries many churches disowned it; and in the fourth century it was excluded from the sacred canon by the council of Laodicea, but was again received by other councils, and confirmed by that of Trent, held in 1546 et seq. Although the book had been rejected by Luther, Michael s, and others, and its authority questioned in all ages, from the time of Justin Martyr (who wrote his first "Apology for Christians" in A.D. 139), yet its canonical authority is still almost universally acknowledged.

Apostles' Creed, erroneously attributed to the apostles, is mentioned as the Roman creed by Rufinus (died about 410). Irenæus, bishop of Lyons (died 202), gives a creed resembling it. Its repetition in public worship was ordained in the Greek church at Antioch, and in the Roman church in the eleventh century, whence it passed to the church of England.

Apostolical, see Canons and Fathers.

Apostolici, a sect, at the end of the second century, which renounced marriage, wine, flesh, &c. A second sect, founded by Sagarelli about 1261, wandered about, clothed in white, with long beard, dishevelled hair, and bare heads, accompanied by women called spiritual sisters, preaching against the growing corruption of the church of Rome, and predicting its downfall. They renounced baptism, the mass, purgatory, &c., and by their enemies were accused of gross licentiousness. Sagarelli was burned alive at Parma in 1300, and his followers were dispersed in 1307, and extirpated about 1404.

Apothecary (literally, a keeper of a storehouse). On 10 Oct. 1345, Edward III. settled sixpence per diem for life on Coursus de Gangeland, Apothecarius Londoni, for taking care of him during his severe illness in Scotland.—Rymer's Fœdera. See Pharmacy and Medical Council.

Apotheosis, a ceremony of the ancient nations of the world by which they raised their kings and heroes to the rank of deities. The deifying a deceased emperor was begun at Rome by Augustus, in favor of Julius Cæsar, 13 B.C.—Tillemont.

Appeal or ASSIZE OF BATTLE. By the old law of England, a man charged with murder might fight with the appellant, thereby to make proof of his guilt or innocence. In 1817 a young maid, Mary Ashford, was believed to have been violated and murdered by Abraham Thornton, who, on trial, was acquitted. In an appeal, he claimed his right by wager of battle, which the court allowed; but the appellant (the brother of the maid) refused the challenge, and the accused was discharged, 16 April, 1818. This law was struck off the statute-book, by 59 Geo. III. c. 46, 1819.

In 1631 lord Rea impeached Mr. David Ramsey of treason, and offered battle in proof; a commission was appointed, but the duel was prohibited by king James I.

Appeals. In the time of Alfred (869–901), appeals lay from courts of justice to the king in council; but being soon overwhelmed with appeals from all parts of England, he framed the body of laws which long served as the basis of English jurisprudence. The house of lords is the highest court of appeal in civil causes. Courts of appeal at the exchequer chamber, in error from the judgments of the superior and criminal courts, were regulated by statutes in 1830 and 1848. Appeals from English tribunals to the pope were first introduced about 1151, were long vainly opposed, and were abolished by Henry VIII. 1534; restored by Mary, 1554; again abolished by Elizabeth, 1559. A proposition for establishing an imperial court of appeal submitted to the house of lords by the lord chancellor Hatherly, 15 April; was referred to a select committee, 30 April, 1872. A similar proposition by lord chancellor Selborne, 13 Feb. 1873; see Privy Council, and Justices, Lord.

The jurisdiction of the house of lords as a court of appeal was abolished by the Judicature Act, 1873. The abolition was suspended in 1875; and a provisional court established, which first sat 8 Nov. 1875: present the lord chancellor, lord Coleridge, baron Bramwell, and justice Brett.

The house of lords was reconstructed as a court of final appeal by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act introduced by lord Cairns, 11 Feb., and passed 11 Aug. 1876.

Two lords of appeal were to be appointed; to be peers for life. Appeals may be heard during prorogation or dissolution of parliament.

The new Supreme Court of Appeal first sat 21 Nov. 1876.

Appenzell, a Swiss canton, threw off the supremacy of the abbots of St. Gall early in the fifteenth century, and became the thirteenth member of the Swiss confederation, 1513.

Appian Way, a Roman road made by Appius Claudius Cæcus while censor, 312 B.C.

Apples. Several kinds are indigenous to England; but those in general use have been brought at various times from the continent. Richard Harris, fruiterer to Henry VIII., is said to have planted a great number of the orchards in Kent; and lord Scudamore, ambassador to France in the reign of Charles I., planted many of those in Herefordshire. Ray reckons 78 varieties of apples in his day (1688). In 1866 there were 1500 varieties in the collection of the Royal Horticultural Society, many not worth cultivation.

Apportionment Act (for rents) passed 1 Aug. 1870.

Appraisers. The valuation of goods for another was an early business in England; and so early as 1283, by the statute of merchants, or of Acton-Burnel, "it was enacted that if they valued the goods of parties too high, the appraisers should take them at such price as they have limited." In 1845 their annual license was raised from 10s. to 40s.

Apprentices. Those of London were obliged to wear blue cloaks in summer and blue gowns in winter, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, 1558. Ten pounds was then a great apprentice fee. From twenty to one hundred pounds were given in the reign of James I.—Stow's Survey. The apprentice tax enacted 43 Geo. III. 1802. The term of seven years, not to expire till the apprentice was twenty-four years old, required by the statute of Elizabeth (1563), was abolished in 1814. An act for the protection of apprentices, &c., was passed in 1851. The apprentices of London have been, at times, very riotous; they rose in insurrection against foreigners on Evil May-day (which see), 1 May, 1517.

Appropriation Clause, of the Irish Tithe Bill of 1835, brought forward by lord John Russell, whereby any surplus revenue that might accrue by the working of the act was to be appropriated for the education of all classes of the people. The principle was adopted by the commons, but rejected by the lords in 1835 and 1836, and was abandoned.

Appropriations (property taken from the church) began in the time of William I. The parochial clergy, then commonly Saxons, were impoverished by the bishops and higher clergy (generally Normans) to enrich the monasteries possessed by the conqueror's friends. Where the tithes were so appropriated, the vicar had only such a competency as the bishop or superior thought fit to allow. Pope Alexander IV. complained of this as the bane of religion, the destruction of the church, and a poison that had infected the whole nation. Lay appropriations began after the dissolution of the monasteries, 1536.

Apricot, Prunus Armeniaca, from Asia Minor, said to have been first planted in England about 1540, by the gardener of Henry VIII.

April, the fourth month of our year, the second of the ancient Romans.

Apteryx (wingless), a bird, a native of New Zealand, first brought to this country in 1813, and deposited in the collection of the earl of Derby. Fossil specimens of a gigantic species of this bird (named Dinornis) were discovered in New Zealand by Mr. Walter Mantell in 1843 and since.

Apulia, a province in S. E. Italy. The people favored Hannibal, and were severely punished by the Romans at his retreat, 207 B.C. Apulia was conquered by the Normans, whose leader Guiscard received the title of duke of Apulia from pope Nicholas II. in 1059. After many changes of masters, it was absorbed into the kingdom of Naples in 1265.

Aquarii, a sect said to have been founded by Tatian in the second century, who forbore the use of wine even in the sacrament; during persecution they met secretly at night. For this they were censured by Cyprian (martyred, 258).

Aquarium, or AQUAVIVARIUM, a vessel containing water (marine or fresh) in which animals and plants may coexist, mutually supporting each other; snails being introduced as scavengers. In 1849 Mr. N. B. Ward succeeded in growing seaweeds in artificial sea-water; in 1850 Mr. R. Warington demonstrated the conditions necessary for the growth of animals and plants in jars of water; and in 1853 the glass tanks in the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, were set up by Mr. D. Mitchell. In 1854 Mr. Gosse published "The Aquarium." Mr. W. Alford Lloyd, late of Portland Road, London, who, by his enterprise in collecting specimens, did much to increase the value and interest of aquaria, has been much employed in erecting aquaria. The great aquarium (50 yards long and 12 wide) at the Jardin d'Acclimatation at Paris, was constructed under his direction in 1860. He also constructed the aquarium at Hamburg and others. That at Brighton was inaugurated by prince Arthur, 30 March, and publicly opened by the mayor, 10 Aug. 1872. That at the Crystal Palace was opened Jan. 1872.

The Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society was established 1874; the building at Westminster, planned by Mr. Wybrow Robertson and Mr. A. Bedford, was opened by the duke of Edinburgh, 22 Jan. 1876.

A woman surnamed "Zazel" permitted herself to be safely shot from a cannon (by a spring or other mechanical contrivance); summer of 1877, et seq.

Aquatint, see Engraving.

Aqueduct, an artificial watercourse on an inclined plane. Appius Claudius advised and constructed the first Roman aqueduct, as well as the Appian Way, about 312 B.C.* There are now some remarkable aqueducts in Europe: that at Lisbon is of great extent and beauty; that at Segovia has 129 arches; and that at Versailles is three miles long, and of immense height, with 242 arches in three stories. The stupendous aqueduct on the Ellesmere canal, in England (1007 feet in length, and 126 feet high) was completed by T. Telford, and opened 26 Dec. 1805. The Lisbon aqueduct was completed in 1738, and the Croton aqueduct, near New York, was constructed between 1837 and 1842. The aqueduct to supply Marseilles with water was commenced in 1830. An aqueduct to supply London with water from the Welsh lakes was proposed by Mr. J. F. Bateman in 1865.

Aquidaban (Paraguay). Here the war with Brazil was ended with the defeat and death of president Lopez, 1 March, 1870.

Aquila (S. Italy). Near here the Arragonese under the condottiere Braccio Forte-Braccio were defeated by the allied papal, Neapolitan, and Milanese army under Jacob Caldora, 2 June, 1424. Braccio, a wounded prisoner, refused to take food, and died, 5 June.

Aquileia (Istria), made a Roman colony about 180 B.C. and fortified A.D. 168. Constantine II. was slain in a battle with Constans, fought at Aquileia towards the close of March, 340. Maximus defeated and slain by Theodosius, near Agileia, 28 July, 388. Theodosius defeated Eugenius and Arbogastes, the Gaul, near Aquileia, and remained sole emperor, 6 Sept. 394. Eugenius was put to death, and Arbogastes died by his own hand, mortified by his overthrow. St. Ambrose held a synod here in 381. In 452 Aquileia was almost totally destroyed by Attila the Hun, and near it in 489 Theodoric and the Ostrogoths totally defeated Odoacer, the king of Italy.

Aquitaine, the Roman province Aquitania (S.W. France), conquered by the Romans 28 B.C.; by the Visigoths, A.D. 418; taken from them by Clovis in 507. Henry II. of England obtained it with his wife Eleanor, 1152. It was erected into a principality for Edward the Black Prince in 1362; but was annexed to France in 1370. The title of duke of Aquitaine was taken by the crown of England on the conquest of this duchy by Henry V. in 1418. The province was lost in the reign of Henry VI.

Arabia (W. Asia). The terms Petræa (stony), Felix (happy), and Deserta are said to have been applied to its divisions by Ptolemy, about A.D. 140. The Arabs claim descent from Ishmael, the eldest son of Abraham, born 1910 B.C., Gen. xvi. Arabia was unsuccessfully invaded by Gallus, the Roman governor of Egypt, 24 A.C. In A.D. 622, the Arabians under the name of Saracens, followers of Mahomet (born at Mecca, 570), their general and prophet, commenced their course of conquest; see Mahometanism. Arabia was conquered by the Ottomans 1518-39. The Arabs greatly favored literature and the sciences, especially mathematics, astronomy, and chemistry. The Koran was written in Arabic (622-632). The Bible was printed in Arabic in 1671; see Wahabees. The aggression of the Turks on the South Arabs excited jealousy in England, and was checked by the sultan, Nov. 1873.

Arabian Nights' Entertainments (or 1001 Tales) were translated into French by Galland, and published in 1704; but their authenticity was not acknowledged till many years after. The best English translation from the Arabic is that of Mr. E. W. Lane, published in 1839, with valuable notes and beautiful illustrations.

Arabic Figures (1, 2, 3, etc.), see Arithmetic. ARABIC NEWSPAPER, "Mar-âtu'l-Ahwal" ("Mirror of Passing Events"), published in London, end of 1876.

Arabic, a sect which sprang up in Arabia about 207, whose distinguishing tenet was, that the soul dies with the body, and will rise again with it.

Aragon, part of the Roman Tarraconensis, a kingdom, N.E. Spain, was conquered by the Carthaginians, who were expelled by the Romans about 200 B.C. It became an independent monarchy in A.D. 1035; see Spain.

Aram, the ancient name of Syria (which see).

Aranjuez (Central Spain), contains a fine royal palace, at which several important treaties were concluded. On 17 March, 1808, an insurrection broke out here against Charles IV. and his favorite, Godoy, the prince of peace. The former was compelled to abdicate in favor of his son, Ferdinand VII., 19 March.

Ararat, a mountain in Armenia (about 17,112 feet above the sea-level), on which Noah's ark is supposed to have rested, B.C. 2349, now termed by the Persians, Koh-i-Nuh (Noah's mountain); by the Armenians, Masis; by the Turks, Agri-Dagh.

It was ascended by Dr. Parrot, 27 Sept. 1829; by Major Stuart, 1856, and by others since. Mr. James Bryce, who ascended 11, 12 Sept. 1878, described the summit as a little plain of snow, silent and desolate, with a bright, green sky above; the view stern, green, and monotonous.

Araucania, a province in South America. Its inhabitants maintained almost unceasing war with the Spaniards from 1537 to 1773, when their independence was recognized. They are now nominally subject to Chili.

become a dignity above a priest. The appointment in these countries is referred to the eighth century. There are seventy-five archdeacons in England (1878). The archdeacon's court is the lowest in ecclesiastical polity, an appeal lies from it to the consistorial court, by 24 Henry VIII. (1532).

Archery is ascribed to Apollo, who communicated it to the Cretans.

- Ishmael "became an archer" (Gen. xxi. 20). B.C. 1800
- The Philistine archer overcame Saul (1 Sam. xxi. 3). 1006
- David commanded the use of the bow to be taught (2 Sam. i. 18). 1006
- Aster of Amphipolis, having been alighted by Philip, king of Macedonia, at the siege of Methone shot an arrow, on which was written "Aimed at Philip a right eye," which it put out, Philip drew back the arrow with these words "If Philip take the town, Aster shall be hanged," and kept his word. 363
- Archery introduced into England. previous to A.D. 440
- Harold and his two brothers were killed by arrows shot from the cross bows of the Norman soldiers at the battle of Hastings. 1066
- Richard I revived archery in England in 1180, and was himself killed by an arrow. 1189
- The victories of Crocy (1366), Poitiers (1356), and Agincourt (1415) were won chiefly by archery.
- Four thousand archers of the king surrounded the houses of parliament ready to shoot, pacified by the king, 31 Richard II.—Slow. 1397
- The citizens of London formed into companies of archers in the reign of Edward III., and into a corporate body by the style of "The Fraternity of St. George," 29 Henry VIII. 1530
- Roger Ascham's "Toxophilus, the School of Shooting," published. 1571
- Scottish Annual Arrow Meetings—a silver arrow shot for; articles agreed to. 14 May, 1673
- Royal company of archers, instituted by the marquess of Athol, as the king's body-guard for Scotland. 1676
- The long bow was six feet long, and the arrow three feet, the usual range from 300 to 600 yards. Robin Hood is said to have shot from 600 to 800 yards. The cross bow was fixed to a stock, and discharged with a trigger.
- The use of the long bow was taught in Kenyon College, Ohio, as early as 1833. The archery revival in America dates from the year 1877, the first club having been organized in that year in Oakland, California. [See Artillery Company, Toxophilites, etc.]

Archies, COURT OF, the most ancient consistory court, chiefly a court of appeal from inferior jurisdictions within the province of Canterbury; it derives its name from the church of St. Mary-le-Bow (Sancta Maria de Arcibus), London, where it was formerly held, and whose top is raised on stone pillars built archwise.—Cowell. Appeals from this court lie to the judicial committee of the privy council, by statute, 1832. The judge, Dr. Stephen Lushington (appointed in 1828), resigned 1 July, 1867; succeeded by sir Robert J. Phillimore, who resigned 1875. Lord Penzance then became judge in the court of arches.

Archons. When royalty was abolished at Athens, in memory of king Codrus, killed in battle, 1044 or 1068 B.C., the executive government was vested in elective magistrates called archons, whose office continued for life. Medon, eldest son of Codrus, was the first archon. The office was limited to ten years, 752 B.C., and to one year 688 B.C.

ARCOLE (Lombardy), the site of battles between the French under Bonaparte and the Austrians under field-marshal Alvinzi, fought 14-17 Nov. 1796. The Austrians lost 18,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners, four flags, and eighteen guns. The French lost about 15,000, and became masters of Italy. In one contest Bonaparte, in most imminent danger, was rescued by the impetuosity of his troops.

AROOT (East Indies). This city (founded 1716) was taken by col. Clive, 31 Aug. 1751; was retaken, 1758, but again surrendered to col. Coote, 10 Feb. 1760; besieged and taken by Hyder Ali, when the British under col. Baillie suffered severe defeat, 31 Oct. 1780. Aroot has been subject to Great Britain since 1801; see India.

ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS, see Northwest Passage and Franklin's Expedition. On the German Arctic society applying to the German government, a committee of 18 professors was appointed, who in their report recommended that no more expeditions should be sent out; but that stations should be established for scientific observations; 1876.

London Central Arctic Committee, formed to promote another expedition, 7 July, 1879.

ARDAGH, an ancient prelate in Ireland, founded by St. Patrick, who made his nephew, Mell, the first bishop, 454. This see, held with Kilmore since 1742, was held in commendam with Tuam (which see). It was united with Kilmore in 1839, and with Elphin in 1841.

ARDAHAN, a town in Turkish Armenia, ceded to Russia by the Berlin treaty, 18 July, 1878.

ARDERT and AGHADOO, bishoprics in Ireland long united: the former was called the bishopric of Kerry; Ert presided in the fifth century. William Fuller, appointed in 1603, became bishop of Limerick in 1667, since when Ardert and Aghadoo have been united to that prelate. Near the cathedral an anchorite tower, 120 feet high, the loftiest and finest in the kingdom, suddenly fell, 1770.

ARDREA, see Field of Cloth of Gold.

AREIOPAGUS, or AREOPAGOS, a Greek tribunal, said to have heard causes in the dark, because the judges should be blind to all but facts, instituted at Athens about 1507 B.C.; also ascribed to Cecrops, 1566. The name is derived from the Greek ἄρειος πᾶγος, the hill of Mars, through the tradition that Mars was the first who was tried for the murder of Ilalirrhottius, who had violated his daughter Alcippe. The powers of this court were enlarged by Solon, about 594 B.C., and diminished by Pericles, 461 B.C. Paul preached on Mars' hill A.D. 52 (Acts xvii.).

Areometer, or Aræometer (from Greek ἀραιός, thin), an instrument for measuring the density and specific gravity of fluids. Baumé described his areometer in 1768. Others have been made by Nicholson and Mohr.

Arequipa, Peru, founded by Pizarro, 1539; was destroyed by an earthquake, 13 Aug. 1868.

Arethusa, see Naval Battles, 1778, and Chichester.

Arezzo, near the ancient Arretium, or Aretinum, an Etrurian city, which made peace with Rome for 30 years, 308 B.C., was besieged by the Galli Senones, about 283 B.C., who defeated the Roman army Metellus sent to its relief—a disgrace avenged signally by Dolabella. Arezzo was an ancient bishopric: the cathedral founded in 1277. It is renowned as the birthplace of Mæcenas, Petrarch, Vasari, and other eminent men. Michael Angelo was born in the vicinity.

Argentine (or LA PLATA) Confederation (S. America), 14 provinces (Buenos Ayres, one). This country was discovered by the Spaniards in 1515, settled by them in 1553, and formed part of the viceroyalty of Peru till 1778, when it became that of Rio de la Plata. It joined the insurrection in 1811, and became independent in 1816. It was at war with Brazil from 1826 to 1828 for the possession of Uruguay, which became independent as Montevideo; and at war with France from 1838–40. Population, in 1869, 1,877,490. Arginussæ, isles between Lesbos and Asia Minor; near these Conon and the Athenian fleet defeated the Spartan admiral Callicratidas, 406 B.C.

Argonautic Expedition, 1263 B.C. (1225, Clinton), said to have been undertaken by Jason to avenge the death of his kinsman Phryxus, and to recover the treasures seized by his murderer, Æëtes, king of Colchis.

The ship in which Phryxus had sailed to Colchis having been adorned with the figure of a ram, led to the fiction that the journey was to recover the golden fleece. This is the first naval expedition on record. Many kings and heroes accompanied Jason, whose ship was called Argo, from its builder.

Argonauts of St. Nicholas, military knights; an order founded by Charles III. of Naples, 1382.

Argos, the most ancient city of Greece, said to have been founded either by Inachus, 1856 B.C., or his son, Phoroneus, 1807, received its name from Argus, the fourth of the Inachidae, 1711 B.C.

Argyle (W. Scotland), bishopric, of founded about 1200, Evaldus being the first bishop; the diocese, previously united with Dunkeld, ended 1688. Argyle and the Isles is a post-revolution bishopric, 1847; see Bishoprics.

Argyll Rooms, Oxford Street, London, opened for musical and other entertainments early in the nineteenth century; re-erected by Nash, 1818; held by the Philharmonic Society, 1813–30. Here appeared Spohr, 1820; Weber, 3 April, 1826; and Mendelssohn, 25 May, 1829. While held by M. Chabert, the fire-king, the building was burned down, 5, 6 Feb. 1830. The new building was eventually converted into shops.

Arian, or ARYAN (in Sanskrit signifying noble, warlike), a term now frequently applied to the hypothetical Indo-Germanic family of nations, including the Greek, Roman, and Teutonic races.

Arians, followers of Arius of Alexandria, who preached against the divinity of Christ, about 315, and died in 336. The controversy was taken up by Constantine, who presided at the council of Nice, June to Aug. 325, when the Arians were condemned; but their doctrine long prevailed. It was favored by Constantius II. 341; and carried into Africa by the Vandals in the fifth century, and into Asia by the Goths. Serretus published his treatise against the Trinity, 1531, and was burned, 1553. Leggatt, an Arian, was burned at Smithfield in 1614; see Athanasian Creed, Socinians, and Unitarians.

Arica, Peru, destroyed by an earthquake, and inundated by waves of the sea, 13 Aug. 1868.

Arikerä, near Seringapatam. Here lord Cornwallis defeated Tippoo Sahib, 15 May, 1791.

Aristotelian Philosophy: the most comprehensive ever devised by man. Aristotle was born at Stageira (hence termed the Stageirite), 304 B.C.; was a pupil of Plato from 364 to 347; became preceptor of Alexander, son of Philip of Macedon, in 342; and died in 322. He divided the circle of knowledge into metaphysics and logic, physics (including part of the science of mind), and ethics. His philosophy was too much exalted by the schoolmen during the middle ages, and too much depreciated after the Reformation. His works on natural science contain a vast collection of facts and an extraordinary mixture of sound and chimerical opinions. To him is attributed the assertion that nature abhors a vacuum, an opinion now maintained by eminent modern philosophers.

An Aristotelian Society, for the systematic study of philosophy, was founded in the spring of 1890; Dr. Shadworth H. Hodgson, president.

Arithmetic is said to have been introduced from Egypt into Greece by Thales, about 600 B.C. The Chinese used the abacus, or suwpan, at an early period. It is asserted that the ancient Hindus adopted a system having ten as a basis.

The oldest treatise upon arithmetic is by Euclid (7th, 8th, and 9th books of his "Elements"). . . . about A.C. 300
The sexagesimal arithmetic of Ptolemy was used. . . . A.D. 130
Diophantus of Alexandria was the author of thirteen books of arithmetical questions (of which six are now extant). . . . about 156

Notation by nine digits and zero (Arabic figures), known at least as early as the sixth century in Hindostan; introduced from thence into Arabia, about 900; into Spain, about 990; into France, by Gerbert, 991; into England, probably in the fourteenth or fifteenth century.

The date in Caxton's "Mirrour of the World," Arabic characters, is 1480

Arizona, a territory of the United States, originally part of New Mexico, was organized 24 Feb. 1863; capital, Tucson. It was colonized by the Jesuits in the seventeenth century.

Ark. Mount Ararat (which see) is venerated from a belief of its being the place on which Noah's Ark rested, after the universal deluge, 2349 B.C.; see Gen. vi., vii. Some assert Apamea, in Phrygia, to be the spot; and medals have been struck there with a chest on the waters, and the letters NOE, and two doves; this place is 300 miles west of Ararat. The Ark of the Covenant, made by Moses to contain the two tables of the law, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xxv.), was placed in Solomon's temple, 1004 B.C. (1 Kings viii.).

Arkadi, a Greek blockade-runner during the Cretan insurrection, was destroyed by the Turkish vessel Izedia, off Crete, 19 Aug. 1867, after at least 23 successful voyages.

Arkansas, originally part of Louisiana, ceded by Spain to France, 1763; and purchased by the United States in 1803; was made a territory, 1819; and a state 1836; seceded from the Union 6 May, 1861; national authority re-established, and a loyal government organized 1864; readmitted to representation in Congress, 1868. Several battles were fought in this state in 1862 and 1863. Pop. 1880, 802,564. Capital, Little Rock.

Arklow (in Wicklow), where a battle was fought between the insurgent Irish, amounting to 81,000, and a small regular force of British, which signally defeated them, 10 June, 1798. The town was nearly destroyed by the insurgents in May previous.—Native gold was discovered in Arklow in Sept. 1795.—Phil. Trans. vol. 86.

Arles (Arelatum, from the Celtic Ar-lait, near the waters), S. France (said to have been founded 2000 B.C.), a powerful Roman city, was made capital of the kingdom of Provence by Boson in A.D. 879; and of the kingdom of Arles or Transjuran Burgundy by Rodolph II. in 933. He was succeeded by Conrad I. 937; and by Rodolph III. 993; who at his death, 1032, transmitted his kingdom to the emperor Conrad II. After various changes, it was annexed to France in 1486. Many councils (314-1275) were held at Arles; the most celebrated in 314, when British bishops were present.

Armada, THE INVINCIBLE, collected and equipped by Philip II., king of Spain, for the subjugation of England. The following particulars are taken from Morant's historical account (accompanying Pine's engravings of the tapestries formerly in the house of lords), printed 1789:

It consisted of 132 ships (besides caravels), 3165 cannon, 8766 sailors, 2088 galley-slaves, 21,855 soldiers, 1355 volunteers (noblemen, gentlemen, and their attendants), and 150 monks, with Martin Alarco, vicar of the Inquisition—the whole under the command of the duke of Medina-Sidonia. 1587
The English fleet under lord Charles Howard, sir Francis Drake, and sir John Hawkins, ready for sea, and three armies on land. Dec. "
The Armada sailed from Lisbon; soon after dispersed by a storm. 19 May, 1588 Recollected, entered the Channel off Cornwall. 19 July " Suffered in a series of engagements (the sharpest on 25 July). 21-7 July, " Dispersed by fire-ships sent into the midst. 28 July, "
Many vessels sunk or taken by the English. 29 July, "
The remainder retreated northward to Spain, suffering much loss by severe storms. Aug. and Sept. "
Computed Spanish loss, 35 ships; 13,000 men.
The queen attended a most solemn thanksgiving at St. Paul's. 24 Nov. "
An annual thanksgiving sermon was endowed by Mr. Chapman, who died 1616; it was preached at St. Mary-le-Bow. 12 Aug. 1877

Armagh, N. Ireland, of which it was the metropolis from the fifth to the ninth century, the seat of the first ecclesiastical dignity in Ireland, founded by St. Patrick, its first bishop, about 444, and said to have built the first cathedral, 450. Six saints of the Roman calendar have been bishops of this see. In the king's book, by an extent taken 15 James I., it is valued at 400*l.* sterling a year; and until lately was estimated at 15,000*l.* per annum. The see was reconstituted (see Pallium) in 1151.—Beaton. Armagh was ravaged by the Danes on Easter-day, 852, and by O'Neil in 1564.

Armagnacs, a political party in France, followers of the duke of Orleans, murdered by the Burgundians, 23 Nov. 1407, derived their name from his father-in-law, the count of Armagnac. About 3500 of this party were massacred at Paris in June, 1418, by their opponents, the followers of the duke of Burgundy.

Armed Neutrality, the confederacy against England, formed by Russia, Sweden, and Denmark, 1780; ended, 1781; renewed, and a treaty ratified in order to cause their flags to be respected by the belligerent powers, 16 Dec. 1800. The principle that neutral flags protect neutral bottoms being contrary to the maritime system of England, the British cabinet remonstrated, war ensued, and Nelson and Parker destroyed the fleet of Denmark before Copenhagen, 2 April, 1801. This event, and the murder of the emperor Paul of Russia, led to the dissolution of the Armed Neutrality.

Armenia, Asia Minor. Here Noah is said to have resided when he left the ark, 2347 B.C. Armenia, after forming part of the Assyrian, Median, and Persian empires, became subject to the Greek kings of Syria, after the defeat of Antiochus the Great, 190 B.C. The Romans established the kingdoms of Armenia Major and Minor, but their influence over them was frequently interrupted by the aggressions of the Parthians. In all their political troubles the Armenians have maintained the profession of Christianity, and their church is governed by patriarchs, not subject to Rome. Since 1715 an Armenian convent has existed at Venice, where books on all subjects are printed in the Armenian language.

Armenian Era commenced on 9 July, 552; the ecclesiastical year on 11 Aug. To reduce this last to our time, add 551 years and 221 days; and in leap-years subtract one day from 1 March to 10 Aug. The Armenians used the old Julian style and months in their correspondence with Europeans.

Armillary Sphere, an astronomical instrument composed of brass circles disposed in such a manner that the greater and lesser circles of the sphere may be seen in their natural position and motion. It is said to have been invented by Eratosthenes about 255 B.C., and was employed by Tycho Brahe and others.

Arminians, or REMONSTRANTS, derive their former name from James Arminius (or Harmensen), a Protestant divine of Leyden, Holland (died 19 Oct. 1609); the latter name from his followers having presented a Remonstrance to the states-general in 1610. They separated from the Calvinists, objecting to their views respecting predestination, etc. Their doctrines were condemned in 1619 at the synod of Dort (which see), they were exiled till 1625. The Calvinists were sometimes styled Gomarists, from Gomar, the chief opponent to Arminius. James I. and Charles I. favored the Arminian doctrine.

Armor. That of Goliath is described (about 1063 B.C.) 1 Sam. xvii. 5. Skins and padded hides were early used, and brass and iron armor, in plates or scales, followed. The body armor of the Britons was skins of wild beasts, exchanged, after the Roman conquest, for the well-tanned leathern cuirass.—Fursus. Hengist is said to have had scale armor, A.D. 449.

Armorial Bearings became hereditary in families at the close of the twelfth century. They were employed by the Crusaders, 1100. The lines to denote colors in arms, by their direction or intersection, were invented by Columbiere in 1639. The armorial bearings of the English sovereigns are given under the article England. Armorial bearings were taxed in 1798, and again in 1806. The tax produced 64,515*l.* in the year ending 31 March, 1806; 1872, 64,228*l.*; 1876, 83,527*l.*; 1878, 83,104*l.*; 1879, 81,854*l.* The tax is now 2*l.* 2*s.*; if not on carriages, it is 1*l.* 1*s.* annually (1880). Sir Bernard Burke's "General Armory," 1876, contains the arms of above 65,000 British families.

Armorica, now Brittany, N. France, was conquered by Julius Cæsar, 56 B.C. Many Gauls are said to have retired there and preserved the Celtic tongue, A.D. 584; see Britany.

Arms. The club was the first offensive weapon; then followed the mace, battle-axe, pike, spear, javelin, sword and dagger, bows and arrows. Pliny ascribes the invention of the sling to the Phœnicians; see articles on the various weapons throughout the volume.

Arms, see Armorial Bearings and Heraldry.

Arms Bills, for the repression of crime and insurrection in Ireland, were passed 1807, 1810, 1823, 1829, and 15 Oct. 1831. The guns registered under the last act at the close of the first year scarcely amounted to 3000, and the number was equally small of all other kinds of arms. The new Arms bill, passed 22 Aug. 1843, has been since renewed, but was not rigidly enforced till 1867. Another Arms bill has been passed by the commons entitled "An act to amend the law relating to the carrying and possession of arms, and for the preservation of public peace in Ireland," to last till 1 June, 1886; royal assent, 21 March, 1881; see Ireland.

Armstrong Gun, see under Cannon.

Army. Ninus and Semiramis had armies amounting to nearly two millions of fighting-men, 2017 B.C. The first guards and regular troops as a standing army were formed by Saul, 1093 B.C.—Ezerbius. The army of Xerxes invading Greece is said to have been 1,700,000 foot and 80,000 horse, 480 B.C. One of the first standing armies of which we have any account is that of Philip of Macedon. The army which Darius opposed to Alexander the Great (333 B.C.) is set down as between 750,000 and a million. The first standing army which existed as such, in modern times, was maintained in France by Charles VII. in 1445. The chief European nations have had in their service the following armies: Spain, 150,000 men; Great Britain, 310,000; Prussia, 250,000; Turkey, 450,000; Austria, 500,000; Russia, 560,000; and France, 1,000,000. Estimated number in Europe in 1863, 6,000,000 soldiers, 1,000,000 horses, 11,000 guns. The European powers are still increasing their armies.

Army, Barrists, mainly arose in the reign of Charles II. in 1661, in consequence of the extinction of feudal tenures. The first five regiments of British infantry were established between 1633 and 1680. James II. established several regiments of dragoon guards (1685-8). In 1685 the army consisted of 7000 foot and 1700 cavalry. Standing armies were introduced by Charles I. in 1638: they were declared illegal in England, 31 Car. II. 1679; but one was then gradually forming, which was maintained by William III., 1689, when the Mutiny Act was passed. Grose's "History of the British Army" was published in 1801; see Regiments, Militia, and Volunteers.

ARMY OF OCCUPATION. By treaty, signed 20 Nov. 1815, the allied powers established the boundaries of France, and stipulated for the occupation of certain fortresses by foreign troops for three years. The departure of the German army of occupation from France began about 20 Sept. 1871; completed 16 Sept. 1873.

ARMY, UNITED STATES. The standing army of the United States may be said to have begun with the organization of the War Department, 7 Aug. 1789. The army in 1790 was 1200 strong; in 1791, 900 men were added. In 1798, in view of war with France, a provisional 10,000 men was authorized, which allowed number was the next year enlarged to about 40,000 regulars and as many volunteers. Some officers were appointed and men raised; but the danger passed away, and the standing army was in 1802 fixed at about the old force. During the war of 1812 the army was increased; 25,000 regulars were voted; and in Jan. of that year, 50,000 volunteers were authorized. At the peace of 1815 the army was disbanded. In 1831 a peace establishment was organized. The Florida war lasted from 1835 to 1842, and required a force increased by regulars and militia. At the beginning of the Mexican war (May, 1846), the regular army was 7244 strong, gen. Taylor having with him in Texas 3554. During that war, 29,000 regulars were enlisted and 50,000 volunteers employed. After the war the army was reduced to its previous strength. On 15 April, 1861, the first levy against the rebellion was made by the call for 75,000 volunteers. On 3 May, 42,000 more volunteers were called out for three years or the war. On 22 July, Congress authorized the president to call for 500,000 volunteers for any proper term, and on 25 another force of 500,000 was permitted. The actual number of the United States arrivals in the field, Aug. 1862, was 1,135,416, of which the regular army was 43,014. Up to the beginning of 1863 the whole number of volunteers sent into the field was 1,276,246. The maximum strength of the army was fixed by the act of 28 July, 1866, at 75,882 rank and file; and by successive reductions its strength has been brought down to 2153 commissioned officers and 25,000 enlisted men. As at present organized, the army includes 1 general, 1 lieutenant-general, 3 major-generals, and 6 brigadier-generals. The actual strength is very nearly the maximum allowed by law. By act of Congress, 15 Aug. 1876, the maximum strength of the army was fixed at 25,000 enlisted men.

Arogee, Abyssinia. Here sir Robert (afterwards lord) Napier defeated the Abyssinians, who lost about 700 killed and wounded, 10 April, 1868. The British had 20 wounded.

Aromatics. Acron of Agrigentum is said to have been the first who caused great fires to be made, and aromatics to be thrown into them, to purify the air, by which means he put a stop to the plague at Athens, 429 B.C.

Arpad Dynasty, see Hungary.

Arpinum (now Arpino, S. Italy), the birthplace of Cicero, 8 Jan. 106 B.C.; many remains still bear his name.

Arquebus, see Fire-arms.

Arques (N. France). Near here the league army, commanded by the duc de Mayenne, was defeated by Henry IV. 21 Sept. 1589.

Arracan, a province of N.E. India. Arracan, the capital, captured by the Burmese, 1783, was taken from them by gen. Morrison, 1 April, 1825. The subjugation of the province followed, 1826.

Arraignment consists in reading the indictment by the officer of the court, and calling upon the prisoner to say whether he is guilty or not guilty. Formerly, persons who refused to plead in cases of felony were pressed to death by weights placed upon the breast. A person standing mute was declared convicted by an act passed 1772; but in 1827 the court was directed to enter a plea of "not guilty" in such cases; see Mute.

Arras (N.E. France), the country of the ancient Atrebatæ, the seat of a bishop since 390. Here a treaty was concluded between the king of France and duke of Burgundy, when the latter abandoned his alliance with England, 21 Sept. 1435. Another treaty was concluded by Maximilian of Austria with Louis XI. of France, whereby Burgundy and Artois were given to the dauphin as a marriage portion, 23 Dec. 1482. — Velly. Arras was held by the Austrians from 1493 till 1640, when it was taken by Louis XIII.

Array. On 23 Dec. 1324, Edward II. directed the bishop of Durham to make "arraier" his men of arms, horse and foot, and cause them to proceed to Portsmouth; thence to proceed to the war in Gascony. — Rymer's Fœdera. Hallam says that this was the earliest commission of array that he could find, and that the latest was dated 1557. The attempt of Charles I. to revive commissions of array in 1642, founded on a statute of Henry IV., was strenuously opposed as illegal.

ARREST FOR DEBT. The persons of peers, members of parliament, etc., are protected from arrest; see Ambassadors, Debt, Ferrars' Arrest.

Clergymen performing divine service privileged, 50 Edw. III. 1375
 Seamen privileged from debts under 20*l*. by 30 Geo. III. 1786
 Barristers are privileged from arrest while going to, attending upon, and returning from court, on the business of their clients.

By stat. 29 Car. II. no arrest can be made, nor process served, upon a Sunday; this law was extended by Will. III.

Vexatious arrests prevented by act, May, 1733. Prohibited for less than 10*l*. on process, 1779; and for less than 20*l*. July, 1827

Arrests for less than 10*l*. were prohibited on mesne process in Ireland, in June, 1829

Statute abolishing arrest for debt on mesne process, except in cases wherein there is ground to show that the defendant designs to leave the country, 2 Vic. Aug. 1838
 By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, the power of imprisonment even upon final process that is judgment debts, is abolished if the sum does not exceed 20*l*. exclusive of costs, 1844; and by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the judge has no power to punish, except in case of fraud or contempt of court. 1846
 By the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act, absconding debtors owing 20*l*. and upwards are liable to arrest. 1851

Arrest for debt practically abolished, with certain exceptions, by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62. 1869 see Debt.

The state of New York was the first of the United States to abolish the law of arrest for debt, 1831. The other states have followed in the same course at various times.

Arretium, see Arezzo.

Arsacidæ, a Parthian dynasty, began with Arsaces about 250 B.C., and ended with Artabanus, killed in battle with Artaxerxes, the founder of the Sassanidæ, A.D. 226.

Arsenal, a great military or naval repository; see Woolwich. The arsenals of the United States government within the rebel states, with the exception of Fortress Monroe, passed into the hands of the rebels at their secession. Those maintained by the government in 1864 were as follows:

Arsenal.	State.	Post-office.
Kennebec	Maine	Augusta.
Springfield (arm'y).	Massachusetts.	Springfield.
Watertown	Massachusetts.	Watertown.
Champlain	Vermont.	Vergennes.
Watervliet	New York.	West Troy.
New York	New York.	New York.
Alleghany	Pennsylvania.	Pittsburgh.
Frankford	Pennsylvania.	Bridesburg.
Pikesville	Maryland.	Pikesville.
Washington	Dist. Columbia.	Washington.
Fortress Monroe.	Virginia.	Old Point Comfort.
St. Louis	Missouri.	St. Louis.
Leavenworth	Kansas.	Leavenworth.
Detroit	Michigan.	Dearbornville.
Benicia	California.	Benicia.

The 37th Congress, at its second session, passed an act to establish three additional national arsenals at Columbus, O.; Indianapolis, Ind.; and Rock Island, Ill.

Arsenians, partisans of Arsenius, patriarch of Constantinople, who excommunicated the emperor Michael Paleologus for blinding his colleague the young John Lascaris, 1261, and was deposed 1264.

Arsenic, a steel-gray colored brittle mineral, extremely poisonous, known in early times. Brandt, in 1735, made the first accurate experiments on its chemical nature. The heinous crimes committed by its means induced the legislature to enact regulations for its sale, 1851. In 1858 Dr. A. S. Taylor asserted that green paper-hangings and dresses prepared from arsenic are injurious to health.

Arson, punished with death by the Saxons, still remained a capital crime on the consolidation of the laws in 1827 and 1837. By the act of 1861 it is punishable by penal servitude for life and minor degrees of imprisonment. William Anthony was convicted of arson, having set many houses on fire, for the sake of obtaining the reward for giving alarm, 13 Dec. 1871.

In some states of the Union the law remains the same as in England; others make the setting fire to an inhabited house punishable by imprisonment for life. There are various degrees of arson, and minor punishments for minor degrees of the offence.

Arsoof (Syria). At a battle here Richard I. of England, commanding the Christian forces, reduced to 30,000, defeated Saladin's army of 300,000 Saracens and other infidels, on 6 Sept. 1191. Ascalon surrendered, and Richard marched towards Jerusalem, 1192.

Art Act, facilitating the public exhibition of works of art (lent to the president of the privy council), passed April, 1866; see Arts, Exhibitions, and National Portrait Gallery.

Artemis, a Greek goddess; called by the Romans Diana, which see.

Artemisium, a promontory in Eubœa, near which indecisive conflicts took place between the Greek and Persian fleets for three days, 480 B.C. The former retired on hearing of the battle of Thermopylæ.

Artesian Wells (from Artesia, now Artois, in France, where they frequently occur) are formed by boring through the upper soil to strata containing water which has percolated from a higher level, and which rises to that level through the boring tube. The fountains in Trafalgar Square and government offices near have been supplied since 1844 by two of these wells (393 feet deep). At Paris the Grenelle well (1798 feet deep), was completed in 1841, after eight years of exertion, by M. Mulot, at an expense of about 12,000*l.*, and the well at Passy, which it is said will supply sufficient water for nearly 500,000 persons, was begun in 1855, and completed in 1860 by M. Kind. Messrs. Amos & Easton completed an artesian well for the Horticultural Society's garden in 1662, which yielded 880,000 gallons of water, at the temperature of 81° Fahr., in twenty-four hours. The well at Kissingen was completed in 1850. The most important artesian wells in the United States are those at St. Louis, Mo.; Charleston, S.C.; and Louisville, Ky. The St. Louis well was begun in 1849. The well is 2199 feet in depth, and yields 75 gallons of water per minute, but the water is unfit for general use. The well at Louisville is 2086 feet deep, and yields 330,000 gallons of clear, mineral water (resembling Kissingen water) daily. The well was begun April, 1857, and finished Aug. 1858. The Charleston well gave greater difficulty in construction than any other in the United States. Five attempts to bore it were made, the first in 1824. The existing well was begun in 1848. Depth of the well, 1102 feet; discharge, 1200 gallons per hour. There are many other artesian water wells in the United States, some of which are notable. Nearly all the salt and oil wells also are artesian. In 1855 the government sent out an expedition to bore artesian wells in New Mexico. Artesian wells are now common.

Arthur, king of Britain, said, mythically, to have lived A.D. 500-532.

The events of his life and the conflicts of the knights of his round table, as sung by the Welsh poets Taliesin, Ilywarch Hen, and Aneurin, were incorporated into his Latin history by Geoffrey of Monmouth, about 1115, who died 1154; put into French verse by Geoffrey Gaimar, and by Wace soon after; and set forth in an English poem called Brut by Layamon about 1205
Walter Map, by incorporating in his version the legend of the Holy Grail, introduced the religious element

about 1171
Sir Thomas Malory's "Morte d'Arthur," printed 1485
Lord Lytton's "King Arthur," published 1848
Tennyson's "Idylls of the King" 1859-69

Artichokes are said to have been introduced from the East into Western Europe in the fifteenth century, and to have reached England in the sixteenth.

Articles OF RELIGION. On 8 June, 1536, after much disputing, the English clergy in convocation published "Articles decreed by the king's highness" Henry VIII., who published in 1539 the "Statute of Six Articles," decreeing the acknowledgment of transubstantiation, communion in one kind, vows of chastity, private masses, celibacy of the clergy, and auricular confession. Offenders were punishable as heretics. In 1551 forty-two were prepared, and published in 1553. These were modified by the convocation, and reduced to THIRTY-NINE in Jan. 1563; and they received the royal authority and the authority of parliament in 1571. The Lambeth Articles, of a more Calvinistic character, proposed by archbishop Whitgift, were withdrawn in consequence of the displeasure of queen Elizabeth, 1595. One hundred and four articles were drawn up for Ireland by archbishop Usher in 1614; but in 1635 the Irish church adopted the English articles; see Perth Articles. The 39 Articles were ordered to be removed from the studies at Oxford in Nov. 1871.

Articles OF WAR were decreed in the time of Richard I. and John. Those made by Richard II. in 1385 appear in "Grose's Military Antiquities." The articles of war now in force are based upon an act, passed by William III. in 1689, to regulate the army about to engage in his continental warfare. In the United States, Congress only can make articles of war. These have been based on the English articles and Mutiny Act.

They were first adopted by the Continental Congress, July 30, 1775, and extended March 20, 1776; enacted again, with little alteration, April 10, 1806.

Artificers AND MANUFACTURERS. Their affairs were severely regulated by the statutes of laborers, 1349, 1350, 1360, 1549, and especially of 1562. They were prohibited from leaving England, and those abroad were outlawed, if they did not return within six months after the notice given them. A fine of 100*l.*, and imprisonment for three months, were the penalties for seducing them from these realms, by 9 Geo. II., 1736, and other statutes. The law was modified in 1824; see Artisans, Workmen, etc.

Artillery, a term including properly all heavy missiles, now restricted to cannon. A small piece was contrived by Schwartz, a German cordelier, soon after the invention of gunpowder, in 1330. Artillery was used, it is said, by the Moors of Algeiras, in Spain, in 1343; and according to some historians, at the battle of Crecy, in 1346, when Edward III. had four pieces of cannon. We had artillery at the siege of Calais, 1347. The Venetians employed artillery against the Genoese at sea, 1377.—Voltaire. Said to have been cast, with mortars for bomb-shells, by Flemish artists, in Sussex, 1543.—Rymer's Fadera. Made of brass, 1635; improvements by Browne, 1728; see Cannon, Bombs, Carronades (under Curran), Mortars, Howitzers, Petard, Rockets, Fire-arms. The Royal Artillery Regiment was established in the reign of Anne.

HONORABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY of London. Instituted in 1585, having ceased, was revived in 1610. It met for military exercise at the Artillery ground, Finsbury, where the London archers had met since 1498 (see Archery). In the civil war, 1642-3, the company took the side of the parliament, and greatly contributed towards its success. The company numbered 1200 in 1803, and 800 in 1861. Since 1842 the officers have been appointed by the queen. On the decease of the duke of Sussex in 1843, the prince consort became colonel and captain-general. He died 14 Dec. 1861, and the prince of Wales was appointed his successor. . . . 24 Aug. 1863

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION held its first annual meeting for shooting for prizes given by the queen and others, at Shoeburyness, July, 1866. Meetings were held and prizes distributed in July, 1866; July, 1867; Aug. 1868—78-79-80.

Arundel Castle (Sussex), built by the Saxons about 800. The duke of Norfolk enjoys the earldom of Arundel, as a feudal honor, by inheritance and possession of the castle, without any other creation. Philip Howard, son of the attained duke of Norfolk, was made earl of Arundel, by summons, as possessor of this castle, 1580. It was thoroughly repaired by a late duke at a vast expense.

Arundel Society, for the promotion of the knowledge of art, was established in 1848. It publishes facsimiles and photographs.

Arundelian Marbles, called also Oxford Marbles; one containing the chronology of ancient history from 1582 to 355 B.C., and said to have been sculptured 264 B.C. They consist of 37 statues, 128 busts, and 250 inscriptions, and were found in the isle of Paros, in the reign of James I., about 1610. They were collected by Mr. W. Petty, purchased by lord Arundel, and given by his grandson, Henry Howard, afterwards duke of Norfolk, to the university of Oxford in 1667; and are therefore called also OXFORD MARBLES. The characters of the inscriptions are Greek. A variorum edition of the inscriptions, by Maittaire, appeared in 1732, and a fine one by Chandler in 1763; and translations by Selden, 1628; by Prideaux, 1676; see Kidd's Tracts; and Purson's Treatise, 1789.

As, a Roman weight and coin: as a weight, it was a pound; as a coin, it had different weights, but the same value. In the reign of Servius, the as weighed a pound of brass; in the first Punic war, it weighed two ounces, 264 a.c.; in the second Punic war, one ounce, 218 a.c.: and afterwards half an ounce; its value about three farthings sterling.

Asaph, St. (N. Wales), a bishopric said to have been founded by Kentigern, bishop of Glasgow. On returning into Scotland, about 560, he left St. Asaph his successor, from whom the see is named. It is valued in the king's books at 187*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* The present cathedral was erected by bishop Redman, 1472-95. By an order in council, 1838, the sees of St. Asaph and Bangor were to have been united on the next vacancy in either, and the bishopric of Manchester created. This order was annulled in 1846. Present income 4200*l.*; see Manchester. The cathedral, restored by Sir Gilbert Scott, reopened 2 Sept. 1875.

Asbestos, a native fossil stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, and which is endued with the property of remaining unconsumed by fire. Cloth was made of it by the Egyptians (Herodotus), and napkins in the time of Pliny, 74; and also paper. The spinning of asbestos known at Venice about 1500.—Porta.

Ascalon (Syria), a city of the Philistines, shared the fate of Phenicia and Judea. The Egyptian army was defeated here by the crusaders under Godfrey of Bouillon, 12 Aug. 1099. Ascalon was besieged by the latter in 1148, taken in 1153; and again in 1191. Its fortifications were destroyed for fear of the crusaders by the sultan, 1270.

Ascension, an island in the Atlantic ocean, 800 miles N.W. of St. Helena, discovered by the Portuguese on Ascension day, 20 May, 1501; and taken possession of by the English, Oct. 1815.

Ascension day, also called Holy Thursday, when the church celebrates the ascension of our Saviour, the fortieth day after his resurrection from the dead, 14 May, 33; first commemorated, it is said, 68. Ascension day, 1882, 18 May; 1883, 3 May; 1884, 22 May; 1885, 14 May.

Society for the better observance of Ascension day, formed June, 1869.

Aschaffenburg, on the Maine, Bavaria, S.W. Germany. Here, on 14 July, 1866, the Prussians defeated the German Federal army, captured the town, and took 2000 prisoners.

Ascham Society, formed to promote social intercourse among gentlemen engaged in education, and improve educational methods, etc., 1880. First president, J. A. Froude; honorary members, professors Huxley, Tyndall, Morley, etc., sirs F. Pollock, J. Lubbock, F. Leighton, and other eminent men.

Ashburton Treaty, concluded at Washington, 9 Aug. 1842, by Alexander lord Ashburton and Daniel Webster, then secretary of state, plenipotentiaries; it defined the boundaries of the respective countries between Canada and the state of Maine, settled the extradition of criminals, etc.

Ashdod, or AZOTUS, seat of the worship of the Phœnician god Dagon, which fell down before the ark of the Lord, captured by the Philistines from the Israelites, about 1141 a.c. (1 Sam. v.). Ashdod was taken by the Egyptians after 29 years' siege, the longest recorded.

Ashdown, or ASSENDUNE, now thought to be Aston, Berks, where Ethelred and his brother Alfred defeated the Danes in 871. At Ashdown, near Saffron-Walden, Essex, Canute defeated Edmund Ironside with great slaughter, 1016.

Tradition says that the day after the battle in 871 Alfred caused his army to carve the figure of a white horse, the standard of Hengist, in the vale. Mr. Thomas Hughes ("Tom Brown"), in his book "The Scouring of the White Horse" (1859), describes the work and festival on 17 and 18 Sept. 1857, a ceremony performed at intervals from time immemorial. Records are found of the "scouring" in 1755, 27 May; 1776, 15 May; 1780, 1783, 1803, 1812 or 1813, 1825, 19, 20 Sept.; Sept. 1843.

Ashmolean Museum (books, manuscripts, coins, etc.) was presented to the university of Oxford by Elias Ashmole, the herald and antiquary, and opened 1682. It included the collections of the Tradescants, to whom he was executor. He died at Lambeth in 1692. The Ashmolean Society, Oxford (scientific), was established in 1828.

Ashtaroth, a Phœnician goddess, occasionally worshipped by the Israelites (see Judg. ii. 13), about 1406 B.C., and even by Solomon, about 984 B.C. (1 Kings xi. 5).

Ash-Wednesday, the first day of Lent, which in early times began on the Sunday now called the first in Lent. It is said that pope Felix III., in 487, first added the four days preceding the old Lent Sunday to raise the number of fasting days to forty; that Gregory the Great (pope, 590) introduced the sprinkling of ashes on the first of the four additional days, and hence the names of Dies Cinerum, or Ash-Wednesday. At the Reformation this practice was abolished "as being a mere shadow, or vain show." Ash-Wednesday, 1882, 22 Feb.; 1883, 7 Feb.; 1884, 27 Feb.; 1885, 18 Feb.

Asia, the largest division of the globe, so called by the Greeks from the nymph Asia, daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, and wife of Japhet. Asia was the first quarter of the world peopled: here the law of God was first promulgated; here many of the greatest monarchies of the earth had their rise; and hence most of the arts and sciences have been derived. Its early history is derived from the Bible and from Herodotus, who relates the wars of Croesus, Cyrus, and others; see Jews, China, India, Persia, Turkey, and the other countries.

Asia Minor, now ANATOLIA, comprised the Ionian colonies on the coast, the early seats of Greek civilization, and the countries Mysia, Phrygia, Lycia, Bithynia, Caria, Lydia, Cappadocia, Galatia, etc., with the cities Troy, Ephesus, Smyrna (all which see). From the time of the rise of the Assyrian monarchy, about 2000 B.C., to that of the Turks under Osman, Asia Minor was the battle-field of the conquerors of the world.

Asiatic Societies. The "Asiatic Society of Bengal," at Calcutta, was established by sir William Jones in 1784, "the bounds of its investigation to be the geographical limits of Asia." The "Royal Asiatic Society," which has several branches in India, was founded in 1823. It established the "Oriental Translation Fund" in 1828, which had published 83 volumes of Eastern literature in 1865; the "Literary Society of Madras," 1845.

Askeanian Society (from the Greek ἀσκησις, exercise), instituted in March, 1796, by some young men for discussing philosophical subjects. Its founders were William Allen, William Phillips, Alexander Tilloch, Luke Howard, W. H. Pepps, and others. In 1806 it merged into the Geographical Society.

Asmonæans, the proper name of the family termed Maccabees (which see).

Asperne, GREAT, a town, and Essling, a village near the Danube and Vienna, where a series of desperate conflicts took place between the Austrian army under the archduke Charles and the French under Napoleon, Massena, etc., on 21-22 May, 1809, ending in the retreat of Napoleon. The Austrian loss exceeded 20,000 men, and the French 30,000. Marshal Lannes, mortally wounded 22 May, died 31 May. The bridge of the Danube was destroyed, and Napoleon's retreat endangered; but the success of the Austrians was fruitless to them.

Asphalt, a solid bituminous substance, probably derived from decayed vegetable matter. It was used as a building material in ancient Babylon. Its application for this purpose was revived by Eirinus, a Greek physician, who discovered beds of it near Ncuschatel in 1712. Asphalt stone was found at Seyssel, near Geneva, in 1802; and, after several failures, count Sassenay brought it into use for pavement about 1832. The artificial asphalt obtained from gas-works began to be used as pavement about 1838. Claridge's patent asphalt was laid down in Trafalgar Square, Jan. 1864. Various kinds of asphalt pavement have been since laid in London and New York.

Aspromonte (Naples). Here Garibaldi was defeated, wounded, and taken prisoner 29 Aug. 1862, having injudiciously risen against the French occupation of Rome.

Assam (N.E. India), acquired by the British in 1825, and surrendered by the king of Ava in 1826. The tea-plant was discovered here by Mr. Bruce in 1823. A superintendent of the tea-forests was appointed in 1836, the cultivation of the plant having been recommended by lord William Bentinck in 1834. The Assam Tea Company, by whom Chinese laborers and coolies were introduced, was established in 1839. After several years, the plantations suffered severely, it is said, through over-speculation and neglect of the laborers; as a remedy, a labor act was passed at Calcutta about July, 1867.

Assassination Plot, said to have been formed by the earl of Aylesbury and others to assassinate William III., near Richmond, Surrey, and restore James II., 14 Feb. 1695-6. It was discovered by Prendergast.

Assassins, or ASSASSINIANS, fanatical Mahometans, collected by Hassan-ben-Sabah, and settled in Persia about 1090. In Syria they possessed a large tract of land among the mountains of Lebanon. They murdered the marquess of Montferrat in 1192, Lewis of Bavaria in 1213, and the khan of Tartary in 1254. They were extirpated in Persia about 1258 and in Syria about 1272. The chief of the corps was named "Ancient of the Mountain," and "Old Man of the Mountain." They trained up young people to assassinate such persons as their chief had devoted to destruction.—Hénault. From them came the word assassin.

Assyria, an Asiatic country between Mesopotamia and Media, was the seat of the earliest recorded monarchy. Its history is mainly derived from Ctesias, an early Greek historian of doubtful authenticity, Herodotus, and the Holy Scriptures. The discovery by Mr. (afterwards sir Austin) Layard of the Ninevite antiquities, now in the British Museum, and the deciphering of many ancient cuneiform inscriptions, by Grotefend, sir H. Rawlinson, and other scholars, have drawn much attention to the Assyrians. The chronologers Blair, Usher, Hales, and Clinton differ much in the dates they assign to events in Assyrian history.

Astor Library, NEW YORK. John Jacob Astor (born at Waldorf, near Heidelberg, 17 July, 1763; died in New York, 29 March, 1848) left by will $400,000 to establish "a public library in the city of New York." The library was opened 9 Jan. 1854, with about 80,000 volumes. In Jan. 1856, William B. Astor, son of the founder, gave the land to double the size of the building. In 1879 John Jacob Astor (the second of that name) gave the land and directed the erection of a second new building, which is now complete. He also built a fine central vestibule, richly frescoed and ornamented with twenty-four classic busts in marble. The cost of the additional building and improvements thus provided for was about $250,000. The number of books in the library is 200,000, of which scarcely any are duplicates, while all fiction, except that of the highest order, is excluded. The library is peculiarly rich in books of great value to scholars; and in the purchase of books, as well as in the rules of the library, the design is to maintain its high character as a scholar's, not a popular, library.

Astoria, Oregon, at the mouth of the Columbia river, founded in 1810 by John Jacob Astor as a station for his fur trade. The station was made the subject of a picturesque descriptive work, entitled "Astoria," by Washington Irving, 1836. Irving had never visited the station, but wrote from documents furnished by John Jacob Astor, and from his recollection of another northwestern fur-trading post.

Astracan (S.E. Russia), a province acquired from the Mogul's empire in 1554; visited and settled by Peter the Great in 1722.

Astrolabe, an instrument for observing the stars, said to have been employed by Hipparchus about 130 B.C.; and by Ptolemy about A.D. 140. The modern astrolabe was described by Fabricius in 1513.

Astrology. Judicial astrology was cultivated by the Chaldeans, and transmitted to the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. It was much in vogue in Italy and France in the time of Catherine de' Medicis (married to Francis I. of France, 1533).—Hénault. It is said that Bede, 673-735, was addicted to it; and Roger Bacon, 1214-92. Lord Burleigh is said to have calculated the nativity of Elizabeth, and she and other princes were dupes of Dee, the astrologer. It is stated that Lilly was consulted by Charles I. respecting his projected escape from Carisbrook castle in 1647.—Ferguson. Astrological almanacs are still published in London.

The Astronomical Society of Great Britain founded 19 Feb. 1879.

Astronomy. The earliest astronomical observations were made at Babylon, it is said, about 2234 B.C. The study was much advanced in Chaldea under Nabonassar; was known to the Chinese about 1100 B.C.; some say many centuries before; see Eclipses, Planets, Comets, Sun, Moon, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Neptune, Mars, etc.

Asturias (Oviedo since 1833), N.W. Spain, an ancient principality. Here Pelayo collected the Gothic fugitives, about 713, founded a new kingdom, and by his victories checked Moorish conquest. For his successors, see Spain. The heir-apparent of the monarchy has borne the title "prince of Asturias" since 1388, when it was assumed by Henry, son of John I., king of Leon, on his marriage with a descendant of Peter of Castile. In 1808 the junta of Asturias began the organized resistance to the French usurpation.

Asylums, or PRIVILEGED PLACES, at first, were places of refuge for those who by accident or necessity had done things that rendered them obnoxious to the law. God commanded the Jews to build cities of refuge, 1451 B.C., Numb. xxv.—The posterity of Hercules are said to have built one at Athens, to protect themselves against such as their father had irritated. Cadmus is said to have built one at Thebes, 1490 B.C.; and Romulus one at Mount Palatine, 751 B.C.; see Sanctuaries.

"Atalanta" (formerly Junio), training-ship, left Bermuda on a trial voyage, under capt. Stirling, 31 Jan. 1880. On board, 15 officers, and 265 petty officers, seamen, marines, and boys; never heard of again. Many merchant-vessels were wrecked during a terrific gale, 12-16 Feb. 1880. See Mansion-house Funds.

Ateliers Nationaux (National Workshops) were established by the French provisional government in Feb. 1848. They interfered greatly with private trade, as about 100,000 workmen threw themselves upon the government for labor and payment. The breaking-up of the system led to the fearful conflicts in June following; and the system was abolished in July.

Athanasian Creed. Athanasius, of Alexandria, was elected bishop, 326. He firmly opposed the doctrines of Arius (who denied Christ's divinity), was several times exiled, and died in 373.

Lumby, in "History of the Creeds" (1874), asserts that this creed, beginning "Quicumque vult," was not composed by Athanasius; that it is made up of two distinct parts, and was originally written in Latin and put into its present shape between 813 and 850; not connected with Athanasius's name by any trustworthy authority before 809; set forth first in Gaul, about 870; gradually extended into Italy, Britain, etc.; accepted by the Greek church about 1200.

This creed asserts the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son; see Filioque.

Dr. Waterland's Critical History of this creed published 1723. Much agitation against the general use of this creed has arisen in the church of England among both clergy and laity, 1870-3.

Modifications approved by several bishops were negatived by the lower house in convocation (62-7), early in May, 1872. The vote was rejected by the bishops, and the agitation continued.

In a letter to the earl of Shaftesbury, 22 July, 1872, the archbishops of Canterbury and York expressed their hope of devising a way for rendering the reading of the creed during public worship not compulsory.

Great meeting of laity at St. James's Hall in defence of the creed, 31 Jan. 1873.

Atheism (from the Greek a, without, θεός, God; see Psa. xiv. 1). It was professed by Epicurus, Lucretius, and other philosophers. Spinoza was the defender of a similar doctrine (1632-77). Lucilio Vanini publicly taught atheism in France, and was condemned to be burned at Toulouse in 1619. Mathias Knutzen, of Holstein, openly confessed atheism, and had upwards of a thousand disciples in Germany about 1674; he travelled to make proselytes, and his followers were called Consciencivores, because they held that there is no other deity than conscience. "Though a small draught of philosophy may lead a man into atheism, a deep draught will certainly bring him back again to the belief of a God."—Lord Bacon. Atheism was the ruling doctrine of the French republic, 1794 till 1804; see Materialism.

Athenæa were great festivals celebrated at Athens in honor of Minerva. One was called Panathenæa, the other Chalcæa; they are said to have been instituted by Erechtheus or Orpheus, 1397 or 1495 B.C.; and revived by Theseus, who caused them to be observed by all the Athenians, the first every fifth year, 1234 B.C.—Plutarch.

Athenæum, a place at Athens, sacred to Minerva, where the poets and philosophers recited their compositions. That of Rome, of great beauty, was erected by the emperor Adrian, 125.—THE ATHENÆUM CLUB of London was formed in 1823, for the association of persons of scientific and literary attainments, and artists, and noblemen and gentlemen, patrons of learning, etc., by the earls of Liverpool and Aberdeen, the marquess of Lansdowne, Dr. T. Young, Moore, Davy, Scott, Mackintosh, Faraday, Croker, Chantrey, Lawrence, and seven future premiers. The club-house was erected in 1823-30 on the site of the late Carlton palace; it is of Grecian architecture, and the frieze is an exact copy of the Panathenæa procession which formed the frieze of the Parthenon.—The Liverpool Athenæum was opened 1 Jan. 1799.—At Manchester, Bristol, and many other places, buildings under this name, and for a like purpose, have been founded.—The Boston Athenæum, Boston, Mass., originated in the Anthology Club, and dates from 1804. It was incorporated 1807. It is an association of private persons, but its art gallery and its library, one of the finest in the United States, are practically open to scholars and students not members of the society. The Athenæum, a weekly literary and scientific journal, first appeared in 1828; see Trials, 1875.

Athenry (Galway). Near here the Irish were totally defeated, and a gallant young chief, Feidlim O'Connor, slain 10 Aug. 1316.

Athens, the capital of ancient Attica and of modern Greece. The first sovereign mentioned is Ogyges, who reigned in Boeotia, and was master of Attica, then called Ionia. Tradition states that in his reign (about 1764 B.C.) a deluge laid waste the country, which so remained till the arrival of the Egyptian Cecrops and a colony, by whom the land was reseeded, and twelve cities founded, 1556 B.C. The city, said to have been first called Cecropia, was afterwards named Athens in honor of Minerva (Athene), her worship having been introduced by Erechtheus, 1383 B.C. Athens was ruled by seventeen successive kings (487 years), by thirteen perpetual archons (316 years), seven decennial archons (70 years), and lastly by annual archons (760 years). It attained great power, and no other city has had, in a short space of time, so great a number of illustrious citizens. The ancients called Athens Astu, the city, by eminence, and one of the eyes of Greece; see Greece.

Atherton Gag. In order to prevent the discussion of slavery in the United States House of Representatives, C. G. Atherton, of New Hampshire, introduced a resolution, which was passed 11 Dec. 1838, that all petitions and papers relating to that subject should be "laid on the table without being debated, printed, or referred." The rule was rescinded in 1845.

Athlone, Roscommon, Ireland, was burned during the civil war in 1641. After the battle of the Boyne, colonel R. Grace held Athlone for James II. against a besieging army, but fell when it was taken by assault by Ginckel, 30 June, 1691; see Aughrim.

Atlanta Campaign (6 May-2 Sept. 1864). This campaign, in which gens. Sherman and Johnston were antagonists, until the latter was relieved by Hood, is strategically one of the most interesting of the American civil war. Sherman advanced (6 May) with 98,000 men against Johnston, who was then posted and strongly fortified at Dalton with an army about half as large as that opposing him. The following are the important events of the campaign in their chronological order:

Sherman demonstrated against Rocky Face Ridge (Buzard's Roost), and sent M'Pherson's army (over 20,000 strong) to gain Resaca and cut off Johnston's retreat (6 May). M'Pherson failing, Sherman followed him with his whole army, and attacked Johnston, who had fallen back to Resaca. Johnston worsted, 14, 15 May, Johnston retreated to Cassville, 16-16 May, and finally across the Etowah	20 May
Jeff. C. Davis captured Rome	17 May
Sherman crossed the Etowah (23 May) and moved on Dallas, and, finding Johnston concentrated at New Hope Church, an indecisive battle followed	25 May
Howard's corps assailed Cleburne and was repulsed	27 May
Confederate attack on M'Pherson repulsed	28 May

Sherman all the while (24 May-4 June) deploying up to the Confederate lines, left Johnston in his intrenchments, established himself at Ackworth, on the railroad, and made Allatoona Pass a fortified depot. 6 June, 1864 Johnston occupied Kennesaw, Lost, and Pine mountains, covering Marietta on the north; and Sherman, having moved to Big Shanty, brought his armies close up to Kennesaw. . . . 11 June, " Gen. Polk killed on Pine Mountain. . . . 14 June, " Sherman's unsuccessful assault on Kennesaw; Harker killed. . . . 27 June, " Johnston, flanked, abandoned Kennesaw. . . . 2 July, " Schofield obtained a foothold south of the Chattahoochee (7 July); M'Pherson followed; Johnston crossed the Chattahoochee, and took up a position on Peach-tree creek. . . . 9 July, " Rousseau started out from Decatur, Alabama, upon his raid against the West Point railroad (10 July); crossed the Coosa, and defeated Clanton (13 July); struck the railroad, destroyed a portion of it, and returned to Marietta. . . . 22 July, " Sherman crossed the Chattahoochee with Thomas's army. Johnston relieved by Hood. . . . 17 July, " Battle of Peach tree creek. The Confederates gained a partial success at first, but the national forces maintained their position. . . . 20 July, " Battle of Decatur. Hood attacked Sherman's left. M'Pherson killed; also the Confederate gen. W. H. T. Walker. The Confederates, successful at first, finally repulsed. . . . 22 July, " Army of Tennessee (under Howard) moved from Decatur to the northwest of Atlanta. Hooker resigned. 27 July, " Hood attacked Howard in his new position and was repulsed. . . . 28 July, " Sherman extended his lines southward. 28 July-10 Aug. " Battle of Jonesborough (south of Atlanta). Hardee attacked Sherman and was repulsed. Capture of Jonesborough. . . . 31 Aug., 1 Sept. " Atlanta evacuated by Hood. . . . 2 Sept. "

Atmolyals, a method of separating the constituent gases of a compound gas (such as atmospheric air) by causing it to pass through a vessel of porous material (such as graphite); first made known in Aug. 1863, by the discoverer, the late professor T. Graham, F.R.S., master of the mint.

Atmosphere, see Air.

Atmospheric Railways. The idea of producing motion by atmospheric pressure was conceived by Papin, the French engineer, about 1680. Experiments were made on a line of rail, laid down across Wormwood Scrubs, London, between Shepherd's Bush and the Great Western railroad, to test the efficacy of atmospheric tubes, the working of the air-pump, and speed of carriages upon this new principle on railroads in June, 1840, and then tried for a short time on a line between Croydon and London, 1845. Atmospheric pressure was also tried and abandoned in 1848, on the South Devon line. An atmospheric railway was commenced between Dalkey and Killiney, in the vicinity of Dublin, in Sept. 1843; opened 29 March, 1844; discontinued in 1855. A similar railway was proposed to be laid down in the streets of London by Mr. T. W. Rammell in 1857. Mr. Rammell's Pneumatic Railway was put in action successfully at the Crystal Palace on 27 Aug. 1864, and following days. An act for a pneumatic railway between the Waterloo railway station and Whitehall was passed in July, 1865. Atmospheric pressure was proposed for a submarine railway from Dover to Calais in 1869; see Pneumatic Despatch.

Atomic Theory, in chemistry, deals with the indivisible particles of all substances. The somewhat incoherent labors of his predecessors (such as Wenzel, in 1777) were reduced by John Dalton to four laws of combining proportion, which have received the name of "Atomic Theory." His "Chemical Philosophy," containing the exposition of his views, appeared in 1808. Dr. C. Daubeny's work on the Atomic Theory was published in 1830. In his standard of atomic weights Dalton takes hydrogen as 1. Berzelius, who commenced his elaborate researches on the subject in 1848, adopts oxygen as 100. The former standard is used in this country, the latter on the continent. The theory is accepted by some and rejected by other chemists. In 1855 Hinrichs propounded a new hypothetical science, Atomechanics, in which protogen, composed of panatoms, is regarded as the primary chemical principle.

Atoms. Democritus (about 400 B.C.) held that the only existing things are innumerable indestructible atoms, varying in form, and combined in obedience to mechanical laws, and that the soul consists of free, smooth, round atoms, like those of fire; and that nothing happens by chance. His philosophy was adopted by Epicurus (about 306 B.C.), whose doctrines are luminously expounded by Lucretius in his great poem "De Rerum Naturâ" (On the Nature of Things), 57 B.C. The atomic philosophy, in a modified form, was recognized by Gassendi, who died A.D. 1655.

Atrebrates, a Belgic people, subdued by Cæsar, 57 B.C.; see Artois.

Attainder, ACTS OF, whereby a person not only forfeited his land, but his blood was attainted, have been numerous. Two witnesses in cases of high-treason are necessary where corruption of blood is incurred, unless the party accused shall confess, or stand mute, 7 & 8 Will. III. 1694-5.—Blackstone. The attainder of lord Russell, who was beheaded in Lincoln's-inn-fields, 21 July, 1683, was reversed under William, in 1689. The rolls and records of the acts of attainder passed in the reign of James II. were cancelled and publicly burned, 2 Oct. 1695. Among the last acts reversed was the attainder of the children of lord Edward Fitzgerald (who was implicated in the rebellion in Ireland of 1798), 1 July, 1819. In 1814 and 1833 the severity of attainders was mitigated. Several attainders reversed about 1827, and one in 1853 (the earl of Perth).

Attica, see Athens.

Attila, surnamed the "Scourge of God," and thus distinguished for his conquests and his crimes, having ravished the Eastern empire from 445 to 450, when he made peace with Theodosius. He invaded the Western empire, 450, and was defeated by Aetius at Châlons, 451; he then retired into Pannonia, where he died through the bursting of a blood-vessel on his nuptials with Ildico, a beautiful virgin, 453.

Attorney (from tour, turn), a person qualified to act for another at law. The number in Edward III.'s reign was under 400 for the whole kingdom. In the 32d of Henry VI. 1454, a law reduced the practitioners in Norfolk, Norwich, and Suffolk from eighty to fourteen, and restricted their increase. The number of attorneys practising in the United Kingdom was said to be 13,824 (1872). The qualifications and practice of attorneys and solicitors are now regulated by acts passed in 1843, 1860, 1870, and 1874. By the Supreme Judicature Act all attorneys styled solicitors since Nov. 1875; see Solicitors.

Attorney-general, a law officer of the crown, appointed by letters-patent. He has to exhibit informations and prosecute for the king in matters criminal, and to file bills in exchequer for any claims concerning the crown in inheritance or profit. Others may bring bills against the king's attorney. The first attorney-general was William Bonneville, 1277.

Attorney-general, UNITED STATES, see Administration.

Attorneys and Solicitors' Act, passed 14 July, 1870.

Attraction, described by Copernicus, about 1520, as an appetite or appetite which the Creator impressed upon all parts of matter; by Kepler as a corporeal affection tending to union, 1605. In 1687, sir Isaac Newton published his "Principia," containing his important researches on this subject. There are the attractions of gravitation, magnetism, and electricity (which see). Dr. C. William Siemens exhibited and described his attraction-meter at the Royal Society, 1876.

Atwood's Machine, for proving the laws of accelerated motion by the falling of weights, invented by George Atwood, described 1784: he died 11 July, 1807.

Aubaine, a right of the French kings, which existed from the beginning of the monarchy, whereby they claimed the property of every stranger who died in their country without having been naturalized, was abolished by the National Assembly in 1790-1, re-established by Napoleon in 1804, and finally annulled 14 July, 1819.

Auberoche, Guienne (S. France). The earl of Derby defeated the French, besieging this place, 19 Aug. 1344.

Auckland, capital of New Zealand (north island), was founded Sept. 1840. The population of the district in 1857 was estimated at 15,000 Europeans and 35,000 natives. The seat of government was removed to Wellington, on Cook's Strait, Dec. 1864.

Auction, a kind of sale known to the Romans, mentioned by Petronius Arbiter (about A.D. 66). The first in Britain was about 1700, by Elisha Yale, a governor of Fort George, now Madras, in the East Indies, who thus sold the goods he had brought home. Auction and sales' tax began 1779. Various acts of parliament have regulated auctions and imposed duties, in some cases as high as five per cent. By 8 Vict. c. 15, 1845, the duties were repealed, and a charge imposed "on the license to be taken out by all auctioneers in the United Kingdom of 10*l*." In 1858 there were 4358 licenses granted, producing 43,580*l*. The abuses at auctions, termed "knock-outs," caused by combinations of brokers and others, excited much attention in Sept. 1866. An act regulating sales of land by auction was passed 15 July, 1867. Certain sales are now exempt from being conducted by a licensed auctioneer, such as goods and chattels under a distress for rent, and sales under the provisions of the Small Debts Acts for Scotland and Ireland.—Abuses at auctions in the United States have led to various statutory regulations in the several states. In New York, where abuses have been greatest, auctioneers must give bonds in $100,000 for faithful conduct of business, must make semi-annual accounts of sales, and pay to the state a certain percentage of the sales of goods, except certain goods which are exempt.

Audiani, followers of Audæus of Mesopotamia, who, having been expelled from the Syrian church on account of his severely reproving the vices of the clergy, about 338, formed a sect and became its bishop. He was banished to Scythia, where he is said to have made many converts. His followers celebrated Easter at the time of the Jewish passover, attributed the human figure to the Deity, and had other peculiar tenets.

Audiometer (from audio, I hear), an instrument for the measurement of the faculty of hearing, invented by prof. Hughes. It consists of a battery of two Leclanché's cells connected with a simple microphone and telephone; described to the Royal Society, 15 May, 1879.

Audiphone, an instrument to assist the partially deaf, invented by Mr. R. G. Rhodes of Chicago, and modified by M. Colladon of Geneva, in 1880. It consists of a thin sheet of hard ebonite rubber or card-board. This should be placed against the teeth, through which and other bones the vibrations are conveyed to the auditory nerve.

Audit-office, Somerset House. Commissioners for auditing the public accounts were appointed in 1785, and many statutes regulating their duties have since been enacted.

Audley's Rebellion, see Rebellions, 1497.

Auerstädt (Prussia). Here, on 14 Oct. 1806, the French, under Davoust, signal defeated the Prussians, under Blücher; see Jena.

Aughrim, near Athlone, in Ireland, where on 12 July, 1691, a battle was fought between the Irish, headed by the French general, St. Ruth, and the English under gen. Ginckel. The former were defeated and lost 7000 men; the latter lost only 600 killed and 960 wounded. St. Ruth was slain. This engagement proved decisively fatal to the interest of James II., and Ginckel was created earl of Athlone.

Augmentation of Poor Livings' Office, established in 1704. 5597 clerical livings, not exceeding 50*l.* per annum, were found by the commissioners under the act of Anne capable of augmentation by means of the bounty then established.

Augmentations Court, established in 1535 by 27 Henry VIII. c. 27, in relation to cap. 28, same session, which gave the king the property of all monasteries having 200*l.* a year. The court was abolished by Mary, 1553, and restored by Elizabeth, 1558.

Augsburg (Bavaria), originally a colony settled by Augustus, about 12 B.C.; became a free city, and flourished during the middle ages. Here many important diets of the empire have been held. In A.D. 952, a council confirmed the order for the celibacy of the priesthood. Augsburg has suffered much by war, having been frequently taken by siege—in 788, 1703, 1704, and, last, by the French, 10 Oct. 1805, who restored it to Bavaria in March, 1806.

Augsburg Diet, summoned by the emperor Charles V. to settle the religious disputes of Germany, met 20 June, and separated. Nov. 1530

Confession of Augsburg, compiled by Melancthon, Luther, and others, signed by the Protestant princes, presented to the emperor Charles V., and read to the diet. 25 June, "

Augury. Husbandry was in part regulated by the coming or going of birds long before the time of Hesiod. Three augurs at Rome, with vestals and several orders of the priesthood, were formally constituted by Numa about 710 B.C. The number increased, and was fifteen at the time of Sylla, 81. The college of augurs was abolished by Theodosius about A.D. 390.

August, the eighth Roman month of the year (previously called Sexilis, or the sixth from March), by a decree of the senate received its present name in honor of Augustus Cæsar, in the year 8 B.C., because in this month he was created consul, had thrice triumphed in Rome, added Egypt to the Roman empire, and made an end of the civil wars. He added one day to the month, making it 31 days.—The appearance of shooting-stars on the 10th of Aug. was observed in the middle ages, when they were termed "St. Lawrence's tears." Their periodicity was noticed by Mr. Forster early in the present century.

Augusta, SIEGE OF. Augusta (in Georgia, United States) was held by a force under a loyalist named Brown in the spring of 1781. While gen. Greene was carrying on the siege of fort Ninety-six, Lee, Pickens, Clarke, and other Southern partisan leaders laid siege to Augusta. It commenced on 23 May, and on 5 June Brown surrendered. The Americans lost 51 men killed and wounded; the British lost 52 killed, and 334, including the wounded, were taken prisoners.

Augustan Era began 14 Feb. 27 B.C., or 727 years after the foundation of Rome.

Augustin (or AUSTIN) FRIARS, a religious order which ascribes its origin to St. Augustin, bishop of Hippo, who died 430. They first appeared about the eleventh century, and the order was constituted by pope Alexander IV., 1256. The rule requires poverty, humility, and chastity. Martin Luther was an Augustin monk. The Augustins held the doctrine of free grace, and were rivals of the Dominicans. The order appeared in England soon after the conquest, and had 32 houses at the suppression, 1536. One of their churches, at Austin Friars, London, erected 1354, and since the Reformation used by Dutch Protestants, was partially destroyed by fire, 22 Nov. 1862. It was restored, and reopened 1 Oct. 1865. A religious house of the order, dedicated to St. Monica, mother of Augustin, was founded in Hoxton square, London, 1864.

Aulic Council, a sovereign court in Germany, established by the emperor Maximilian I., being one of the two courts, the first called the Imperial Chamber, civil and criminal, instituted at Worms, 1495, and afterwards held at Spire and Wetzlar; and the other the Aulic Council at Vienna, 1506. These courts, having concurrent jurisdiction, were instituted for appeals in particular cases from the courts of the Germanic states.

Auray (N.W. France). Here, on 29 Sept. 1364, the English, under John Chandos, defeated the French and captured their leader Du Guesclin. Charles of Blois, made duke of Brittany by the king of France, was slain, and a peace was made in April, 1365.

Auricular Confession. The confession of sin at the ear (Latin, auris) of the priest was an early practice, since it is said to have been forbidden in the fourth century by Nectarius, archbishop of Constantinople. It was enjoined by the council of Lateran in 1215, and by the council of Trent in 1551. It was one of the six articles of faith enacted by our Henry VIII. in 1539, but was abolished in England at the Reformation. Its revival here has been attempted by the church party called Puseyites, Tractarians, or Ritualists.

The rev. Alfred Poole, a curate of St. Barnabas, Knightsbridge, was suspended by his bishop from his office for practising auricular confession in June, 1858, and the suspension was confirmed in Jan. 1859. Much excitement was created by a similar attempt by the rev. Temple West at Boyne Hill in Sept. 1858.

In May, 1873, 483 clergymen of the Church of England presented a petition to convocation for the education, selection, and licensing of duly qualified confessors, in accordance with the provisions of canon-law. Strongly disapproved of by the bishops.

Letter from the bishop of London asserting that confession should be to God; that to the minister optional, 21 July, 1873.

Archdeacon Denison (in a letter) declares war against all opposing auricular confession, 22 Aug. 1873.

96 peers send an address against auricular confession to the archbishop of Canterbury about 9 Aug. 1877; see Holy Cross.

Auriflamma, or ORIFLAMME, the national banner mentioned in French history, belonging to the abbey of St. Denis, and suspended over the tomb of that saint. Louis le Gros was the first king who took this standard from the abbey to battle, 1124.—Hénault. It appeared for the last time at Agincourt, 25 Oct. 1415.—Tillet. Others say at Montlhéry, 16 July, 1465.

"Aurora," FRIGATE, sailed from Britain in 1771 to the East Indies, and was never again heard of.—AURORA, daily papal newspaper, appeared at Rome, 1 June, 1880.

Auroræ Boreales and Australes (Northern and Southern Polar Lights), though rarely seen in central Europe, are frequent in the arctic and antarctic regions. In March, 1716, an aurora borealis extended from the west of Ireland to the confines of Russia. The whole horizon lat. 57° N. was overspread with continuous haze of a dismal red during a whole night, Nov. 1765.—Mr. Foster, the companion of capt. Cook, saw the aurora in lat. 58° S. The aurora is now attributed to the passage of electric light through the rarefied air of the polar regions. In Aug. and Sept. 1859 (and about 24 Oct. 1870), when brilliant auroræ were very frequent, the electric telegraph-wires were seriously affected, and communications interrupted. Auroræ were seen at Rome and Basel, and also in Australia.

Austerlitz, a town in Moravia, where a battle was fought between the French and the allied Austrian and Russian armies, 2 Dec. 1805. Three emperors commanded: Alexander of Russia, Francis of Austria, and Napoleon of France. The killed and wounded exceeded 30,000 on the side of the allies, who lost 40 standards, 150 pieces of cannon, and thousands of prisoners. The decisive victory of the French led to the treaty of Presburg, signed 26 Dec. 1805; see Presburg.

Australasia, the fifth great division of the world. This name, originally given it by De Brosse, includes Australia, Van Diemen's Land, New Guinea, New Zealand, New Britain, New Caledonia, etc., mostly discovered within two centuries. Accidental discoveries were made by the Spaniards as early as 1526; but the first accurate knowledge of these southern lands is due to the Dutch, who in 1606 explored a part of the coast of Papua, or New Guinea. Torres, a Spaniard, passed through the straits which now bear his name, between that island and Australia, and gave the first correct report of the latter, 1606. The Dutch continued their discoveries. Grant in 1800, and Flinders again (1801-5), completed the survey.—M'Culloch.

Australia (formerly New Holland), the largest island and smallest continent; estimated area about three million square miles, including five provinces—New South Wales, Victoria (formerly Port Phillip), South Australia, West Australia (or Swan River), and Queensland (all which see). Population, with Tasmania and New Zealand, in 1871, about 1,968,650; 1874, 2,334,210; 1878, 2,705,700.

* GOLD-DISCOVERY.—Mr. Edward Hargraves went to California in search of gold, and was struck with the similarity between the rocks and strata of California and those of his own district of Conobolas, some thirty miles west of Bathurst. On his return home, he examined the soil, and after one or two months' digging, found a quantity of gold, 12 Feb. 1851. He applied to the colonial government for a reward, which he readily obtained, with an appointment as commissioner of crown-lands. The excitement became intense throughout the colony of New South Wales, rapidly spread to that of Victoria and other places; and in the first week of July, 1851, an aboriginal inhabitant, formerly attached to the Wellington mission, and then in the service of Dr. Kerr, of Wallawa, discovered, while tending his sheep, a mass of gold among a heap of quartz. Three blocks of quartz (from two to three cwt.), found in the Murroo creek, fifty miles to the north of Bathurst, contained 112 lbs. of pure gold, valued at 4000*l*. The "Victoria nugget," a magnificent mass of virgin gold, weighing 340 oz., was brought to England from the Bendigo diggings; and a piece of pure gold of 106 lbs. weight was also found.
From the gold-fields of Mount Alexander and Ballarat, in the district of Victoria, up to Oct. 1852, there were found 2,592,422 oz., or 106 tons 10 cwt. of gold; and the gold exported up to the same date represented 8,863,477*l*. sterling. In Nov. 1853 the James Baines and Lightning brought gold from Melbourne valued at 1,200,000*l*. The "Welcome nugget" weighed .01 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; value, 837*l*. 10*s*. 10*d*.; found at Barker's Hill, Ballarat, 11 June, 1858. Between May, 1851, and May, 1861, gold to the value of 96,000,000*l*. had been brought to England from New South Wales and Victoria.

Austrasia, Oesterreich (Eastern Kingdom), also called Metz, a French kingdom which lasted from the 6th to the 8th century. It began with the division of the territories of Clovis by his sons, 511, and ended by Carloman becoming a monk and surrendering his power to his brother Pepin, who thus became sole king of France, 747.

"Austria," a Hamburg company's steamship, sailed from Southampton to New York 4 Sept. 1858, with 528 persons on board. On 13 Sept., in lat. 45° N., long. 41° 30' W., it caught fire through the carelessness of some one in burning some tar to fumigate the steerage. Only 67 persons were saved—upwards of 60 by the Maurice, a French bark, the rest by a Norwegian bark. A heart-rending account was given in the Times, 11 Oct. 1858, by Mr. Charles Brews, an English survivor.

Austria, Oesterreich (Eastern Kingdom), anciently Noricum and part of Pannonia, was annexed to the Roman empire about 33; was overrun by the Huns, Avars, etc., during the fifth and sixth centuries, and taken from them by Charlemagne, 791-6. He divided the government of the country, establishing margraves of Eastern Bavaria and Austria. Louis the German, son of Louis le Débonnaire, about 817, subjugated Radbod, margrave of Austria; but in 883 the descendants of the latter raised a civil war in Bavaria against the emperor Charles the Fat, and eventually the margraves of Austria were declared immediate princes of the empire. In 1156 the margraviate was made an hereditary duchy by the emperor Frederic I.; and in 1453 it was raised to an archduchy by the emperor Frederic III. Rodolph, count of Hapsburg, elected emperor of Germany in 1273, acquired Austria in 1278; and from 1493 to 1804 his descendants were emperors of Germany. On 11 Aug. 1804, the emperor Francis II. renounced the title of emperor of Germany, and became hereditary emperor of Austria.
 The condition of Austria is now greatly improving under the enlightened rule of the present emperor. The political constitution of the empire is based upon—1. The Pragmatic Sanction of Charles VI., 1734, which declares the indivisibility of the empire and rules the order of succession. 2. The Pragmatic Sanction of Francis II., 1
 Aug. 1804, when he became emperor of Austria only. 3.
 The diploma of Francis Joseph, 20 Oct. 1860, whereby he imparted legislative power to the provincial states and the council of the empire (Reichsrath). 4. The law of 26 Feb. 1861, on the national representation. Self-government was granted to Hungary, 17 Feb. 1867. The empire was ordered to be named henceforth the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, by decree, 14 Nov. 1868. Population of the empire * in Oct. 1857, 35,018,988; reduced to 32,530,000 by the loss of Venetia, etc., in 1866 (about 16,000,000 Slavs of different dialects). Population, Austria and other Cis-Leithan provinces, 20,396,580 (31 Dec.
 1869); Hungary and Trans-Leithan provinces, 15,509,- 455.

Auto da Fé (Act of Faith), the term given to the punishment of a heretic, generally burning alive, inflicted by the Inquisition (which see).

Automaton Figures (or ANDROIDEA), made to imitate living actions, are of early invention. Archytas's flying dove was formed about 400 B.C. Friar Bacon is said to have made a brazen head which spoke, A.D. 1264. Albertus Magnus spent thirty years in making another. A coach and two horses, with a footman, a page, a lady inside, were made by Camus for Louis XIV. when a child, 1649; the horses and figures moved naturally, variously, and perfectly. Vaucanson, in 1738, made an artificial duck, which performed many functions of a real one—eating, drinking, and quacking; and he also made a flute-player. The writing automaton, exhibited in 1769, was a pentagraph worked by a confederate out of sight. The automaton chess-player, exhibited the same year, was also worked by a hidden person; so was the "invisible girl," 1800. Maelzel made a trumpeter about 1809. Early in this century an automaton was exhibited in London which pronounced several sentences with tolerable distinctness. The "anthropoglossus," an alleged talking-machine, exhibited at St. James's Hall, London, July, 1864, was proved to be a gross imposition. The exhibition of the talking-machine of professor Faber, of Vienna, in London, began 27 Aug. 1870, at the Palais Royal, Argyll street, W. The automatic chess-player at the Crystal Palace, 1873. Psycho, an automaton card-player, invented by J. N. Maskelyne and John Algermon Clarke, exhibited in London, Jan. 1875. An automaton hare was hunted at Hendon, near London, 9 Sept. 1876.

Avars, barbarians who ravaged Pannonia, and annoyed the Eastern empire in the sixth and seventh centuries; subdued by Charlemagne about 799, after an eight years' war.

Avebury, or Abury (Wiltshire). Here are the remains of the largest so-called Druidical work in this country. They have been surveyed by Aubrey, 1648; Dr. Stukeley, 1720; and sir R. C. Hoare in 1812, and by others. Much information may be obtained from Stukeley's "Abury" (1743), and Hoare's "Ancient Wiltshire" (1812-21). Many theories have been put forth, but the object of these remains is still unknown. They are considered to have been set up during the "stone age," i.e. when weapons and implements were mainly formed of that material.

Avesin, or AVAINNE (Luxemburg, Belgium). Here the French and Dutch defeated the Spaniards, 20 May, 1635.

"Ave Maria!" the salutation of the angel Gabriel to the Virgin (Luke i. 28), was made a formula of devotion by pope John XXI. about 1326. In the beginning of the fifteenth century Vincentius Ferrerius used it before his discourses.—Bingham.

Avignon, a city (S.E. France) ceded by Philip III. to the pope in 1273. The papal seat was removed by Clement V. to Avignon in 1309. In 1348 Clement VI. purchased the sovereignty from Jane, countess of Provence and queen of Naples. In 1408, the French, wearied of the schism, expelled Benedict XIII., and Avignon ceased to be the seat of the papacy. Here were held nine councils (1080-1457). Avignon was seized and restored several times by the French kings; the last time restored, 1773. It was claimed by the national assembly, 1791, and was confirmed to France by the congress of sovereigns in 1815. In Oct. 1791, horrible massacres took place here; see Popea, 1809-94.

Axe, Wedge, Lever, and various tools in common use, are said to have been invented by Dædalus, an artificer of Athens; to whom also is ascribed the invention of masts and sails for ships, 1240 B.C. Many tools are represented on the Egyptian monuments.

Axum, or AUXUM, a town in Abyssinia said to have been the capital of a kingdom whose people were converted to Christianity by Frumentius about 330, and were allies of Justinian, 533.

Ayacucho (Peru). Here the Peruvians finally achieved their independence by defeating the Spaniards, 9 Dec. 1824.

Ayde, or AIPE, the tax paid by the vassal to the chief lord upon urgent occasions. In France and England an aide was due for knighting the king's eldest son. One was demanded by Philip the Fair, 1313. The aide due upon the birth of a prince, ordained by the statute of Westminster (Edward I.), 1285, was not to be levied until he was fifteen years of age, for the case of the subject. The aide for the marriage of the king's eldest daughter could not be demanded in this country until her seventh year. In feudal tenures there was an aide for ransoming the chief lord; so when our Richard I. was kept a prisoner by the emperor of Germany, an aide of 20*s.* to redeem him was enforced upon every knight's fee; see Benevolence.

Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, was reduced by the West Saxons in 671. St. O'Syth, beheaded by the pagans in Essex, was buried there, 600. William the Conqueror invested his favorites with some of its lands, under the tenure of providing "straw for his bedchambers; three eels for his use in winter; and in summer, straw, rushes, and two green geese thrice every year." Incorporated by charter in 1554.

Aylesford (Kent). Here, it is said, the Britons were victorious over the Saxon invaders, 455, and Horsa was killed.

Ayr, capital of Ayrshire (S.W. Scotland); chartered and endowed by William the Lion, twelfth century; fortified by Oliver Cromwell.—By a sudden fire at Templeton's carpet-works, 29 persons perished, 16 June, 1876.

Azinour, see Aginour.

Asof, SEA OF, the Palus Mæotis of the ancients, communicates by the strait of Yenikalé (the Bosphorus Cimmerius) with the Black Sea, and is entirely surrounded by Russian territory, Taganrog and Kerch being the principal places. An expedition, composed of British, French, and Turkish troops, commanded by sir G. Brown, arrived at Kerch, 24 May, 1855, when the Russians retired, after blowing up the fortifications. On the 25th the allies marched upon Yenikalé, which also offered no resistance. On the same evening the allied fleet entered the Sea of Asof, and in a few days completed their occupation of it, after capturing a large number of merchant vessels, etc. An immense amount of stores was destroyed by the Russians to prevent them falling into the hands of the allies.

Azores, or WESTERN ISLES (N. Atlantic), belonging to Portugal, the supposed site of the ancient Atlantis, are said to have been discovered in the 15th century by Vanderberg of Bruges, who was driven on their coasts by the weather. Cabral, sent by the Portuguese court, fell in with St. Mary's in 1482, and in 1457 they were all discovered and named Azores from the number of goshawks found on them. They were given by Alfonso V. to the duchess of Burgundy in 1466, and colonized by Flemings. They were subject to Spain 1580-1640. The isle of Terceira, during the usurpation of dom Miguel, declared for donna Maria, 1829, and a government was established at the capital Angra, 1830-3. A volcano at St. George's destroyed the town of Ursulina, May, 1808; and in 1811 a volcano appeared near St. Michael's, in the sea, where the water was eighty fathoms deep; an island then formed gradually disappeared. A destructive earthquake, lasting 12 days, happened in St. Michael's, 1591.

Azote, the name given by French chemists to nitrogen (which see).

Azotus, see Ashdod.

Aztecs, the ruling tribe in Mexico at the time of the Spanish invasion (1519). In June, 1853, two pretended Aztec children were exhibited in London. They were considered by professor Owen to be merely South American dwarfs. They were married in London, 1 April, 1867, and exhibited for some time after.

B.

Baal (Lord), the male deity of the Phœnician nations, frequently worshipped by the Israelites, especially by Ahab, 918 B.C. His priests and votaries were massacred by Jehu, and his temple defiled, 884 B.C.

Baalbec, HELIOPOLIS (both meaning "City of the Sun"), an ancient city of Syria, of which magnificent ruins remain, visited by Wood (in 1751), and others. Its origin is lost in antiquity. Here Septimius Severus built a temple to the sun, 200. The city was sacked by the Moslems, 748, and by Timour Beg, 1400.

Babbage, see Calculating Machines.

Babel, TOWER OF, built by Noah's posterity, 2247 B.C. (Genesis xi.). The magnificent temple of Belus, asserted to have been originally this tower, is said to have had lofty spires, and many statues of gold, one of them forty feet high. In the upper part of this temple was the tomb of the founder, Belus (the Nimrod of the sacred scriptures), who was deified after death.—Blair. The Birs Nimroud, examined by Rich, Layard, and others, is considered by some persons to be the remains of the tower of Babel.

Babylonia,* an Asiatic empire (see Assyria), founded by Belus, supposed to be the Nimrod of the Holy Writ, the son of Chus, and grandson of Ham, 2245 B.C.—

* The city of Babylon was at one time the most magnificent in the world. The Hanging Gardens are described as having been of a square form, and in terraces one above another until they rose as high as the walls of the city, the ascent being from terrace to terrace by steps. The whole pile was sustained by vast arches raised on other arches; and on the top were flat stones closely cemented together with plaster of bitumen, and that covered with sheets of lead, upon which lay the mould of the garden, where there were large trees, shrubs, and flowers, with various sorts of vegetables. There were five of these gardens, each containing about four English acres, and disposed in the form of an amphitheatre.—Strabo; Diodorus. Pliny said that in his time it was but a desolate wilderness. Mr. Rich visited the ruins in 1811, and sir R. Ker Porter in 1818. The laborious researches of Mr. Layard, sir H. Rawlinson, M. Botta, and others, and the interesting relics excavated and brought to this country between the years 1849 and 1855, have caused very much attention to be given to the history of Babylon. Many of the inscriptions in the cuneiform or wedge-like character have been translated, principally by col. (now sir Henry) Rawlinson, and published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. In the spring of 1855 he returned to England, bringing with him many valuable relics, drawings, etc., which are now in the British Museum. He gave discourses on the subject at the Royal Institution, London, in 1851, 1855, and 1862. The Rev. A. Sayce lectured on Babylonian literature at the same place in 1877.

Lenglet.† Ninus of Assyria seized on Babylon, and established what was properly the Assyrian empire, by uniting the two sovereignties, 2059 B.C.; 2233 Cl. The second empire of Babylon commenced about 747 B.C.

Babyngton's Conspiracy, to assassinate queen Elizabeth, and make Mary of Scotland queen, was devised by John Savage, a soldier of Philip of Spain, and approved by Wm. Gifford and John Ballard, catholic priests. Anthony Babyngton and others joined in the scheme. They were betrayed by Pooley Aspy, and fourteen were executed, 20, 21 Sept. 1586.

Babyam, a new sect in Persia, founded in 1848 by Mirza Ali Mahomed, an enthusiast, at Shiraz. He termed himself the "Báb," or "gate," of knowledge, and, giving a new exposition of the Koran, claimed to be the incarnate Holy Spirit. The destruction of himself and the greater number of his followers was due to Hossein, one of his disciples, combining political and warlike principles with their spiritual dogmas. The sect was tolerated by the shah Mahomet, but nearly exterminated by his successor in 1848-9. The Báb himself was executed 15 July, 1849. The present head of the sect, still numerous, Behayah Allah, imprisoned in a Turkish fortress, is said to be well conversant with the Bible, and to propound a doctrine based on it, termed "Báb el Huk," gate of truth.

† According to the earliest existing history the country was divided between two races, the Sumir (Turanian), the probable inventors of cuneiform writing; and the Acrad (Semitic), which became predominant.

Bacchanalia (games in honor of Bacchus) arose in Egypt, and were brought into Greece by Melampus, and called Dionysia, about 1415 B.C. — Diodorus. In Rome the Bacchanalia were suppressed, 186 B.C. The priests of Bacchus were called Bacchanals.

Baccon or Bacon, see Orleans.

Bach Society, instituted in London in 1849, for the collection of the works of J. S. Bach, and the promotion of their public performance. The original committee included W. Sterndale Bennett, sir G. Smart, J. Hullah, C. Potter, and other eminent musicians. The society was dissolved 21 March, 1870, and the music given up to the Royal Academy of Music.

Bachelors. The Roman censors frequently imposed fines on unmarried men, and men of full age were obliged to marry. The Spartan women at certain games laid hold of old bachelors, dragged them round their altars, and inflicted on them various marks of infamy and disgrace. — Vossius. A tax laid upon bachelors in England, twenty-five years of age (varying from 12l. 10s. for a duke to 1s. for a common person), lasted from 1695 to 1706. Bachelors (Romanist priests excepted) were subjected to an extra tax on their male and female servants in 1785. A grand bull given by 84 bachelors at Kensington House, the prince and princess of Wales present, 22 July, 1880.

Backgammon. Palamedes of Greece is the reputed inventor of this game, about 1224 B.C. It is said to have been invented in Wales before its conquest. — Henry.

Baconian Philosophy, propounded by Francis Bacon specially in his "Novum Organum," published in 1620. Its principles are utility and progress, and its objects the alleviation of the sufferings and promotion of the comforts of mankind. — Macaulay, 1837.

Bacon's Rebellion. A movement made by a Virginian, Nathaniel Bacon, and a strong party, against Berkeley, the tyrannical royalist governor, in 1676. Bacon was successful for a time, drove Berkeley out of Jamestown, burned it (Sept. 9), but died of a fever in Oct. The rebellion came to nothing, being put down during the beginning of 1677, and several persons were hanged, fined, etc., for being concerned in it. It is worthy of note that this first serious revolt against the abuse of British authority in America occurred precisely 100 years before the Declaration of Independence was signed.

Bactriana, a province in Asia, was subjugated by Cyrus and formed part of the Persian empire, when conquered by Alexander, 330 B.C. About 254 B.C., Theodotus or Diodotus, a Greek, threw off the yoke of the Seleucids, and became king. Eucratides I. reigned prosperously about 181 B.C., and Menander about 126 B.C. The Greek kingdom appears to have been broken up by the irruption of the Scythians shortly after.

Badajoz (S.W. Spain), an important barrier fortress, surrendered to the French, under Soult, 11 March, 1811; invested by the British, under lord Wellington, on 16 March, 1812, and stormed and taken on 6 April following. The French retreated in haste.

Baddesdown Hill, or Mount Badon, near Bath, where Bede says the Britons defeated the Saxons in 493; others say in 511 or 520.

Baden (S.W. Germany). The house of Baden is descended from Hermann, regarded as the first margrave (1052), son of Berthold I., duke of Zähringen; but Hermann II. assumed the title, Feb. 1130. From Christopher, who died 1527, proceeded the branches Baden-Baden and Baden-Dourlach, united in 1771. Baden is a hereditary constitutional monarchy by charter, 26 May, 1818; it joined the German empire by treaty, 15 Nov. 1870. Population, 1 Dec. 1871, 1,461,562; Dec. 1875, 1,507,179.

Louis William, margrave of Baden-Baden, a great general, born 1665; sallied out from Vienna and defeated the Turks, 1683. died 1707

Charles William, margrave of Baden-Dourlach, born 1679, died 1748; succeeded by his son.

Charles Frederic, born 1728; margrave of Baden-Dourlach, 1738; acquired Baden-Baden, 1771; made grand-duke by Napoleon, 1806.

1811. Charles Louis Frederic, who died without issue in 1818; succeeded by his uncle.

1818. Louis William, died without issue in 1830; succeeded by his brother.

1830. Leopold, died in 1852; succeeded by his second son (the first being imbecile).

1852. Frederic (born 9 Sept. 1826), regent 24 April, 1852; declared grand-duke, 5 Sept. 1856.

Heir: his son Frederic William, born 9 July, 1857.

Badge of Military Merit, established Aug. 1781, by Washington. It was conferred upon non-commissioned officers and soldiers for three years' good conduct, or for specially meritorious service, and entitled the person receiving it "to pass and re-pass all guards and military posts as fully and amply as any commissioned officer whatever."

Baffin's Bay (N. America), discovered by William Baffin, an Englishman, 1616. The extent of this discovery was much doubted, until the expeditions of Ross and Parry proved that Baffin was substantially accurate in his statement. Parry entered Lancaster Sound, and discovered the islands known by his name, 1818; see Northwest Passage.

Bagdad, in Asiatic Turkey, built by Al Mansour, and made the seat of the Saracen empire, about 762. Taken by the Tartars, and a period put to the Saracen rule, 1258. Often taken by the Persians, and retaken by the Turks, with great slaughter: the latter have held it since 1638.

Bagpipe, an ancient Greek and Roman instrument. On a piece of ancient Grecian sculpture, now in Rome, a bagpiper is represented dressed like a modern Highlander. Nero is said to have played upon a bagpipe, 51. Our Highland regiments retain their pipers.

Bahama Isles (N. America) were the first points of discovery by Columbus. San Salvador was seen by him on the night of 11 Oct. 1492. New Providence was settled by the English in 1629. They were expelled by the Spaniards, 1641; returned, 1666; again expelled in 1703. In 1776, commodore Hopkins, of the U. S. Navy, stripped New Providence of its artillery and stores, and took the governor and other persons as prisoners. The isles were formally ceded to the English in 1783. Population in 1861, 35,287; in 1867, about 38,000; in 1871, 39,162. The Bahamas profited by blockade-running during the American Civil War, 1862-5. Governors: William Rawson, 1864; sir James Walker, 1868; John

Bahar (N. India), a province (conquered by Baber in 1530), with Bengal and Orissa, a princely dominion, became subject to the English East India Company in 1765 by the treaty of Allahabad for a quit-rent of about $300,000.

Bail. By ancient common-law, before and since the conquest, all felonies were bailable, till murder was excepted by statute; and by the 3 Edw. I. (1275), the power of bailing in treason, and in divers instances of felony, was taken away. Bail was further regulated in later reigns. It is now accepted in all cases, except felony; and where a magistrate refuses bail, it may be granted by a judge. Acts respecting bail passed 1826 and 1852. Excessive bail is forbidden by the constitution of the United States, and also by the organic laws of most of the states.

Bailiff, or SHERIFF, said to be of Saxon origin. London had its shire-reve prior to the conquest, and this officer was generally appointed for counties in England in 1073. Henry Cornhill and Richard Reynere were appointed bailiffs or sheriffs in London in 1189.—Stow. Sheriffs were appointed in Dublin under the name of bailiffs in 1308, and the name was changed to sheriff in 1548. There are still places where the chief magistrate is called bailiff, as the high-bailiff of Westminster. Bum-bailiff is a corruption of bound-bailiff, every bailiff being obliged to enter into bonds of security for his good behavior.—Blackstone.

Bairam, or BEIRAM, Mahometan festivals. In 1865 the Little Bairam, following the fast of Ramadan (which see), fell on 28 Feb., 1 and 2 March; in 1868, on 26, 27 28 Jan.; the Great Bairam in 1865, began on 10 May, in 1868, on 10 April.

Baize, a species of coarse woollen manufacture, was brought into England by some Flemish or Dutch emigrants who settled at Colchester, in Essex, and had privileges granted them by parliament in 1660. The trade was under the control of a corporation called the governors of the Dutch baize-hall, who examined the cloth previous to sale.—Anderson.

Baker and BAKKHUSES, see Brend.

Bakerian Lectures, Royal Society, originated in a bequest of 100*l*. by Henry Baker, F.R.S., the interest of which was to be given to one of the fellows for a scientific discourse to be delivered annually. Peter Woulfe gave the first lecture in 1765. Latterly it has been the custom to nominate the lecture a paper written by one of the fellows. Davy, Faraday, Tyndall, and other eminent men have given the lecture.

Balaklava, a small town in the Crimea, with a fine harbor, 10 miles S.E. from Sebastopol. After the battle of the Alma, the allies advanced upon this place, 26 Sept. 1854.

Battle of Balaklava: About 12,000 Russians, commanded by gen. L'YRANDI, attacked and took some redoubts in the vicinity, which had been entrusted to about 250 Turks. They next assaulted the English, by whom they were compelled to retire, mainly through the charge of the heavy cavalry, led by brigadier Scarlett, under the orders of lord Lucan. After this, from an unfortunate misconception of lord Raglan's order, lord Lucan ordered lord Cardigan, with the light cavalry, to charge the Russian army, which had reformed on its own ground with its artillery in front. The order was most gallantly obeyed, and great havoc was made on the enemy but, of 670 British horsemen, only 125 returned. (Termed by Tennyson "The Charge of the Six Hundred.") The infantry engaged were termed a "thin red line" 25 Oct. 1864
A banquet was given to the survivors at the Alexandra Palace 26 Oct. 1878
A sortie from the garrison of Sebastopol led to a desperate engagement here, in which the Russians were vigorously repulsed, with the loss of 2000 men killed and wounded, the allies losing about 600 22 March. 1855

Balance of Power to assure the independency and integrity of states and control the ambition of sovereigns, a principle said to have been first laid down by the Italian politicians of the fifteenth century on the invasion of Charles VIII. of France, 1494.—Robertson. It was recognized by the treaty of Münster, 24 Oct. 1648. The arrangements for the balance of power in Europe made in 1815, without the consent of the people of the countries concerned, have been nearly all set aside since 1830.

Balkawat, see Nineveh.

Baldachin, or BALDACHINO, more properly efforium (which see), a canopy placed over the altar in some ancient churches; the practice, beginning about 1180, was introduced into England, 1279. The proposal to erect one in St. Barnabas Church, Pimlico, was opposed in the consistory court, Aug. 1873. The trial took place 23, 24 Oct. Dr. Tristram decided against the erection of the baldachin, 15 Dec. 1873.

Balearic Islands, in the Mediterranean, called by the Greeks Baleares and by the Romans Baleares, from the dexterity of the inhabitants at allying; they include Majorca, Minorca, Iviça, Formentera, Cabrera, Conejera, and other islets. They were conquered by the Romans, 123 B.C.; by the Vandals, about A.D. 426; and formed part of Charlemagne's empire in 799. Conquered by the Moors about 1005, and held by them till about 1286, when they were annexed by Aragon; see Majorca and Minorca.

Balkans, the ancient Hemus, a range of mountains extending from the Adriatic to the Euxine. The passage, deemed impracticable, was completed by the Russians under Diebitsch, during the Russian and Turkish war, 26 July, 1829. An armistice was the consequence; and a treaty of peace was signed at Adrianople, 14 Sept. following. The Balkans were crossed by the Russians, under Gourko, 13 July, 1877; see Russo-Turkish War II. By the treaty of Berlin, 13 July, 1878, the Balkans became the frontiers of the sultan's European dominions.

Ballads may be traced in the British history to the Anglo-Saxons.—Turner. Adhelme, who died 709, is mentioned as the first who introduced ballads into England. "The harp was sent round, and those might sing who could."—Bede. Alfred sung ballads.—Malmesbury. Caute composed one.—Turner. Minstrels were protected by a charter of Edward IV.; but by a statute of Elizabeth they were made punishable among rogues and vagabonds and sturdy beggars.—Viner. "Give me the writing of the ballade, and you may make the laws."—Fletcher of Saltoun. The sea-ballads of Dibdin were very popular in the French war; he died 20 Jan. 1833. Mr. John Boosey's "Ballad Concerts," St. James's Hall, began 1866.

Ballarat, see Australia, 1861.

Ballets began through the meretricious taste of the Italian courts. One performed at the interview between our Henry VIII. and Francis I. of France in the Field of the Cloth of Gold, at Ardres, 1520.—Guicciardini. Ballets became popular in France, and Louis XIV. bore a part in one, 1664. They were introduced here with operas early in the eighteenth century.

Ballinamuick (Longford). Here, on 8 Sept. 1798, the Irish rebels and their French auxiliaries were defeated and captured.

Balloons.* A just idea of the principle of the construction of balloons was formed by Albert of Saxony, an Augustine monk in the 14th century, and adopted by a Portuguese Jesuit, Francisco Mendoza, who died at Lyons in 1626. The idea is also attributed to Bartolomeo de Guzman, who died in 1724. The principles of aeronautics include: 1, the power of a balloon to rise in the air; 2, the velocity of its ascent; and, 3, the stability of its suspension at any given height. The application of sails and rudders has been duly considered, and judged to be futile; but in 1872 Helmholtz thought they might be steered, if moving slowly. Fatal accidents to the voyagers have been estimated at 2 or 3 per cent. The Aeronautical Society of Great Britain, founded with the object of fostering and developing aeronautics and aerology, by the duke of Argyll, Mr. James Glaisher, air Charles Bright, and others, 12 Jan. 1866.

Francis Lana, a Jesuit, proposed to navigate the air by means of a boat raised by four hollow balls made of thin copper, from which the air had been exhausted. 1670

EQUESTRIAN ASCENTS.

Mr. Green affirmed that he ascended from London, on a horse attached to a balloon. May, 1828
 He did so from Vauxhall Gardens with a very diminutive pony. July, 1850
 Lieut. Gale, an Englishman, made an ascent with a horse from the Hippodrome of Vincennes, near Bordeaux.
 On descending and detaching the animal from the balloon, the people who held its ropes, from some misconception, prematurely let them go, and the unfortunate aeronaut was rapidly borne in the air before he was quite ready to resume his voyage. (He was discovered next morning dashed to pieces in a field a mile from where the balloon was found). 8 Sept. 1850
 The ascent of Madame Poitevin from Cremorne Gardens, near London, as "Europa on a bull" (a feat she had often performed in France), and several ascents on horses, brought the parties concerned before the police courts on a charge of cruelty to animals, and put an end to experiments that outraged public feeling.
 Aug. 1852
 M. Poitevin ascended on a horse in the vicinity of Paris, about the time just mentioned; was nearly drowned in the sea, near Malaga, while descending from his balloon (and died soon after). 1858

Ball's Bluff, Virginia, on the banks of the Potomac, North America. On 21 Oct. 1861, by direction of the Federal gen. C. P. Stone the heroic col. Baker crossed the river to reconnoitre. He attacked the Confederate camp at Leesburg, and was defeated with the loss of nearly 1000 men (Lossing) in killed, wounded, and mis-ing. The Confederates lost 153 killed, but the number of their wounded is unknown. The disaster was attributed to mismanagement, and in Feb. 1862, gen. Stone was arrested on suspicion of treason.

Ballynahinch (Ireland), where a sanguinary engagement took place between a large body of the insurgent Irish and the British troops, under gen. Nugent, 13 June, 1798. A large part of the town was destroyed, and the royal army suffered very severely.

Balmoral Castle, Deeside, Aberdeenshire; visited by her majesty in 1848, 1849, 1850. The estate was purchased for 32,000*l.* by prince Albert in 1852. In 1853 the present building, in the Scotch baronial style, was commenced, from designs by Mr. W. Smith of Aberdeen.

Baltic Sea,* OSTSKEE, or EASTERN SEA, separates Sweden and the Danish isles from Russia, Prussia, and Germany. Declared neutral for commerce by treaty between Russia and Sweden, 1759, and Denmark, 1760. It is often partially frozen. Charles X. of Sweden, with an army, crossed the Belts in 1658, and the Russians passed from Finland to Sweden on the ice in 1809.

Baltimore, a maritime city in Maryland, U. S., founded in 1729. Population in 1890, 332,190. On 12 Sept. 1814, the British army under col. Ross advanced against this place. He was killed in a skirmish; and the command was assumed by col. Brooke, who attacked the American army. A severe conflict followed. At evening both armies went into bivouac, and during the night the British fleet bombarded Fort M'Henry. It was during this bombardment, which lasted from the morning of 12 Sept. to the morning of 13 Sept., that the national song "The Star-spangled Banner" was written. At 3 o'clock A.M. 14 Sept., the British abandoned the attack by sea and land, and withdrew their forces. The loss of the Americans was 213 men; that of the British 289; see United States, 1861.

Bamberg (Bavaria), said to have been founded by Saxons, in 804, and endowed with a church by Charlemagne. It was made a bishopric in 1007, and the bishop was a prince of the empire till the treaty of Luneville, 1801, when Bamberg was secularized. It was incorporated with Bavaria in 1803. The noble cathedral, rebuilt in 1110, has been recently repaired. Bamberg was taken and pillaged by the Prussians in 1759.

Bamborough, or BAMBURGO, Northumberland, according to the "Saxon Chronicle," was built by king Ida about 547, and named Bebbanburgh. The castle and estate, the property of the Forsters, and forfeited to the crown, through their taking part in the rebellion in 1715, were purchased by Nathaniel lord Crewe, bishop of Durham, and bequeathed by him for various charitable purposes. The valuable library was founded by the trustees in 1778. The books are lent to persons residing within 20 miles of the castle.

Bampton Lectures (Theological), delivered at Oxford annually, began in 1780, with a lecture by James Bandinel, D.D. The lecturer is paid out of the proceeds of an estate bequeathed for the purpose by the rev. John Bampton (died 1751), and the lectures are published. Among the more remarkable lectures were those by White (1784), Heber (1815), Whately (1822), Milman (1827), Hampden (1832), and Mansel (1858).

Banbury, Oxfordshire, a Saxon town. The castle, erected by Alexander de Blois, bishop of Lincoln, 1125, has been frequently besieged. In 1646 it was taken by the parliamentarians and demolished. At Edgecot or Danesmore, near Banbury, during an insurrection, the army of Edward IV., under the earl of Pembroke, was defeated 26 July, 1469; their leader and his brother were soon after taken prisoners and executed. Banbury cakes were renowned in the time of Ben Jonson, and Banbury Cross was destroyed by the Puritans. Cakes were presented to the queen at Banbury 30 Nov. 1866.

Band of Gentlemen Pensioners, see Gentlemen-at-Arms.

Banda Isles (ten), Eastern Archipelago, visited by the Portuguese in 1511, who settled on them, 1521, but were expelled by the Dutch about 1600. Rohun island was ceded to the English in 1616. The Bandas were taken by the latter in 1796; restored in 1801; retaken in 1811; and restored in Aug. 1816.

Banda Oriental (South America), a portion of the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, one part of which, in 1828, was incorporated with Brazil, while another part became independent, as the republic of Uruguay.

Bangalore (S. India) was besieged by the British under lord Cornwallis, 6 March, and taken by storm, 21 March, 1791. Bangalore was restored to Tippoo in 1792, when he destroyed the strong fort, deemed the bulwark of Mysore.

Bangor (Banchor Iskood, or Monachorum), Flintshire, the site of an ancient monastery, very populous, if it be true that 1200 monks were slain by Ethelfrid, king of the Angles, for praying for the Welsh in their conflict with him in 607.—Tanner.

Bangor (Maine), an important city and lumber market, which has chiefly grown up since 1836. The British held the place for a brief time, 1814.

Bangor (N. Caernarvonshire). The church is dedicated to St. Daniel, who was a bishop, 516. Owen Glendower greatly defaced the cathedral; and the bishop Bulkeley alienated many of the lands, and even sold the bells of the church, 1553. The see is valued in the king's books at 131l. 16s. 4d. An order in council, directing that the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph be united on the next vacancy in either, was issued in 1838; but rescinded in 1847. Present income, 4200l.

BISHOPS OF BANGOR.

1800. William Cleaver, translated to St. Asaph, 1806.
1806. John Randolph, translated to London, 1809.
1809. Henry William Majendie, died 9 July, 1830.
1830. Christopher Bethell, died 19 April, 1859.
1859. James Colquhoun Campbell.
The cathedral was reopened after restoration, 11 May, 1880.

Bangorian Controversy was occasioned by Dr. Benjamin Hoadley, bishop of Bangor, preaching a sermon before George I., 31 March, 1717, upon the text, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John xviii. 36), in which he demonstrated the spiritual nature of the church and kingdom of Christ. He thereby drew upon himself the indignation of almost all the clergy, who published hundreds of pamphlets.

Banishment, an ancient punishment. By 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1597) dangerous rogues were to be banished out of the realm, and to be liable to death if they returned; see Transportation.

Bank. The name is derived from banco, a bench, erected in the market-place for the exchange of money. The first was established in Italy, 808, by the Lombard Jews, of whom some settled in Lombard street, London, where many bankers still reside. The Mint in the Tower of London was anciently the depository for merchants' cash, until Charles I. seized the money as a loan, and in 1640 the traders lodged their money with the goldsmiths in Lombard street; see Bank of England; Bankers' Books; Drafts; Savings-banks.

Imperial Bank of Germany (formerly of Prussia)	1 Jan. 1876

Bank of ENGLAND was projected by William Paterson, a Scotch merchant (see Darwin), to meet the difficulty experienced by William III. in raising the supplies for the war against France. By the influence of Paterson and Michael Godfrey, 40 merchants subscribed £500,000, towards the sum of 1,300,000, to be lent to the government at 8 per cent., in consideration of the subscribers being incorporated as a bank. The scheme was violently opposed in parliament, but the bill obtained the royal assent 25 April, 1694, and the charter was granted 27 July following, appointing sir John Houbton the first governor, and Michael Godfrey the first deputy-governor. The bank commenced active operations on 1 Jan. 1695, at Grocers' Hall, Poultry,† issuing notes for 20*l.* and upwards, and discounting bills for 4*l.* to 6 per cent. The charter was renewed in 1707, 1708, 1712, 1716, 1721, 1724, 1746, 1749, 1764, 1781, 1800, 1803, 1818, 1833, 1844.—Lancet.

Bank Holidays Act, passed 25 May, 1871, chiefly by the instrumentality of sir John Lubbock.

BANK HOLIDAYS.—England and Ireland: Easter Monday, Monday in Whitsun-week, first Monday in August, 26 December (if a week-day).—Scotland: New Year's day, Christmas day (if either falls on Sunday, the following Monday to be a bank holiday), Good Friday, first Monday in May and August.

BANK HOLIDAYS, U. S.—Christmas and New Year's day, 22 February, 30 May, 4 July, and all other legal holidays of the states in which banks are situated.

BANK OF IRELAND. On 9 Dec. 1721, the Irish house of commons rejected a bill for establishing a national bank. Important failures in Irish banks occurred in 1727, 1733, and 1758; this led gradually to the establishment of the Bank of Ireland at St. Mary's abbey, Dublin, 1 June, 1783. The business was removed to the late parliament house, in College Green, in May, 1808. Branch banks of this establishment have been formed in most of the provincial towns in Ireland, all since 1828. Irish Banking Act passed, 21 July, 1845.

BANK OF SAVINGS, see Savings-banks.

Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 48, passed 11 Aug. 1876; repealed by a fresh act, 23 May, 1879.

Bankers' Institute, meeting to establish it, 29 May, 1878; sir John Lubbock elected president, 11 March, 1879; first general meeting, 23 May, 1879. (1300 members.)

Bankrupt (signifying either bank or bench broken), a trader declared to be unable to pay his just debts. The laws on the subject (1543, 1571 et seq.) were consolidated and amended in 1825, 1849, 1852, 1854, 1861, 1868, and 1869; see Debtors.

Lord chancellor Thurlow refused a bankrupt's certificate, because he had lost 5s. at one time in gaming.

17 July, 1788

Enacted that members of the house of commons becoming bankrupt, and not paying their debts in full, should vacate their seats.

 Bills for reforming bankruptcy law were in vain brought before parliament. 1869, 1860
 Bill by the lord chancellor Westbury (formerly sir R. Bethell), 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, passed (1861); great changes made, the court for relief of insolvent debtors abolished, and increased powers given to the commissioners in bankruptcy, etc.; the new orders issued.

12 Oct. 1861

By Lord Hatherley's Bankruptcy Act, passed 9 Aug. 1869, a new bankruptcy court was established in place of the commissioners', which sat last time, when above 300 petitions of bankruptcy were received, 31 Dec. 1869. "Paid trustee system," clauses 125, 126, termed "a gentlemanly way of getting rid of debts." The new judge, the hon. James Bacon, sat. 1 Jan. 1870

Justice Giffard, the judge of the Bankruptcy Appeal Court, decided (in the case of the duke of Newcastle) that a peer can be made a bankrupt, Nov. 1869, which decision was affirmed on appeal to the house of lords in the following year; other petitions against peers have been filed. It was decided that bankrupts cannot sit in the house of peers. 10 Feb. 1871

In the United States, both the general and state governments have power to pass bankrupt laws, but the constitution specially empowers Congress to make uniform laws upon this subject. The power has been exercised three times—1st, in the act of 4 April, 1800, repealed 19 Dec. 1803; 2d, in the act of 19 Aug. 1841, repealed 1843; 3d, by act of 2 March, 1867, repealed by act of 7 July, 1878, which took effect. 1 Sept. 1878

Banks in the United States. The first bank in the United States was the Bank of North America, chartered by congress at the instance of Robert Morris in 1780, and by the state of Pennsylvania 1781, with a capital of $400,000. It is still in existence, and has a capital of $1,000,000. The first bank of the United States was incorporated in 1791, but did not go into operation until 1794. It was the suggestion of Hamilton, the secretary of the treasury; its capital was $10,000,000. At that time the whole banking capital of the United States was only $2,000,000, invested in the Bank of North America. The Bank of New York, founded 1784, and the Bank of Massachusetts in Boston, founded the same year. The charter of the United States Bank was limited to twenty years; its headquarters were fixed in the city of Philadelphia, and it was to be governed by twenty directors. A new one was chartered in 1816, for the same term, with a capital of $35,000,000. In it the government funds were kept on deposit. An act of congress in 1832, re-chartering it, was vetoed by president Jackson. He also caused the United States funds to be withdrawn from it in Sept. 1833. This act produced a violent partisan feeling throughout the Union, and strong movements were made to impeach the president. A resolution of censure was passed by the United States senate in March, 1834. It was expunged by order of the senate in Jan. 1837. Efforts were made in 1814 to establish a similar bank under another name. A bill for establishing the Fiscal Bank of the United States passed the house of representatives in Aug. 1841. It was vetoed by president Tyler. Another bill for a "Fiscal Corporation" was vetoed by him on the 9th of Sept. This caused the resignation of all the cabinet, except Daniel Webster, on the 17th of the month. In 1828 the "Safety Fund System" was tried in New York, but in 1838 was given up, and the free banking system introduced, which worked well, and was imitated in many states. The New York Clearing-house was established in Oct. 1853; that in Boston was opened for business 29 March, 1856. The Suffolk Bank system of redemption in Boston began 1825. The "Bank of Mutual Redemption," set up in opposition to the Suffolk Bank, was chartered 1855, but did not go into operation for several years, and never accomplished much. In 1857 there was a general suspension of specie payments throughout the Union, precipitated by the bankruptcy of the Ohio Life and Mutual Insurance Company, but it passed off with comparatively little injury. Specie payments were suspended again soon after the breaking-out of the Civil War, and were resumed 1 Jan. 1879. (See Banks, National, infra.)

Banks, Joint-stock. Since the act of 1826, a number of these banks have been established. In 1840, the amount of paper currency issued by joint-stock other banking establishments had been declared insolvent. Every succeeding week continued to add from seventy to a hundred merchants, traders, and manufacturers to the bankrupt list. This was the period of bubble speculation, and of unprecedented commercial embarrassment and ruin.

* Liquidations now preferred to bankruptcy.

banks amounted to 4,138,618*l*.; the amount in circulation by private banks, same year, was 6,973,613*l*.—the total amount exceeding eleven millions.* In Ireland similar banks have been instituted, the first being the Hibernian Bank, in 1825. The note-circulation of joint-stock banks, on 1 Oct. 1855, was, in England, 3,990,800*l*.; in Scotland, 4,280,000*l*.; and in Ireland, 6,785,000*l*.; total, with English private banks, about 19,000,000*l*.; and with the Bank of England, above 39,000,000*l*. By the new Companies Act, passed 15 Aug. 1879, unlimited companies may register as limited.

Banks, NATIONAL. The national-bank system of the United States was organized 25 Feb. 1863, to give uniformity to the paper currency and the banking laws of the country. The old banks, authorized by the several states, were induced by certain privileges, or forced by special taxes, to surrender their state charters and accept charters as national banks from the United States government. A subsequent act was adopted and approved 12 June, 1870. By the terms of this law the circulation of the national banks was limited to $354,000,000, which was secured by the deposit of the bonds of the government with the United States treasurer. This limitation was removed by later legislation. On the 1st Oct. 1881, there were 2132 national banks in existence, with an aggregate capital of $463,821,985, and an aggregate circulation of $360,344,250.

Banks of SCOTLAND. The old bank of Scotland was set up in 1695 at Edinburgh, and began 1 Nov., the second institution of the kind in the empire; lending money to the crown was prohibited.

* THE ROYAL BRITISH BANK was established in 1849, by Mr. John McGregor, M.P., and others, under sir R. Peel's Joint-stock Banking Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113 (1844), as an attempt to introduce the Scotch banking system of cash credits into England. On 3 Sept. 1866, it stopped payment, occasioning much distress and ruin to many small tradesmen and others. In consequence of strong evidence of the existence of fraud in the management of the bank, elicited during the examination before the court of bankruptcy, the government instructed the attorney-general to file ex-officio informations against the manager, Mr. H. Innes Cameron, and several of the directors. They were convicted 27 Feb. 1868, after thirteen days' trial, and sentenced to various degrees of imprisonment. Attempts to mitigate the punishment failed (May, 1868); but all were released except Cameron and Esdalle, in July, 1868. In April, 1860, dividends had been paid to the amount of 15*s*. in the pound. The attorney-general brought in a bill called the Fraudulent Trustees' Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, to prevent the recurrence of such transactions.

On 19 April, 1860, a deficiency of 263,000*l*. was discovered in the Union Bank of London. Mr. George Pullinger, a cashier, confessed himself guilty of forgery and fraud, and was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment.

On 18 Feb. 1861, it was discovered that John Durden, a clerk of the Commercial Bank of London, had robbed his employers of 67,000*l*. of which 46,000*l*. might be recovered.

In Dec. 1864, J. W. Terry and Thomas Burch, manager and secretary of the Unity Bank, were committed on a charge of conspiracy for fabricating accounts; but acquitted on their trial.

Bannatyne Club, named after George Bannatyne (the publisher), was established in 1823 by sir Walter Scott and others, for printing works illustrative of the history, antiquities, and literature of Scotland, of which about 113 volumes were issued; dissolved, 1860.

Banner Cross Murder, see Trials, 1879.

Banneret, KNIGHT, a dignity between baron and knight, anciently conferred by the king under the royal standard on the field of battle. Its origin is of uncertain time; Edmondson dates it 736, but it was probably created by Edward I. John Chandos is said to have been made a banneret by the Black Prince and the king of Castile at Najara, 3 April, 1367. The dignity was conferred on John Smith, who rescued the royal standard at Edgehill fight, 23 Oct. 1642. It fell into disuse, but was revived by George III. for sir William Erskine, in 1764, and for admiral Pye, and capt. Knight, Bickerton, and Vernon, in 1773.

Banners were common to all nations. The Jewish tribes had standards or banners—Numb. ii. (1491 n.c.). The standard of Constantine bore the inscription In hoc signo vinces ("By this sign thou shalt conquer"), under the figure of the cross; see Cross. The magical banner of the Danes (said to have been a black raven on a red ground) was taken by Alfred when he defeated Hubba, 878. St. Martin's cap, and afterwards the celebrated auriflamme, or oriflamme, were the standards of France about 1100; see Auriflamme, Standards, etc.

Bannockburn (Stirlingshire), the site of two battles: (1) between Robert Bruce of Scotland and Edward II. of England, 24 June, 1314. The army of Bruce consisted of 30,000; that of Edward of 100,000 men, of whom 52,000 were archers. The English crossed a rivulet to the attack, and Bruce having dug and covered pits, they fell into them, and were thrown into confusion. The rout was complete; the English king narrowly escaped, and 50,000 were killed or taken prisoners. (2) At Sauchieburn, near here, James III. was defeated and slain on 11 June, 1488, by his rebellious nobles.

Banns, in the feudal law, were a solemn proclamation of any kind; hence arose the present custom of asking banns, or giving notice before marriage; said to have been introduced into the English church about 1200. The proper time of publishing banns in the church was the subject of much discussion in 1867.

Banqueting-house, Whitehall, London, built by Inigo Jones, about 1619.

Bantam (Java). Here a British factory was established by capt. Lancaster, in 1603. The English and Danes were driven from their factories by the Dutch in 1683. Bantam surrendered to the British in 1811, but was restored to the Dutch at the peace in 1814.

Bantry Bay (S. Ireland), where a French fleet, bringing succor to the adherents of James II., attacked the English under admiral Herbert, 1 May, 1689; the latter retired to form in line and were not pursued. A French squadron of seven sail of the line and two frigates, armed en flûte, and seventeen transports, anchored here for a few days, without effect, Dec. 1796.—MUTINY of the Bantry Bay squadron under admiral Mitchell was in Dec. 1801. In Jan. 1802, twenty-two of the mutineers were tried on board the Gladiator, at Portsmouth, when Sustentation Fund; stopped for a few days during crisis, Nov. 1867. In 1878 paid dividend 12 per cent. (100*l.* stock, 236*l.*); 1272 shareholders, very many in humble circumstances. The bank stopped 2 Oct. Investigation showed great fraud and false accounts. Estimated loss, 6,783,000*l.*, causing much calamity and ruin to many. The directors, J. Stewart, Lewis Potter, R. Salmond, Wm. Taylor, H. Inglis, and J. I. Wright, and the manager, R. S. Stronach, were committed for trial, 30 Oct. Stronach and Potter were convicted of falsifying and fabricating balance-sheets (18 months' imprisonment; the others of uttering the same, 8 months' imprisonment), 1 Feb. 1879.

The liquidators reported that about 1819 contributors had paid about 4,500,000*l.* (13*s.* 4*d.* in the pound), 1 Dec. 1879; 2*s.* in the pound paid to depositors, 2 March, 1880.

seventeen were condemned to death, of whom eleven were executed; the others were sentenced to receive each 200 lashes. The executions took place on board the Majestic, Centaur, Formidable, Téméraire, and L'Achille, 8 to 18 Jan. 1802.

Bapaume (N. France), the site of severe indecisive engagements between the French army of the north, under Faidherbe, and the Germans, under Manteuffel; the French retreated 2, 3 Jan. 1871.

Baptism, the ordinance of admission into the church, practised by all Christian sects except Quakers. John the Baptist baptized Christ, 30 (Matt. iii.). Infant baptism is mentioned by Irenæus about 97. In the reign of Constantine, 319 baptisteries were built, and baptism was performed by dipping the person all over. In the west sprinkling was adopted. Much controversy has arisen since 1831 (particularly in 1849 and 1850), in the church of England, respecting baptismal regeneration, which the Arches Court of Canterbury decided to be a doctrine of the church of England; see Trials, 1849, and note. Demanding fees for baptisms was made unlawful by an act passed 18 July, 1872.

Baptists (see Anabaptists). A sect distinguished by their opinions respecting (1) the proper subjects, and (2) the proper mode, of baptism; the former they affirm to be those who are able to make a profession of faith; the latter to be total immersion. There are seven sections of Baptists: Arminian, Calvinistic (or particular), etc. The first Baptist church formed in London was about 1608. They published their confession of faith in 1643; revised in 1689. In 1851 they had 130 chapels in London and 2789 (with sittings for 752,353 persons) in England and Wales. Rhode Island, America, was settled by Baptists in 1635.

Bar sur Aube (N.E. France). Here the French, under Oudinot and Macdonald, were defeated by the allies, 27 Feb. 1814.

Barataria Bay, on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, about thirty miles west of the Mississippi river. The bay was the headquarters of a band of pirates and smugglers under Jean Lafitte; and in 1814, when the British were preparing their expedition against New Orleans, they sent a vessel under capt. Lockyer to secure Lafitte's assistance, which, with his knowledge of the intricate waterways of that region, would have been invaluable. Lafitte asked for time to consider the offer made him (of $30,000 and the command of a ship), but secretly sent messengers to reveal the plan to the authorities in New Orleans, and to offer his services to the Americans on the sole condition that he and his men should be pardoned the offences charged against them. This proposition was accepted, and Lafitte rendered valuable services.

Barbadoes, a West India island, one of the Windward Isles discovered by the Portuguese about 1600, taken possession of by the English 1605, and settled by sir Wm. Courteen, who founded Jamestown, 1625. As many royalists settled here, the island was taken by the parliamentarians in 1682. Population, 1876, 162,042; white, 16,560; colored, 145,482.

Barbary, in N. Africa, considered to comprise Algeria, Morocco, Fez, Tunis, and Tripoli, with their dependencies. Piratical states (nominally subject to Turkey) were founded on the coast by Barbarossa, about 1518.

Barbers lived in Greece in the fifth century and at Rome in the third century A.C. In England, formerly, the business of a surgeon was united to the barber's, and he was denominated a BARBER-SURGEON. A London company was formed in 1308, and incorporated 1462.
 This union was partially dissolved in 1540, and wholly so in 1745. "No person using any shaving or barbering in London shall occupy any surgery, letting of blood, or other matter, except only drawing of teeth."—32 Hen.
 VIII. 1540.

Barca (N. Africa), the Greek Barce, a colony of Cyrene. It was successively subjugated by the Persians, Egyptians, and Saracens. In 1550 the sultan Solymán combined Barca with the newly conquered pachalic of Tripoli.

Barcelona (N.E. Spain), an ancient maritime city, said to have been rebuilt by Hamilcar Barca, father of the great Hannibal, about 233 A.C. It was held by the Romans, Goths, Moors, and Franks, and, with the province of which it is the capital, was made an independent country about A.D. 864, and incorporated with Aragon, 1164, the last count becoming king. The city has suffered much by war. The siege by the French in 1694, was relieved by the approach of the English fleet, commanded by admiral Russell; but the city was taken by the earl of Peterborough in 1706. It was bombarded and taken by the duke of Berwick and the French in 1714, and was taken by Napoleon in 1808, and retained till 1814. It revolted against the queen in 1841, and was bombarded and taken in Dec. 1842, by Espartero.
 Frequent insurrections here; one suppressed Jan. 1874.
 An exhibition opened by the king Alfonso XII. 4 March 1877. Barcelona very prosperous, 1879.

Barclay, CAPTAIN, see Pedestrianism.

Bardesanists, followers of Bardesanes, of Mesopotamia, who embraced the errors of Valentinus, after refuting them, and added denial of the incarnation, resurrection, etc., about 175.

Bards. Demodocus is mentioned as a bard by Homer; and we find bards, according to Strabo, among the Romans before the age of Augustus. The Welsh bards formed an hereditary order, regulated, it is said, by laws enacted about 940 and 1078. They lost their privileges at the conquest by Edward I. in 1284. The institution was revived by the Tudor sovereigns; and their Eistedd-fods (or meetings) have been and are still frequently held: at Swansea, Aug. 1863; at Llandudno, Aug. 1864;
 in the vale of Conway, 7 Aug. 1865; at Chester, 4 Sept.
 1866; at Carmarthen, 3 Sept. 1867; at Ruthin, 5-7 Aug.
 1868; at Rhyl, 8-12 Aug. 1870; at Portmadoc, Aug.
 1872; at Mold, Aug. 1873; at various places in 1874-6; at Carnarvon, 21 Aug. 1877; at Llanrwst, 1-3 Aug.; at Menai Bridge, Aug. 1878; at Conway, 6 Aug., and at other places, 1879. The Cymmrodorion Society held an Eisteddfod at Carnarvon, 23 Aug. 1880. The Gwynedd-gion Society of Bards was founded in 1770. Turloch O'Carolan, the last of the Irish bards, died in 1788.—

Barebone's Parliament. Cromwell, supreme in the three kingdoms, summoned 122 persons, such as he thought he could manage, who, with six from Scotland and five from Ireland, met as a parliament, 4 July, 1653. It obtained its appellation from a nickname given to one of its members, a leather-seller, named "Praise-God Barbon." The majority evinced much sense and spirit, proposing to reform abuses, improve the administration of the law, etc. The parliament was suddenly dissolved, 13 Dec. 1653, and Cromwell made lord protector.

Bareilly, province of Delhi (N.W. India), ceded to the East India Company by the ruler of Oude in 1801.
 A mutiny at Bareilly, the capital, was suppressed in April, 1816. On 7 May, 1858, it was taken from the cruel sepoy rebels.

Barfleur (N. France), where William, duke of Normandy, equipped the fleet by which he conquered England, 1066. Near it, William, duke of Normandy, son of Henry I., in his passage from Normandy, was shipwrecked, 25 Nov. 1120, when the prince, his bride, and many others perished. Barfleur was destroyed by the English in the campaign in which they won the battle of Crecy, 1346. The French navy was destroyed near the cape by admiral Russell, after the victory of La Hogue, 19 May, 1692.

Bari (S. Italy), the Barium of Horace, was, in the 9th century, a stronghold of the Saracens, and was captured by the emperor Louis II., a descendant of Charlemagne, in 871. In the 10th century it became subject to the Eastern Empire, and remained so till it was taken by Robert Guiscard, the Norman, about 1060. A great ecclesiastical council was held here on 1 Oct. 1098, when the filioque article of the Creed and the procession of the Holy Spirit were the subjects of discussion.

Baring Island, Arctic Sea, discovered by capt.
 Penny in 1850-1, and so named by him after sir Francis Baring, first lord of the admiralty in 1849.

Barium (Greek, barys, heavy), a metal found abundantly as carbonate and sulphate. The oxide baryta was first recognized as an earth distinct from lime by Scheele in 1774; and the metal was first obtained by Humphry Davy, in 1808.—Watts.

Bark, see Jeauit's-bark.

Barlaamites, followers of Barlaam, a learned Calabrian monk of the order of St. Basil, who maintained various peculiar tenets, attacked the Greek monks, supported the Latin against the Greek church in a controversy at Constantinople, 1337, and acted as the emperor's envoy in an attempt to reconcile the churches in 1339.
 He died about 1348.

Barmecides, a powerful Persian family, celebrated for virtue and courage, were massacred through the jealousy of the caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, about 802.
 His vizier Giafar was a Barmecide. The phrase Bar-mecide (or imaginary) feast originated in the story of the barber's sixth brother, in the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments."

Barnabites, an order of monks, established in Milan about 1530, were much engaged in instructing youth, relieving the sick and aged, and converting heretics.

Barnardo Homes. Dr. T. J. Barnardo, of German extraction, born in Ireland, came to London, and in 1866 began energetically to promote the welfare of homeless children.

Barnard's, SIR JOHN, ACT (7 Geo. II., c. 8), entitled "An act to prevent the infamous practice of stockjobbing," was passed in 1734, and repealed in 1860. Sir John Barnard (born 1685, died 1764) was an eminent lord mayor of London.

His home for boys at Stepney, founded 1870, was followed by one for girls, at Barkingside, Essex, with infirmary, schools, etc.; all were reported successful in 1874.

His disinterestedness and management having been impugned, he gave up the management to trustees, and invited investigation. The arbiters (canon Miller and Messrs. J. B. Maule and Wm. Graham) in their report, after commenting on the imperfect evidence, commended the charities, and generally exonerated Dr. Barnardo, 15 Oct. 1877. (See Coffee Palaces and East End Juvenile Mission.)

Barnburners. A name given to Democrats in the United States who withdrew from the regular organization of their party in 1846. The name is said to have been given to them in allusion to the story of a man who burned his barn in order to get rid of rats; the barnburners wished to legislate against all corporations because they feared the re-establishment of the United States Bank. The name was used chiefly in New York. Other origins have been assigned to the nickname.

Barnet, Hertfordshire. Here, at Gladsmore Heath, Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians, on Easter-day, 14 April, 1471, when the earl of Warwick and his brother the marquis of Montacute, or Montague, and 10,000 men were slain. A column commemorative of this battle has been erected at the meeting of the St. Albans and Hatfield roads.

Baroda, see India, 1874-5.

Barometers. Torricelli, a Florentine, knowing that water did not rise in a pump through what was supposed to be nature's abhorrence of a vacuum, imitated the action of a pump with mercury, and made the first barometer, about 1643. Pascal's experiments (1646) enhanced the value of the discovery by applying it to the measurement of heights. Wheel barometers were contrived in 1668; pendent barometers in 1695; marine in 1700; and many improvements have been made since. In the aneroid barometer (from a, no, and νηρός, watery) no liquid is employed; the atmospheric pressure being exerted on a metallic spring. Its invention (attributed to Conté, in 1798, but due to Vidi, who died in April, 1866), excited much attention in 1848-9. Barometers were placed at N.E. coast stations in 1860 by the duke of Northumberland and others.

Mr. James B. Jordan's very delicate glycerine barometer, in which one inch is expanded to nearly eleven inches, was described to the Royal Society 22 Jan. 1880, and was set up during the year at Kew and other places. The publication of two hourly variations of one at the office begun in the Times 25 Oct. 1880.

Baron, formerly the only title in our peerage, now the lowest. Its original name in England, Varasour, was changed by the Saxons into Thane, and by the Normans into Baron. Many of this rank had undoubtedly assisted in or been summoned to parliament (in 1205); but the first precept found is of no higher date than the 49 Hen. III. 1265. The first raised to this dignity by patent was John de Beauchamp, created baron of Kidderminster, by Richard II., 1387. The barons took arms against king John, and compelled him to grant the great charter of our liberties, and the charter of our forests, at Runnymede, near Windsor, June, 1215. Charles II. granted a coronet to barons on his restoration, 1660.

Baronets, the first in rank among the gentry, and the only knighthood that is hereditary, were instituted by James I., 1611. The rebellion in Ulster seems to have given rise to this order, it having been required of a baronet, on his creation, to pay into the exchequer as much as would maintain "thirty soldiers three years at eightpence a day in the province of Ulster in Ireland." It was further required that a baronet should be a gentleman born, and have a clear estate of 1000*l.* per annum. The first baronet was sir Nicholas Bacon (whose successor is therefore styled Primus Baronetorum Angliæ), 22 May, 1611. The baronets of Ireland were created in 1619; the first being sir Francis Blundell. Baronets of Nova Scotia were created 1625; sir Robert Gordon the first baronet. —All baronets created since the Irish Union in 1801 are of the United Kingdom. Betham's "Baronetage of England," 5 vols. 4to, 1801-5.

Barons' War arose in consequence of the faithlessness of Henry III. and the oppression of his favorites in 1258. The barons, headed by Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, and Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, met at Oxford in 1262, and enacted statutes to which the king objected. In 1263 their disputes were in vain referred to the decision of Louis IX. of France. War broke out, and on 14 May, 1264, the king's party was totally defeated at Lewes; and De Montfort became the virtual ruler of the kingdom. The war was renewed; and at the battle of Evesham, 4 Aug. 1265, De Montfort was slain, and the barons were defeated; but they did not render their final submission till 1268. A history of this war was published by Mr. W. H. Blaauw in 1844; 2d ed. 1871.

Barossa, see Barrosa.

Barracks (from "Baraque—Hutte que font les soldats en campagne pour se mettre à couvert") were not numerous in this country until about 1789. A superintendent-general was appointed in 1793, since when commodious barracks have been built in the various garrison towns and central points of the empire.—A report, censuring the condition of many barracks, was presented to parliament in 1858; and great improvements were effected under the direction of Mr. Sidney (afterwards lord) Herbert; see Aldershot.

Barrel-organs, see Organs.

Barricades, mounds formed of trees and earth, for military defence. During the wars of the League in France, in 1588, the people made barricades by means of chains, casks, etc., and compelled the royal troops to retire. During the war of the Fronde, a barricade was erected in Paris on 27 Aug. 1648. Barricades composed of overturned vehicles, etc., were erected in Paris in the insurrections of 27-30 July, 1830, and 23-26 June, 1848, when sanguinary conflicts took place.

Barrier Treaty, by which the Low Countries were ceded to the emperor Charles VI., was signed by the British, Imperial, and Dutch ministers, 15 Nov. 1715.

Barristers are said to have been first appointed by Edward I., about 1291, but there is earlier mention of professional advocates. They are of various ranks, as king's or queen's counsel, sergeants, etc., which see. Students for the bar must keep a certain number of terms at the Inns of Court previously to being called, and by the regulations of 1853 must pass a public examination. Irish students must keep eight terms in England.

Barrosa, or BAROSSA (S. Spain). The British army, commanded by major-gen. sir Thomas Graham, afterwards lord Lynedoch, totally defeated the French under marshal Victor, 5 March, 1811, the French leaving nearly 3000 dead, six pieces of cannon, and an eagle, the first that the British had taken; the loss of the British was 1169 men killed and wounded.

Barrow Island (Arctic Sea), discovered by capt. Penny in 1850-1, and named by him in honor of John Barrow, esq., son of sir John.

Barrow-in-Furness (Lancashire), in 1847, was a village with a population of about 330, which in 1867 had increased to above 17,000, and in 1874 to 35,000, in consequence of the large manufacture of iron from the ore (hematite) found there. On 19 Sept. 1867, new docks were opened in the presence of the dukes of Devonshire and Buccleuch (proprietors of the land), Mr. Gladstone, and others.

Barrowists, a name given to the Brownists (which see).

Barrows, circular or oblong mounds, found in Britain and other countries, were ancient sepulchres. Sir Richard Hoare caused several barrows near Stonehenge to be opened; in them were found Celtic ornaments, such as beads, buckles, and brooches, in amber, wood, and gold;

Nov. 1808. 230 barrows were opened and discoveries made, chiefly in Yorkshire, 1866 et seq., under the superintendence of the rev. canon William Greenwell, who published his elaborate work "British Barrows" in Dec. 1877.

Barrows at Aldbourn, North Wilts, were opened by canon Greenwell and rev. Walter Money, Sept.-Oct. 1878. Canon Greenwell gave urns and other results of his explorations to the British Museum in 1879.

Barrow's Straits (N. Arctic Sea), explored by Edward Parry as far as Melville island, lat. 74° 26' N. and long. 113° 47' W. The strait, named after sir John Barrow, was entered on 2 Aug. 1819. The thermometer was 55° below zero of Fahrenheit.

Bars in music appear in Agricola's "Musica Instrumentalis," 1529; and in Morley's "Practical Music," 1597, for score music. Henry Lawes used them in his "Ayres and Dialogues," 1653.

Bartholomew, St., THE APOSTLE, martyred 71. The festival (24 Aug. o.s., 3 Sept. n.s.) is said to have been instituted 1130.

Bartholomew the Great, St., near Smithfield. The building of the church, said to have begun 1102, restored by subscription and reopened. 29 March, 1868
Bartholomew Fair. The charter was granted by Henry I. 1133, and was long held in Smithfield (whicli see). The shows were discontinued in 1850, and the fair was proclaimed for the last time in 1855. In 1855 Mr. H. Morley published his "History of Bartholomew Fair," with many illustrations.

THE MASSACRE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW commenced at Paris on the night of the festival. 24 Aug. 1572
According to Sully, 70,000 Huguenots, or French Protestants, including women and children, were murdered throughout the kingdom by secret orders from Charles IX., at the instigation of his mother, the queen dowager, Catherine de' Medici.

La Popélonière calculates the victims at 20,000; Adriani, De Serres, and De Thou say 30,000; Davila states them at 40,000; and Poréeze makes the number 100,000. Above 500 persons of rank, and 10,000 of inferior condition, perished in Paris alone, besides those slaughtered in the provinces. Pope Gregory XIII. ordered a Te Deum to be performed, with other rejoicings.

Bartholomew, St., a West Indian island held by Sweden. It was colonized by the French in 1648; and has been several times taken and restored by the British. It was ceded to Sweden by France in 1785; captured by the English and restored, 1801; ceded to France, 1877.

Bartholomites, a religious order expelled from Armenia, settled at Genoa 1307, where is preserved in the Bartholomite church the image which Christ is said to have sent to king Abgarus. The order suppressed by pope Innocent X. 1650.

Barton Aqueduct (near Manchester) was constructed by James Brindley, to carry the Bridgewater canal over the Irwell, at a height of 39 feet above the river; completed in 1761.

Basel (Basle, French Bâle), a rich city in Switzerland. The eighteenth general council sat here from Dec. 1431, to May, 1443. Many important reforms in the church were proposed, but not carried into effect: among others the union of the Greek and Roman churches. The university was founded in 1460. Treaties of peace between France, Spain, and Prussia were concluded here in 1795. It was made a free imperial city 1392, but joined the Swiss confederation 1501.

Bashi-bazouks, irregular Turkish troops, partially employed in the Crimean war, 1854-6.

Basientello (S. Naples). Here the army of Otho

II., in an ambuscade, was nearly cut to pieces by the Greeks and Saracens, 13 July, 982; the emperor barely escaped.

Basilians, an order of monks, which obtained its name from St. Basil (who died 380); was reformed by pope Gregory in 1569.—A sect, founded by Basil, a physician of Bulgaria, which rejected the books of Moses, the eucharist, and baptism, and are said to have had everything in common, 1110. Basil was burned alive in 1118.

Basilica, a body of law, in Greek, including the Institutes of Justinian, the Pandects, etc., arranged by order of the emperor Basil, the Macedonian, and his son Leo the Philosopher, 875-911. The term basilica (palace) was applied to places of worship by the early Christian emperors.

Basilikon Doron (Royal Gift), precepts on the art of government, composed by James I. of England for his son Henry, and first published at Edinburgh in 1599. The collected works of this monarch were published at London, 1616-20, in one vol. fol.

Basque Provinces, N.W. Spain (Biscay, Guipuscoa, and Alava). The Basques, considered to be descendants of the ancient Iberi, were termed Vascones by the Romans, whom they successfully resisted. They were subdued with great difficulty by the Goths about 580, and were united to Castile in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Their language is conjectured to be of Tartar origin.

Basque Roads (W. France). Fourteen French ships of the line, riding at anchor here, were attacked by lords Gambier and Cochrane (the latter commanding the fire-ships), and all were destroyed, 11-29 April, 1809. Cochrane accused Gambier of neglecting to support him. At a court-martial, 26 July-4 Aug., lord Gambier was acquitted.

Bassano (N. Italy). Here the Austrians, under Wurmser, were defeated by the French under Massena, 8 Sept. 1796.

Bassein (Bombay), a Mahratta town, taken by the British, 1774, 1780; finally annexed by them, 1818. By treaty here, 31 Dec. 1802, they engaged to support the peishwa's rights.

Basset, or BASSETTE, or Pour et Contre, a game at cards, said to have been invented by a noble Venetian, in the fifteenth century; introduced into France, 1674.

Basseterre Roads, St. Christopher's, West Indies. Here the French admiral, the comte de Grasse, was repulsed with loss in three desperate attacks on the British fleet, commanded by sir Thomas Graves, 25, 26 Jan. 1782.

Bassoon, a wooden double-reed wind-instrument, said to have been invented by Afranio, a canon of Ferrara, early in the sixteenth century.

Bassorah, BUSSORAH, or BASRAH (Asia Minor), a Turkish city, founded by the caliph Omar, about 635. It has been several times taken and retaken by the Persians and Turks.

Bass Rock, an isle in the Frith of Forth (S. Scotland), was granted to the Lauders, 1316; purchased for a state-prison, 1671; taken by the Jacobites, 1690; surrendered, 1694; granted to the Dalrymples, 1706.

Bass's Strait (Australia). Mr. Bass, surgeon of the Reliance, in an open boat from Port Jackson, in 1796, penetrated as far as Western Port, and affirmed that a strait existed between New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land. Lieut. Flinders circumnavigated Van Diemen's Land and named the strait after Mr. Bass, 1799.

Bastard, a child not born in lawful wedlock. An attempt in England, in 1236, to legitimate bastard children by the subsequent marriage of the parents failed. The barons assembled in the parliament of Merton answered: Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari ("We will not have the laws of England changed"). Women concealing their children's birth deemed guilty of murder, 21 James I., 1624. In Scotland bastard children could not dispose of their movable estates by will until 1836. A new act, facilitating the claims of mothers and making several provisions for proceeding in bastardy cases, was passed 1845. The Bastardy Laws Amendment Act was passed 10 Aug. 1872. In the United States bastardy is a subject dealt with by the several states acting independently. In most of them the bastard inherits only through the mother, and there are statutes for compelling the father of a bastard to provide for its support during minority.

Bastarnæ, a warlike tribe in Podolia and Moldavia, hired by Perseus, king of Macedon, in his wars with Rome, b.c. 168, driven across the Danube by M. Crassus for their encroachments, 80.

Bastille (Paris), a castle built by Charles V., king of France, in 1369, for the defence of Paris against the English; completed in 1383, and afterwards used as a state-prison. Henry IV. and his veteran army assailed it in vain in the siege of Paris, during the war (1587-94). "The man with the iron mask," the most mysterious prisoner known, died here, 19 Nov. 1708; see Iron Mask. On 14-15 July, 1789, the Bastille was pulled down by the populace; the governor and other officers were conducted to the Place de Grève; their hands and heads were cut off, and the heads carried on pikes through the streets.

Basuto Land, near Orange River, S. Africa, including the Transkei territory, was annexed to Cape Colony in 1871. Population—whites, 878; natives, 127,228.

Bath Administration. Mr. Pelham and his friends having tendered their resignation to king George II., 10 Feb. 1746, the formation of a new ministry was undertaken by William Pulteney, earl of Bath. This expired on 12 Feb., while yet incomplete, and received the name of the "Short-lived" administration. The members of it were: the earl of Bath, first lord of the treasury; lord Carlisle, lord privy seal; lord Winchelsea, first lord of the admiralty; and lord Granville, one of the secretaries of state, with the seals of the other in his pocket, "to be given to whom he might choose." Mr. Pelham and his colleagues returned to power.

Bath, ORDER OF THE, said to be of early origin, but formally constituted 11 Oct. 1399, by Henry IV., two days previous to his coronation in the Tower, when he conferred the order upon forty-six esquires, who had watched the night before and bathed. After the coronation of Charles II., the order was neglected until 18 May, 1725, when it was revived by George I., who fixed the number of knights at 87.

The prince regent (afterwards George IV.) created classes of knights grand crosses (73), knights commanders (180), with an unlimited number of companions 2 Jan. 1815. By an order, the existing statutes of this order were annulled, and by new statutes, the order, hitherto exclusively military, was opened to civilians. 28 May, 1847
Dr. Lyon Playfair and other promoters of the Great Exhibition received this honor. 1861

Bathometer (Greek, βαθός, deep), an apparatus invented by Dr. C. William Siemens to measure the depth of water without submerging a sounding-line, 1861-76.

Its action depends on the diminution of the effect of gravitation on the surface of the water as compared with its effect on the earth, owing to the mass of water (of less density) which replaces earth (of greater density), which is duly registered.

Baths were early used in Asia and Greece, and introduced by Agrippa into Rome, where many were constructed by Augustus and his successors. The thermæ of the Romans and gymnasia of the Greeks (of which baths formed merely an appendage) were sumptuous. The marble group of Laocoon was found in 1506 in the baths of Titus, erected about 80, and the Farnese Hercules in those of Caracalla, erected 211.

In London, St. Agnes le Clere, in Old Street road, was a spring of great antiquity, baths said to have been formed in 1803

Bathytibus Hæckelii (Greek, βαθύς, deep; βίος, life), the name given by Huxley to a supposed low form of animal life, a gelatinous substance found on stones at the bottom of the sea, in Deep-sea Soundings (which see). Its existence doubted by many naturalists, 1879.

Baton, a truncheon borne by generals in the French army, and afterwards by the marshals of other nations. Henry III. of France, before he ascended the throne, was made generalissimo of the army of his brother Charles IX., and received the bâton as the mark of the high command, 1569.—Henault. The baton used by conductors of concerts is said to have been introduced into England by Spohr in 1820.

Baton Rouge, BATTLE OF, fought 5 Aug. 1862. The town, held by United States forces under gen. Thomas Williams, was attacked by Confederates under gen. Breckinridge. A severe engagement followed, in which the Confederates were repulsed. The Confederate iron-clad gunboat Arkansas, which was intended to engage the United States naval force in the river, proved useless, and the next day she was attacked and destroyed.

Batoum, or BATUM, a seaport in Lazistan, on the Black Sea. After having repulsed the Russians in the war, 4 May, 1877, the place was ceded to Russia by the treaty of Berlin, 13 July, 1878, to become a free commercial port.

The inhabitants at first resisted, but were persuaded to submit; many emigrating, July–Sept. The Russians entered, 6 Sept. 1878.

Batteries along the coasts were constructed by Henry VIII. (who reigned 1509–47). The ten floating-batteries with which Gibraltar was attacked, in the siege of that fortress, were invented by D'Arcon, a French engineer. They resisted the heavy shells and 32-pound shot, but ultimately yielded to red-hot shot, 18 Sept. 1782; see Gibraltar. Formidable floating-batteries are now erected; see Navy.

Battering-ram (Testudo Arietaria), with other military implements, said to have been invented by Artemon, a Lacedæmonian, and employed by Pericles, about 441 B.C. Sir Christopher Wren employed a battering-ram in demolishing the walls of old St. Paul's cathedral, 1675.

Battersea Park; an act of parliament passed in 1846 empowered her majesty's commissioners of woods to form a royal park in Battersea Fields. Acts to enlarge their powers were passed in 1848, 1851, and 1853. The park and the new bridge connecting it with Chelsea were opened in April, 1858; the bridge freed from toll, 24 May, 1879.

make proof thereby of his guilt or innocence; see Appeal.

Battle-abbey, Sussex, founded by William I., 1067, on the plain where the battle of Hastings was fought, 14 Oct. 1066. It was dedicated to St. Martin, and given to Benedictine monks, who were to pray for the souls of the slain. The original name of the plain was Hetheland; see Hastings. After the battle of Hastings, a list was taken of William's chiefs, amounting to 629, and called the BATTLE-ROLL; and among these chiefs the lands and titles of the followers of the defeated Harold were distributed.

Battle-axe, a weapon of the Celts. The Irish were constantly armed with an axe.—Burns. At the battle of Bannockburn, king Robert Bruce clove an English champion down to the chine at one blow with a battle-axe, 1314. The battle-axe guards, or beaufetiers, vulgarly called beef-eaters, and whose arms are a sword and lance, were first raised by Henry VII. in 1485. They were originally attendants upon the king's buffet; see Yeoman of the Guard.

Battlefield, BATTLE OF, see Shrewsbury.

Battles. Palamedes of Argos is said to have been the first who ranged an army in a regular line of battle, placed sentinels round a camp, and excited the soldier's vigilance by giving him a watchword; see Naval Battles, British. The following are the most memorable battles, arranged in chronological order; further details of the greater part are given in separate articles; n. signifies naval:

The following are the battles described by prof. Creasy in his "Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World:—"

Bautzen, a town in Saxony, near which desperate battles were fought 20, 21, and 22 May, 1813, between the French, commanded by Napoleon, and the allies under the emperor of Russia and the king of Prussia. The struggle commenced on the 19th, with a contest on the outposts, which cost each army a loss of above 2000 men. On the 20th (at Bautzen) the French were more successful; and on the 21st (at Wurschen) the allies were compelled to retire; but Napoleon obtained no permanent advantage. Duroc was killed at Reichenbach by a cannon-ball, on 22 May Bavaria (part of ancient Noricum and Vindelicia), a kingdom in S. Germany, conquered from the Celtic Gauls (Boii) by the Franks between 630 and 660. The country was afterwards governed by dukes subject to the French monarchs. Tasillon II. was deposed by Charlemagne, who established margraves in 788. Baveno, a village of Piedmont, on the Lago Maggiore. At a villa here queen Victoria resided from 28 March to 27 April, 1879.

* The abdication of Charles Louis was mainly caused by his attachment to an intriguing woman, known throughout Europe by the assumed name of Lola Montez; who, in the end, was expelled the kingdom for her interference in state affairs, and afterwards led a wandering life. She delivered lectures in London in 1869; thence proceeded to the United States; and died at New York, 17 Jan. 1861.

Bay Islands (the chief, Ruatan), in the bay of Honduras, Central America, belonged to Spain till 1821; then to Great Britain, which formed them into a colony in 1852, but ceded them to Honduras, 28 Nov. 1859; see Honduras.

Bayeux Tapestry, said to have been wrought by Matilda, queen of William I. (?) It is 19 inches wide, 214 feet long, and is divided into compartments showing the events from the visit of Harold to the Norman court to his death at Hastings; it is now preserved in the public library of Bayeux near Caen. A copy, drawn by C. Stothard, and colored after the original, was published by the Society of Antiquaries in 1821-3. It was reproduced by autotype process by F. R. Fowke, with notes, 1875.

Baylen (S. Spain), where, on 20 July, 1808, the French, commanded by gens. Dupont and Wedel, were defeated by the Spaniards under Reding, Coupigny, and other generals.

Bayonet, the short dagger fixed at the end of firearms, said to have been invented at Bayonne, in France, about 1647, 1670, or 1690. It was used at Killiecrankie in 1689, and at Marsaglia by the French, in 1693, "with great success, against the enemy unprepared for the encounter with so formidable a novelty." The ring-bayonet was adopted by the British, 24 Sept. 1693.

Bayonne (S. France), an ancient city. It was held by the English from 1295 till it was taken by Charles VII. The queens of Spain and France met the cruel duke of Alva here, June, 1556, it is supposed to arrange the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Charles IV. of Spain abdicated here in favor of "his friend and ally" the emperor Napoleon, 4 May, and his sons, Ferdinand prince of Asturias, don Carlos, and don Antonio renounced their rights to the Spanish throne, 6 May, 1808. In the neighborhood of Bayonne was much desperate fighting between the French and British armies, 9-13 Dec. 1813. Bayonne was invested by the British, 14 Jan. 1814; on 14 April, the French made a sally, and attacked the English with success, but were at length driven back. The loss of the British was considerable, and lieutenant-general John Hope was wounded and taken prisoner. A Franco-Spanish industrial and fine arts exhibition was opened at Bayonne in July, 1864.

Bayreuth (N. Germany), a margraviate, held formerly by a branch of the Brandenburg family, was with that of Anspach abdicated by the reigning prince in favor of the king of Prussia, 1790. The archives were brought (in 1783) from Plassenburg to the city of Bayreuth, which was incorporated with Bavaria by Napoleon in 1806.

Bazaar, or covered market, a word of Arabic origin. The magnificent bazaar of Ispahan was excelled by that of Tauris, which has held 30,000 men in order of battle. In London the Solio-square bazaar was opened by Mr. Trotter in 1816 to relieve the relatives of persons killed in the war. The Queen's bazaar, Oxford street, a very extensive one, was (with the Diorama) burned down, and the loss estimated at 50,000*l.*, 27 May, 1829. It was rebuilt, and converted into the Princess's theatre, opened 30 Sept. 1841. The St. James's bazaar (built by Mr. Crookford) in 1832. The Pantheon, made a bazaar in 1834; see Pantheon. The London Crystal Palace bazaar, 1858. The most imposing sale termed a bazaar was opened for the benefit of the Anti-Corn-law League in Covent Garden theatre, 5 May, 1845; in six weeks 25,000*l.* were obtained, mostly by admission money. The Corinthian bazaar, Argyll street, Oxford street (to replace the bazaar at the Pantheon), opened 30 July, 1867; closed in 1868.

Bazaine, MARSHAL, trial, etc., Dec. 1873, and Aug. 1874; see Metz and France.

Bazelles, a village in the Ardennes, N. E. France. During the dreadful battle of Sedan, 1 Sept. 1870, Bazelles was burned by the Bavarians, and atrocious outrages were said to have been committed. Of nearly 2000 inhabitants it was asserted scarcely fifty remained alive, and these indignantly denied having given provocation. Much controversy ensued, and in July, 1871, gen. Von der Tann asserted correctly that the number of deaths had been grossly exaggerated, that there had been much provocation, and denied the alleged cruelties.

Bazoche-des-Hautes, near Orleans, central France. Here a part of the army of the Loire, under gen. D'Aurelle de Paladines, was defeated, after a severe action, by the Germans under the grand-duke of Mecklenburg, 2 Dec. 1870; see Orleans.

Beachy Head, a promontory (S.E. Sussex), near which the British and Dutch fleet, commanded by the earl of Torrington, was defeated by a superior French force under admiral Tourville, 30 June, 1690; the allies suffered very severely. The Dutch lost two admirals, 500 men, and several ships—sunk to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy; the English lost two ships and 400 men. The admirals on both sides were blamed; ours for not fighting, the French for not pursuing the victory.

Beads were early used in the East for reckoning prayers. St. Augustin mentions them 366. About 1090 Peter the Hermit is said to have made a series of 55 beads. To Dominic de Guzman is ascribed the invention of the Rosary (a series of 15 large and 150 small beads), in honor of the Blessed Virgin, about 1202. Beads soon after were in general use. The Bead-roll was a list of deceased persons, for the repose of whose souls a certain number of prayers was recited. Beads have been found in British barrows.

Beam AND SCALES. The apparatus for weighing goods was so called, "as it weighs so much at the king's beam." A public beam was set up in London, and all commodities ordered to be weighed by the city officer, called the weigh-master, who was to do justice between buyer and seller, stat. 3 Edw. II. 1309.—Stow. Beams and scales, with weights and measures, were ordered to be examined by the justices at quarter sessions, 35 Geo. III. 1794; see Weights and Measures.

Beans, BLACK AND WHITE, were used by the ancients in gathering the votes of the people for the election of magistrates. A white bean signified absolution, and a black one condemnation. The precept of Pythagoras to abstain from beans, abstine a fabis, has been variously interpreted. "Beans do not favor mental tranquillity."—Cicero. The finer kinds of beans were brought here, with other vegetables, in Henry VIII.'s reign.

Bear-baiting, an ancient popular English sport, prohibited by parliament in 1835.

Beards.* The Egyptians did not wear beards; the Assyrians did. They have been worn for centuries by the Jews, who were forbidden to mar their beards, 1490 B.C. (Lev. xix. 27). The Tartars waged a long war with the Persians, declaring them infidels, because they would not cut their beards, after the custom of Tartary. The Greeks wore their beards till the time of Alexander, who ordered the Macedonians to be shaved, lest the beard should give a handle to their enemies, 330 B.C. Beards were worn by the Romans, 390 B.C. The emperor Julian wrote a diatribe (entitled "Misopogon") against wearing beards, A.D. 362.—In England they were not fashionable after the Conquest, 1066, until the thirteenth century, and were discontinued at the Restoration. Peter the Great enjoined the Russians, even of rank, to shave, but was obliged to keep officers on foot to cut off the beard by force. Since 1851 the custom of wearing the beard gradually increased in Great Britain.

* A bearded woman was taken by the Russians at the battle of Pultowa, and presented to the czar, Peter I., 1724; her beard measured 14 yard. A woman is said to have been seen at Paris with a bushy beard, and her whole body covered with hair.—Dict. de Trévoux. The great Margaret, governess of the Netherlands, had a very long stiff beard. In Favarita, in the time of Wolhus, a virgin had a long black beard. Mlle. Bois de Chêne, born at Geneva (it was said) in 1834, was exhibited in London in 1852-3, when, consequently, eighteen years of age; she had a profuse head of hair, a strong black beard, large whiskers, and thick hair on her arms and down from her neck on her back, and masculine features.

Bearn (S. France), the ancient Benecharnum, was held successively by the Romans, Franks, Goths, and Gascons, and became an hereditary viscounty in 819, under Centule I., son of Loup, duke of Gascony. From his family it passed to the houses—of Gabaret, 1134; of Montcade, 1170; of Foix, 1290; and of Bourbon, 1550. Its annexation to France was decreed by Henry IV., 1594; affirmed by Louis XIII., 1620.

Beaugé, see Anjou.

Beaulieu, ABBEY OF (reformed Benedictines), founded by king John, in the New Forest, Hampshire, in 1204, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, had the privilege of sanctuary. It afforded an asylum to Margaret, queen of Henry VI., after the defeat of the earl of Warwick, at Barnet, 14 April, 1471; and also to Perkin Warbeck, Sept. 1497.

Beaumont, a village near Sedan, department of Ardennes, N.E. France. Near here a part of the army of marshal MacMahon under De Failly, which, after vainly endeavoring to reach Metz, was retreating before the Germans under the crown-prince of Prussia, was surprised, defeated, and driven across the Meuse at Mouzon, 30 Aug. 1870. The French loss included about 7000 prisoners, many guns, and much camp equipage. The victory was chiefly gained by the Bavarians.

Beaune-la-Rolande, a village in the Loiret, France. Here the French army of the Loire, under gen. D'Aurelle de Paladines, was defeated by the Germans, under prince Frederick Charles, in an attempt to march in the direction of Fontainebleau to relieve Paris, 28 Nov. 1870. The French loss was reported by the Germans to be 1000 dead, 4000 wounded; above 1700 prisoners. Their own loss was heavy.

Beauvais (N. France), the ancient Bellovaci, formerly capital of Picardy. When besieged by Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, with 80,000 men, the women, under Jeanne Fourquet or Lainé, also de la Hachette, from her using that weapon, particularly distinguished themselves, and the duke raised the siege, 10 July, 1472. In memory of this the women of Beauvais walk first in the procession on the anniversary of their deliverance.

Beaver Dams, AFFAIR AT, in Upper Canada, seven miles west of Queenstown. There was an engagement 24 Jan. 1813, between 540 Americans, under lieutenant-col. Boerstler, and 800 British and Indians. The American loss, 25 killed, 50 wounded, and 460 officers and men made prisoners. The British loss, 30 killed and 35 wounded.

Becket's Murder.* Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, was murdered at the altar, 29 Dec. 1170. The king was absolved of guilty knowledge of the crime in 1172, and did penance at the tomb in 1174. The bones of Becket were enshrined in gold and jewels in 1220; but were burned in the reign of Henry VIII., 1539. The Merchant Adventurers were at one time termed "the Brotherhood of St. Thomas & Becket." A Roman

* Thomas Becket was born in 1119. His father, Gilbert, was a London trader, and his mother is stated to have been a convert from Mahometanism. He was educated at Oxford, and made archdeacon by Theobald, archbishop of Canterbury, who introduced him to the king, Henry II. He became chancellor in 1155, but on being elected archbishop of Canterbury in 1162, he resigned the chancellorship, to the great offence of the king. He opposed strenuously the constitutions of Clarendon in 1164, and fled the country; and in 1165 excommunicated all the clergy who agreed to abide by them. He and the king met at Freteville, in Touraine, on 22 July, 1170, and were formally reconciled. On his return he recommenced his struggle with the king, which led to his tragical death.

Catholic church at Canterbury, dedicated to him, was opened by cardinal Manning, 13 April, 1875.

Bed. The ancients slept on skins. Beds were afterwards made of loose rushes, heather, or straw. The Romans are said to have first used featherbeds. An air-cushion is said to have been used by Heliogabalus, 218-222; air-beds were in use in the sixteenth century. Featherbeds were in use in England in the reign of Henry VIII. The bedsteads of the Egyptians and later Greeks, like modern couches, became common among the Roman upper classes.

The ancient Great Bed at Ware, Herts, capable of holding twelve persons, was sold, it is said, to Charles Dickens, 6 Sept. 1864. A bedstead of gold was presented to the queen on 2 Nov. 1869, by the maharajah of Cashmere.

Air-beds and water-beds have been made since the manufacture of india rubber cloth by Clark in 1813; and by Mackintosh in 1823.

Dr. Arnott's hydrostatic bed invented in 1850.

Bed OF JUSTICE, a French court presided over by the king, whose seat was termed a "bed." It controlled the ordinances of the parliament. The last was held by Louis XVI. at Versailles, 19 Nov. 1787, to raise a loan.

Beder (Arabia). Here Mahomet gained his first victory (over the Koreish of Mecca), 623. It was considered to be miraculous.

Bedford, a town (N.N.W. London) renowned for its many free educational establishments, endowed in 1561 by sir William Harpur, a London alderman. Here John Bunyan preached, was imprisoned, and wrote "The Pilgrim's Progress."

A statue of Bunyan, the gift of the duke of Bedford, was uncovered here, 10 June, 1874. Bronze gates for the Bunyan church, given by the duke, were inaugurated by him 5 July, 1876.

Bedford Level, a portion of the great fen districts in the eastern counties, drained in the early part of the seventeenth century by the earl of Bedford, aided by the celebrated Dutch engineer, sir Cornelius Vermuyden, amid great opposition; see Levels.

Bedlam, see Bethlehem.

Bedouins, wandering tribes of Arabs, living on the plunder of travellers, etc. They profess a form of Mahometanism, and are governed by sheiks. They are said to be descendants of Ishmael, and appear to fulfil the prophecy respecting him (Gen. xvi. 12), 1911 B.C.

Beef-eaters, see Battle-axe.

"Beefsteaks, THE SUBLIME SOCIETY OF," was established in 1735 by Rich, an actor at Covent Garden theatre, in the painting-room of which the members dined upon beefsteaks. The society became fashionable, and long included among its members the prince of Wales, royal dukes, and other eminent persons, who submitted to its somewhat ludicrous regulations. It became extinct in 1867, its last place of meeting being a room in the Lyceum theatre. Its history was published by brother Arnold in 1871.

Beer, see Ale, Brewers, Porter, Victuallers. Condensed beer patented by P. E. Lockwood, 1875. Condensed wort patented by Hermann Mertens, of Margate, in 1853.

Beer-houses. Law respecting (11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 64, 1830), etc., amended in 1863.

Bees. Mount Hybla, on account of its odoriferous flowers, thyme, and abundance of honey, has been poetically called the "empire of bees." Hymettus, in Attica, was also famous for its bees and honey. The economy of bees was admired in the earliest ages; and Eumelus of Corinth wrote a poem on bees, 741 B.C. Bees were introduced into Boston, Massachusetts, in 1670, and have since spread over the continent. Maundeville's satirical "Fable of the Bees" appeared in 1723. Huber published his observations on bees in 1792. The Apianian Society had an establishment at Muswell Hill, near London (1860-2). The Ligurian variety of the honey-bee was successfully introduced into England in 1860.

A British Beekeepers' Association founded 16 May (sir John Lubbock became first president); first exhibition, in the Crystal Palace, 8 Sept. 1874; at other places since. Spelling bees, of American origin, introduced into London in autumn of 1875; first at Holloway. Geographical, musical, and other bees began early in 1876.

Bees', St., Cumberland. A monastery was founded here by St. Bega, 650; a grammar-school by abp. Grindall, 1583; a clerical training college by bp. Law, 1817.

Beet-root is of recent cultivation in England. Beta vulgaris, red beet, is used for the table as a salad. Margraff first produced sugar from the white beet-root in 1747. M. Achard produced excellent sugar from it in 1799; and the chemists of France, at the instance of Bonaparte, largely extracted sugar from the beet-root in 1800. 60,000 tons of sugar, about half the consumption, are now manufactured in France from beet. It is also largely manufactured in other countries. A refinery of sugar from beet-root has been erected at the Thames bank, Chelsea. The cultivation of beet-root in England and Ireland much advocated, 1871.

Beggars were tolerated in ancient times, being often musicians and ballad-singers. In modern times severe laws have been passed against them. In 1572, by 14 Eliz. c. 5, sturdy beggars were ordered to be "grievously whipped and burned through the right ear;" punished capitally for the third offence. By the Vagrant Act (1824), 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, all public beggars are liable to a month's imprisonment. About 30,000 tramps in England and Wales.—Judicial Statistics, 1865. See Poor-laws and Mendicity Society. The "BEGGAR'S OPERA," by John Gay, a satire against the government of sir Robert Walpole, was produced at the Lincoln's-inn-fields theatre, 29 Jan. 1727-8, and had a run of 63 nights; see Gueur.

Beguines, a congregation of nuns first established at Liège, and afterwards at Nivelles, in 1207, some say 1226. The "Grand Beguinage" of Bruges was the most extensive. Some of these nuns imagined that they could become sinless. The council of Vienne condemned this error, and abolished a branch of the order in 1311. They still exist in Germany and Belgium, acting as nurses to the sick and wounded, etc.

Beheading, the Decollatio of the Romans, introduced into England from Normandy (as a less ignominious mode of putting high criminals to death) by William the Conqueror, 1076, when Waltheof, earl of Huntingdon, Northampton, and Northumberland, was first so executed. Since then this mode of execution became frequent, particularly in the reigns of Henry VIII., Mary, and Elizabeth, when even women of the noblest blood thus perished: the aged countess of Salisbury, 27 May, 1541; lady Jane Grey, 12 Feb. 1554.

Behistun, in Persia. At this place is a rock containing important inscriptions in three languages, in cuneiform (or wedge-shaped) characters, which were deciphered and translated by sir H. Rawlinson in 1844-6, and published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. Each paragraph commences with "I am Darius the Great King."

Behring's Strait, discovered by capt. Vitus Behring, a Danish navigator in the service of Russia. He thus proved that the continents of Asia and America are distant from each other about thirty-nine miles, 1728. He died at Behring's Island in 1741. In 1778, capt. James Cook surveyed the coasts of both continents.

 Daughter. Princess Louise, born 18 Feb. 1858; married duke Philip of Saxony, 4 Feb. 1875.
 Brother. Philip, count of Flanders; born 24 March, 1837; married Mary, princess of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, 25 April, 1867; heir, Baldwin, born 3 June, 1869.

Belgrade, an ancient city in Serbia, on the right bank of the Danube. It was taken from the Greek emperor by Solomon, king of Hungary, in 1072; gallantly defended by John Hunniades against the Turks, under Mahomet II., July to Sept. 1456, when the latter was defeated, with the loss of 40,000 men. Belgrade was taken by sultan Solymán, Aug. 1521, and retaken by the Imperialists in 1688, from whom it was again taken by the Turks, 1690. It was besieged in May, 1716, by prince Eugene. In that year the Turkish army, 200,000 strong, approached to relieve it, and on 5 Aug. a sanguinary battle was fought at Peterwaradein, in which the Turks lost 20,000 men. Eugene defeated the Turks here, 16 Aug. 1717, and Belgrade surrendered 18 Aug. In 1739 it was ceded to the Turks, after its fine fortifications had been demolished. It was retaken in 1789, and restored at the peace of Reichenbach, in 1790. The Serbian insurgents had possession of it, 1806-13. In 1815 it was placed under prince Milosch, subject to Turkey. The fortifications were restored in 1820. On 19 June, 1862, the Turkish pacha was dismissed for firing on the town during a riot. The university was established by private munificence, 1863. The fortress was surrendered by the Turks to the Servians, 18 April, 1867. The independence of Serbia proclaimed here, 22 Aug. 1878; see Serria.

Belgravia, a southwestern district of the metropolis, built between 1826 and 1852 upon land belonging to the marquess of Westminster, who is also viscount Belgrave.

Bell, Book, and Candle: in the Romish ceremony of excommunication (which see), the bell is rung, the book is closed, and candle extinguished; the effect being to exclude the excommunicated from the society of the faithful, divine service, and the sacraments. Its origin is ascribed to the eighth century.

Bell Rock Light-house, nearly in front of the Frith of Tay, one of the finest in Great Britain; it is 115 feet high, is built upon a rock that measures 427 feet in length and 200 feet in breadth, and is about 12 feet under water.† It was erected in 1806-10. It has two bells for hazy weather.

Bellaïr, North America. The town was attacked by the British forces under sir Peter Parker, who, after an obstinate engagement, was killed 30 Aug. 1814.

Belleisle, an isle on the south coast of Brittany, France, erected into a duchy for marshal Belleisle, in 1742, in reward of his military and diplomatic services, by Louis XV. Belleisle was taken by the British forces under commodore Keppel and general Hodgson, after a

* Leopold married, in May, 1816, the princess Charlotte of Wales, daughter of the prince-regent, afterwards George IV. of England; she died in childhood, 6 Nov. 1817.

† Upon this rock, it is said, the abbots of Aberbrothock fixed the Inchcape bell, so that it was rung by the impulse of the sea, thus warning mariners. It is also said that a Dutchman, who took the apparatus away, was here lost with his ship and crew.

desperate resistance, 7 June, 1761, but was restored to France in 1763.

Belleville, the red republican stronghold of Paris, defended by seven barricades, was captured by L'Admirault and Vinoy, 27, 28 May, 1871, when the insurrection was suppressed.

Bellmen, appointed in London to proclaim the hour of the night before public clocks became general, were numerous about 1556. They were to ring a bell at night, and cry, "Take care of your fire and candle, be charitable to the poor, and pray for the dead."

Bellows. Anacharsis, the Scythian, is said to have been the inventor of them, about 569 B.C.; and to him is ascribed the invention of tinder, the potter's wheel, anchors for ships, etc. Bellows were not used in the furnaces of the Romans. The great bellows of our foundries must have been early used; see Blowing-machines.

Bells were used among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans. The responses of the Dodonean oracle were in part conveyed by bells.—Strabo. The monument of Porcenna was decorated with pinnacles, each surmounted by bells.—Pliny. Said to have been introduced by Paulinus, bishop of Nola, in Campagna, about 400; and first known in France in 550. The army of Clothaire II., king of France, was frightened from the siege of Sens by the ringing of the bells of St. Stephen's church. The second excommunication of our king Egbert commands every priest, at the proper hours, to sound the bells of his church. Bells were used in churches by order of pope John IX., about 900, as a defence, by ringing them, against thunder and lightning. Bells are mythically said to have been cast by Turketul, abbot of England, about 941. The celebrated "Song of the Bell," by Schiller (died 1805), has been frequently translated. The following list is that given by Mr. E. Beckett Denison (afterwards sir Edmund Beckett) in his discourse on bells at the Royal Institution, 6 March, 1857. The lecture of the Rev. H. R. Haweis, at the same place, 7 Feb. 1879, was well illustrated.

* The metal has been valued, at the lowest estimate, at 66,665*l*. Gold and silver are said to have been thrown in as votive offerings.

† The largest bell in England (named Big Ben, after sir Benjamin Hall, the then chief commissioner of works), cast at Houghton-le-Spring, Durham, by Messrs. Warner, under the superintendence of Mr. E. Beckett Denison, and the Rev. W. Taylor, at an expense of 3343*l*. 14*s*. 9*d*. The composition was 22 parts copper and 7 tin. The diameter was 9 ft. 5½ in.; the height 7 ft. 10½ in. The clapper weighed 12 cwt.—Rev. W. Taylor.

‡ The bell "Big Ben" having been found to be cracked, on 24 Oct. 1857, it was broken up, and another bell cast with the same metal, in May, 1858, by Messrs. Mears, Whitechapel. It is rather different in shape from its predecessor, "Big Ben," and about 2 tons lighter. Its diameter is 9 ft. 6 in.; the height, 7 ft. 10 in. It was struck for the first time 18 Nov. 1858. The clapper weighs 6 cwt.—half that of the former bell. The note of the bell is E natural; the quarter bells being G, B, E, F. On 1 Oct. 1859, this bell was also found to be cracked.

§ The clapper of St. Paul's bell weighs 180 lbs.; the diameter of the bell is 10 feet (Mr. Walesby says 6 ft. 9½ in.), and its thickness 10 in. The hour strikes upon this bell, the quarters upon two smaller ones; see Clocks.

BAPTISM OF BELLS.—They were anointed and baptized in churches, it is said, from the tenth century.—Du Fresnoy. The bells of the priory of Little Dunmow, in Essex, were baptized by the names of St. Michael, St. John, Virgin Mary, Holy Trinity, etc., in 1501.—Weever. The great bell of Notre Dame of Paris was baptized by the name of duke of Angoulême, 1816. On the continent, in Roman (Catholic) states, they baptize bells as we do ships, but with religious solemnity.—Ashe.

RINGING OF BELLS, in changes of regular peals, is almost peculiar to the English.—Stow.

Fabian Stedman, about 1650, invented a system known as "Stedman's principle." Benjamin Anable soon after invented "Grandfire Triples."

720 changes can be rung in an hour upon twelve bells; 470,001,600 changes rung upon them require 75 years, 10 months, and 10 days.

Nell Gwynne left the ringers of the bells of St. Martin-in-the-Fields money for a weekly entertainment, 1687, and many others have done the same.

CARILLONS, a collection of bells, arranged in two or three chromatic scales, played by pedals or keyboards, or by machinery. The first set is said to have been made at Alost, in Flanders, in 1487, and that country and Holland are renowned for carillons. Matthias van den Gheyn was an eminent maker (1721-85). Excellent carillon machines are now made by Messrs. Gillet, Bland, & Co., Croydon. One at Manchester was started 1 Jan. 1879. It plays 35 tunes on 20 bells.

Belmont (Mo.), BATTLE OF, opposite Columbus, Ky., fought 7 Nov. 1861. Gen. Grant, commanding the national forces, at first obtained a great advantage over gen. Pillow, the Confederate commander; but the latter, being reinforced from Columbus, compelled Grant to withdraw from the field.

Beloochistan, the ancient Gedrosia (S. Asia). Khelat, the capital, was taken by the British in the Afghan war, 1839; abandoned, July, 1840; taken and held a short time, Nov. 1840.

The khan was subsidized in 1854, under certain conditions, which were not observed; the arrangement was broken up in 1873; the negotiations of major (afterwards sir Robert) Sandeman, in 1875, were successful, and Quetta was occupied by the British in 1877, and has since become a prosperous station. The khan proffered assistance after the defeat of gen. Burrows in July, 1880.

Belvedere Explosion, see Gunpowder, note.

Bemis's Heights, FIRST BATTLE AT. General Gates, at the head of the Northern American army, in the autumn of 1777, established a fortified camp on Bemis's Heights, near Stillwater, where he was attacked by the British and Hessians, under gen. Burgoyne, on 19 Sept. Night terminated the conflict, and both parties claimed the victory. Burgoyne fell back to his camp, a few miles above, to wait for expected reinforcements, before renewing the conflict. The British force engaged was about 3000, and the American about 2500. The former lost, in killed, wounded, and missing, a little less than 500; the latter, 319.

Bemis's Heights, SECOND BATTLE AT. Despairing of reinforcements, his army diminishing by desertions, Burgoyne perceived that he must fight or flee. He advanced, and again attacked Gates on 7 Oct., almost upon the battle-ground of 19 Sept. They fought severely, and Burgoyne fell back to the heights of Saratoga, now Schuylerville. There he was compelled to surrender on 17 Oct. The whole number of troops surrendered was 5791, of whom 2412 were Germans, or Hessians, under the baron Riedesel; the remainder were British regulars and Canadians; see Saratoga.

Benares, in India, a holy city of the Hindoos, abounding in temples. It was ceded by the nabob of Oude, Asoph-ud-Dowlah, to the English in 1775. An insurrection took place here, which had nearly proved fatal to the British interests in Hindostan, 1781. The rajah, Cheyt Sing, was deposed in consequence of it in 1783. Mr. Cherry, capt. Conway, and others were assassinated at Benares by vizier Aly, 14 Jan. 1799. In June, 1857, col. Neil succeeded in suppressing attempts of the native infantry to join the mutiny; see India. Visit of prince of Wales, 5 Jan. 1876.

Benburb, near Armagh (N. Ireland). Here O'Neill totally defeated the English under Moore, 6 June, 1646. Moore says that it was "the only great victory, since the days of Brian Boro, achieved by an Irish chieftain in the cause of Ireland."

Bencoolen (Sumatra). The English East India Company made a settlement here, which preserved to them the pepper trade after the Dutch had dispossessed them of Bantam, 1682. -Anderson. York Fort was erected by the East India Company, 1690. In 1693 a dreadful mortality raged here, occasioned by the town being built on a pestilent morass; among others, the governor and council perished. The French, under count d'Estaing, destroyed the English settlement, 1700. Bencoolen was reduced to a residency under the government of Bengal, in 1801, and was ceded to the Dutch in 1824, in exchange for their possessions in Malacca; see India.

Bender, Bessarabia, European Russia. Near it was the asylum of Charles XII. of Sweden, after his defeat at Pultowa by the czar Peter the Great, 8 July, 1709. The peace of Bender was concluded in 1711. Bender was taken by storm, by the Russians, 28 Sept. 1770; was taken by Potemkin in 1789, and again in 1809. It was restored at the peace of Jassy, but retained at the peace of 1812.

Benedictines, an order of monks founded by St. Benedict (lived 480-543), who introduced the monastic life into Western Europe, in 529, when he founded the monastery on Monte Cassino, in Campania, and eleven others afterwards. His Regula Monachorum (rule of the monks) soon became the common rule of western monachism. No religious order has been so remarkable for extent, wealth, and men of note and learning as the Benedictines. Among its branches, the chief were the Cluniacs, founded in 912, the Cistercians, founded in 1098, and reformed by St. Bernard, abbot of Clairvaux, in 1116; and the Carthusians, from the Chartreux (hence Charter-house), founded by Bruno about 1080. The Benedictine order was introduced into England by Augustin, in 596; and William I. built an abbey for it on the plain where the battle of Hastings was fought, 1066; see Battle Abbey. William de Warrenne, earl of Warrenne, built a convent at Lewes, in Sussex, in 1077. Of this order, it is reckoned that there have been 40 popes, 200 cardinals, 50 patriarchs, 116 archbishops, 4600 bishops, 4 emperors, 12 empresses, 46 kings, 41 queens, and 3640 saints. Their founder was canonized.—Baronius. The Benedictines have taken little part in politics, but have produced many valuable literary works. The congregation of St. Maur published the celebrated L'Art de Vérifier les Dates, in 1750, and edited many ancient authors.

The Benedictines with other orders were expelled from France by decree . . . 28 March, 1800

Benefice (literally, a good deed or favor) or FEE. Clerical benefices originated in the twelfth century, when the priesthood began to imitate the feudal lay system of holding lands for performing certain duties; till then the priests were supported by alms and oblations at mass. Vicarages, rectories, perpetual curacies, and chaplaincies are termed benefices in contradistinction to dignities, such as bishoprics, etc. A rector is entitled to all the tithes; a vicar, to a small part or to none.—All benefices that should become vacant in the space of six months were given by pope Clement VII. to his nephew, in 1534.—Notitia Monastica. An act for the augmentation of poor benefices by the sale of some of those in the presentation of the lord chancellor was passed in 1863, and an act respecting the sequestration of benefices and their union passed 1871.

The Commission on Ecclesiastical Benefices reported, recommending amendments in sales of advowsons, discontinuance of sale by auction, etc. . . about 3 Nov. 1873

Beneventum (now Benevento), an ancient city in South Italy, said to have been founded by Diomedes the Greek, after the fall of Troy. Pyrrhus of Macedonia, during his invasion of Italy, was totally defeated near Beneventum, 275 B.C. Near it was erected the triumphal arch of Trajan, A.D. 114. Benevento was formed into a duchy by the Lombards, 571. At a battle fought here, 26 Feb. 1266, Manfred, king of Sicily, was defeated and slain by Charles of Anjou, who thus became virtually master of Italy. The castle was built 1323; the town was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, 1688, when the archbishop, afterwards pope Benedict XIII., was dug out of the ruins alive, and contributed to its subsequent rebuilding, 1708. It was seized by the king of Naples, but restored to the pope on the suppression of the Jesuits, 1773. Talleyrand de Périgord, Bonaparte's arch-chancellor, was made prince of Benevento, 1806. Benevento was taken by the French, 1798, and restored to the pope in 1815.

Benevolences (Aids, Free Gifts, actually Forced Loans) appear to have been claimed by our Anglo-Saxon sovereigns. Special ones were levied by Edward IV., 1478, by Richard III., 1485 (although a statute forbidding them was enacted in 1484), by Henry VII., 1492; and by James I. in 1613, on occasion of the marriage of the princess Elizabeth with Frederick, the elector palatine, afterwards king of Bohemia. In 1615 Oliver St. John, M.P., was fined 5000*l.*, and chief-justice Coke disgraced, for severely censuring such modes of raising money. Benevolences were declared illegal by the bill of rights, Feb. 1689.

Bennington, BATTLE OF. This engagement took place at Hotsick, N. Y., five miles from Bennington, in Vermont, but is known as the battle of Bennington. It was fought on 16 Aug. 1777, between British and German detachments, under col. Baume and Breyman, of Burgoyne's army, and gen. John Stark, at the head of New Hampshire militia. The British were defeated, with a loss, in killed, wounded, and prisoners, of almost a thousand men. The Americans had 100 killed and as many wounded. Burgoyne sent this expedition to procure cattle and stores. It was a severe blow to him, and led to his final defeat.

Benzole, or BENZINE, a compound of hydrogen and carbon, discovered by Faraday in oils (1825), and by C. R. Mansfield in coal-tar (1849)—the latter of whom unfortunately died in consequence of being severely burned while experimenting on it (25 Feb. 1855). Benzole has become useful in the arts. Chemical research has produced from it aniline (which see), the source of the celebrated modern dyes mauve, magenta, and many others; see Alicaraine.

Beowulf, an ancient Anglo-Saxon epic poem, describing events which probably occurred in the middle of the fifth century, supposed to have been written subsequent to 597. An edition by Kemble was published in 1833. It has been translated by Kemble, Thorpe, and Wackerbarth.

Berbice (S. America), settled by the Dutch, 1626, who surrendered it to the British, 23 April, 1796, and 22 Sept. 1803; and finally in 1814. It was united to Demerara, and named British Guiana, 1831.

Berengarians, followers of Berengarius, archdeacon of Angers, who, about 1049, opposed the Romish doctrine of transubstantiation, or the real presence in the Lord's-supper. Several councils of the church condemned his doctrine, 1050-79. After much controversy, he recanted about 1079, and died, grieved and wearied, 6 Jan. 1088.

Beresina, a river in Russia, crossed by the French main army after its defeat by the Russians, 25-29 Nov. 1812. The French lost upwards of 20,000 men, and their retreat was attended by great calamity and suffering.

Berg (W. Germany), on the extinction of its line of counts, in 1348, was incorporated with Juliers. Napoleon I. made Murat grand-duke in 1806. The principal part is now held by Prussia.

Bergamo (N. Italy), a Lombard duchy, was annexed to Venice, 1428; which chiefly held it till it revolted, and was joined to the Cisalpine republic, 1797. It was awarded to Austria in 1814, and ceded to Sardinia, 1859.

Bergen (Norway), founded 1070; was the royal residence during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

Bergen (in Germany), BATTLE OF, between the French and allies, the latter defeated, 13 April, 1752.—(IN HOLLAND) 1. The allies, under the duke of York, were defeated by the French, under gen. Brune, with great loss, 19 Sept. 1799. 2. In another battle, fought 2 Oct. the same year, the duke gained a victory over Brune; but on the 6th the duke was defeated before Alkmaar, and on the 20th entered into a convention, by which his army was exchanged for 6000 French and Dutch prisoners in England.

Bergen-op-Zoom, in Holland. This place, whose works were deemed impregnable, was taken by the French, 16 Sept. 1747, and again in 1795. An attempt, made by the British, under gen. sir T. Graham (afterwards lord Lynedoch), to carry the fortress by storm was defeated; after forcing an entrance, their retreat was cut off, and a dreadful slaughter ensued; nearly all were cut to pieces or made prisoners, 8 March, 1814.

Bergerac, France. Here John of Gaunt, then earl of Derby, defeated the French, in 1344; and here a temporary treaty of peace between the Catholics and Protestants, establishing liberty of conscience, was signed 17 Sept. 1577.

Berkeley Castle, Gloucestershire, was begun by Henry I. in 1108, and finished in the next reign. Here Edward II. was cruelly murdered by the contrivance of his queen Isabella (a princess of France), and her paramour, Mortimer, earl of March, 21 Sept. 1327. Mortimer was hanged at the Elms, near London, 29 Nov. 1330; and Edward III. confined his mother in her own house at Castle Rising, near Lynn, in Norfolk, till her death, 1357.

Berlin (capital of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg), alleged to have been founded by the margrave Albert the Bear, about 1163. Its five districts were united under one magistracy in 1714; and it was subsequently made the capital of Prussia and greatly improved by the sovereigns. It was taken and held by the Russians and Austrians, 9-13 Oct. 1760. Establishment of the Academy of Sciences, 1702; of the university, 1810. On 27 Oct. 1806, after the battle of Jena (14 Oct.), the French entered Berlin; and from this place Napoleon issued the famous Berlin decree, an interdiction against the commerce of England, 20 Nov. It declared the British islands to be in a state of blockade, and ordered all Englishmen found in countries occupied by French troops to be treated as prisoners of war. On 5 Nov. 1808, Napoleon entered into a convention with Prussia, by which he remitted to Prussia the sum due on the war debt, and withdrew many of his troops to reinforce his armies in Spain; see Prussia, 1866, 1871.

Bermudas, or SUMMERS'S ISLES, a group in the N. Atlantic ocean, discovered by Juan Bermudas, a Spaniard, in 1522, but not inhabited until 1609, when sir George Summers was cast away upon them. They were settled by stat. 9 James I., 1612. Among the exiles from England during the civil war was Waller, the poet, who wrote, while resident here, a poetical description of the islands. There was an awful hurricane here, 31 Oct. 1780, and by another a third of the houses was destroyed, and the shipping driven ashore, 20 July, 1813. A large iron dry-dock here, which cost 250,000*l.*, was towed from the Medway to the Bermudas in June and July, 1869. Governors, sir Fred. E. Chapman, 1867; gen. J. H. Lefroy, March, 1871; sir Robert Michael Laffan, Feb. 1877.

Bernal Collection of articles of taste and virtue, formed by Ralph Bernal, Esq., many years chairman of committees of ways and means in the house of commons. He died 26 Aug. 1854. The sale in March, 1856, lasted 31 days, and enormous prices were given. The total sum realized was 62,680*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Bernard, Mount St., so called from a monastery founded on it by Bernardine Menthon in 962. Velan, its highest peak, is about 8000 feet high, covered with perpetual snow. Hannibal, it is said, conducted the Carthaginians by this pass into Italy (218 a.c.); and by the same route, in May, 1800, Bonaparte led his troops to Italy before the battle of Marengo, 14 June. On the summit of Great St. Bernard is the ancient monastery still held by a community of monks, who entertain travellers.

Bernardines, or WHITE MONKS, a strict order of Cistercian monks, established by St. Bernard of Clairvaux, about 1115. He founded many monasteries.

Berne, the sovereign canton of Switzerland, joined the Swiss League, 1352; the town Berne was made a free city by the emperor Frederick, May, 1218; it successfully resisted Rudolph of Hapsburg, 1288. It surrendered to the French under gen. Brune, 12 April, 1798. The town has bears for its arms, and some of these animals are still maintained on funds specially provided for the purpose. It was made capital of Switzerland, 1848.

Berry (the ancient Biturigum Regia), central France, held by the Romans since the conquest by Cæsar (58–50 a.c.) till it was subdued by the Visigoths; from whom it was taken by Clovis in a.d. 507. It was erected into a duchy by John II. in 1360, and was not incorporated into the royal domains till 1601.

Bersaglieri, the sharpshooters of the Sardinian army, first employed about 1848.

Berwick-on-Tweed, a fortified town on the northeast extremity of England, the theatre of many bloody contests while England and Scotland were two kingdoms; it was claimed by the Scots because it stood on their side of the river. Here John Balliol did homage for Scotland, 30 Nov. 1292. It was annexed to England in 1333; and after having been taken and retaken many times, was finally ceded to England in 1482. In 1551 it was made independent of both kingdoms. The town surrendered to Cromwell in 1648, and to gen. Monk in 1659. Since the union of the crowns (James I., 1603) the strong fortifications have been neglected.

Bessarabia, a frontier province of European Russia, part of the ancient Dacia. After being possessed by the Goths, Huns, etc., it was conquered by the Turks, 1474, seized by the Russians, 1770, and ceded to them in 1812. The part annexed to Roumania in 1856 was restored to Russia at the close of the war in 1878, in exchange for the Dobrudscha, by the treaty of Berlin, 13 July, and given up 21 Oct. 1878.

Bessemer, see Steel and Steam Navigation.

Bethlehem now contains a large convent, enclosing, as is said, the very birthplace of Christ; a church erected by the empress Helena in the form of a cross, about 325; a chapel, called the Chapel of the Nativity, where they pretend to show the manger in which Christ was laid; another, called the Chapel of Joseph; and a third, of the Holy Innocents. Bethlehem is much visited by pilgrims.—The Bethlehemite monks existed in England in 1257.

Bethlehem Hospital (so called from having been originally the hospital of St. Mary of Bethlehem), a royal foundation for the reception of lunatics, incorporated by Henry VIII. in 1547. The old Bethlehem Hospital, Moorfields, erected in 1676, pulled down in 1814, was built in imitation of the Tuileries at Paris. The present hospital in St. George's fields was begun April, 1812, and opened in 1815. In 1856 extensive improvements were completed under the direction of Mr. Sydney Smirke. Income 1876, 25,184*l.*

Bethnal Green (E. London), a poor, populous parish; said to have been the seat of Henry de Montfort, hero of the "Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green" (Percy Ballads). Many churches have been recently erected by the instrumentality of bishop Blomfield and others, and the district has been much favored by the baroness Burdett-Coutts. The East London Museum here, a branch of that at South Kensington, was opened by the prince of Wales, 24 June, 1872. Sir Richard Wallace lent to it for a year a collection of fine pictures and valuable curiosities. The gardens opened 19 May, 1875.

Bethune (France), an independent lordship since the eleventh century, was annexed to the monarchy by the treaty of Utrecht, 1713, after several changes.

Betting-houses, affording much temptation to gaming, and consequent dishonesty, in the lower classes, were suppressed by an act passed in 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119). A Pari-mutuel, or mutual betting-machine, in Aug., and the "Knightsbridge Exchange," a betting company, 2 Nov. 1870, were declared illegal; see Races. New Betting Act passed 8 June, 1874.

In 1874 this act was applied to betting stations at races; legal proceedings against Mr. H. Chaplin, as steward of the Jockey Club, were quashed by the magistrates at Newmarket.

Beverley (E. Yorkshire), the Saxon Beverlac, or Beverlega. St. John of Beverley, archbishop of York, founded a stately monastery here, and died 721; and on his account the town received honors from Athelstane, William I., and other sovereigns. It was disfranchised for corruption in 1870, after a long investigation.

Beyrout (the ancient Berytus), a seaport of Syria, colonized from Sidon. It was destroyed by an earthquake, 566; was rebuilt, and was alternately possessed by the Christians and Saracens; and after many changes fell into the power of Amurath IV. It was taken during the Egyptian revolt by Ibrahim Pacha, in 1832. The total defeat of the Egyptian army by the allied British, Turkish, and Austrian forces, and evacuation of Beyrout (the Egyptians losing 7000 in killed, wounded, and prisoners, and twenty pieces of cannon), took place 10 Oct. 1840. Sir C. Napier was the English admiral engaged. Beyrout suffered greatly in consequence of the massacres in Syria in May, 1860. In Nov. 1860, above 27,000 persons were said to be in danger of starving; see Syria.

Bhootan, a country north of Lower Bengal, with whom a treaty was made 25 April, 1774. After fruitless negotiations, Bhootan was invaded by the British in Dec. 1864, in consequence of injurious treatment of an envoy; see India, 1864–5.

Bhurtpore (India), capital of Bhurtpore, was besieged by the British, 3 Jan. 1805, and attacked five times up to 21 March, without success. After a desperate engagement with Holkar, the Mahratta chief, 2 April, 1805, the fortress was surrendered to gen. Lake. By a treaty, the rajah of Bhurtpore agreed to pay twenty lacs of rupees, ceded territories that had been granted to him, and delivered his son as hostage, 17 April, 1805. On the rajah's death, during a revolt against his son, Bhurtpore was taken by storm, by lord Combermere, 18 Jan. 1826; see India.

Bianchi (Whites), a political party at Florence, in 1300, in favor of the Ghibellines or imperial party, headed by Vieri de' Cerchi, opposed the Neri (or Blacks), headed by Corso de' Donati. The latter banished their opponents, among whom was the poet Dante, in 1302. "Bianchi" were also male and female penitents, clothed in white, who travelled through Italy in Aug. 1399, and were suppressed by pope Boniface IX., 1400.

Biarchy. When Aristodemus, king of Sparta, died, he left two sons—twins—Eurysthenes and Procles; and the people, not knowing to whom precedence should be given, placed both upon the throne, and thus established the first biarchy, 1102 B.C. The descendants of each reigned for about 800 years.—Herodotus.

Biarritz, a bathing-place near Bayonne. Here resided the comtesse de Montijo and her daughter Eugénie, empress of the French, till her marriage, 29 Jan. 1853. It was frequently visited by the emperor and empress.

Biberach (Württemberg). Here Moreau twice defeated the Austrians—under Latour, 2 Oct. 1796; and under Kray, 9 May, 1800.

Bible (from the Greek βιβλος, a book), the name especially given to the Holy Scriptures. The Old Testament is said to have been collected and arranged by Ezra between 458 and 450 B.C. The Apocrypha are considered as inspired writings by the Roman Catholics, but not by the Jews and Protestants; * see Apocrypha.

* In April, 1865, was published a proposal for raising a fund for exploring Palestine in order to investigate the Bible by antiquarian and scientific investigation. The first meeting was held 22 June, 1865, the archbishop of York in the chair; see Palestine.

† The division of the Bible into chapters has been ascribed to archbishop Lafranc in the eleventh, and to archbishop Langton in the thirteenth century; but T. Hartwell Horne considers the real author to have been cardinal Hugo de Sancto Caro, about the middle of the thirteenth century. The division into sections was commenced by rabbi Nathan (author of a Concordance), about 1445, and completed by Athias, a Jew, in 1661. The present division into verses was introduced by the celebrated printer Robert Stephens in his Greek Testament (1551) and in his Latin Bible (1566-7).

The most ancient copy of the Hebrew Scriptures existed at Toledo, called the Codex of Hillel; it was of very early date, probably of the fourth century after Christ; some say about 60 years before Christ. The copy of Ben Aseler, of Jerusalem, was made about 1100.

The reputed oldest copy of the Old and New Testament in Greek is that in the Vatican, which was written in the fourth or fifth century. Mai's edition appeared in 1857. The next in age is the Alexandrian Codex (referred to the fifth century) in the British Museum, presented by the Greek patriarch to Charles I. in 1629. It has been printed in England, edited by Woide and Baber, 1786-1821.—Codex Ephraemi, or Codex Regius, ascribed to the fifth century, in the Royal Library, Paris; published by Tischendorf in 1843.

The Codex Sinaiticus, probably written in the fourth century, was discovered by M. Constantine Tischendorf at St. Catherine's monastery in 1844 and 1859, and presented to the czar of Russia, at whose cost a splendid edition was published in 1862.

The Hebrew Psalter was printed at Bologna in 1477. The complete Hebrew Bible was first printed by Soncino in Italy in 1488, and the Greek Testament (edited by Erasmus) at Rotterdam, in 1516. Aldus's edition was printed in 1518; Stephens's in 1546; and the textus receptus (or received text) by the Elzevirs in 1624.

TRANSLATIONS.

The Old Testament, in Greek, termed the Septuagint (which see), generally considered to have been made by order of Ptolemy Philadelphos, king of Egypt, about 286 or 285 B.C.; of this many fabulous accounts are given.

Origen, after spending twenty-eight years in collating MSS., commenced his polyglot Bible at Cæsarea in A.D. 231; it contained the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, all made in or about the second century after Christ. The following are ancient versions: Syriac, first or second century; the old Latin version, early in the second century, revised by Jerome, in 384; who, however, completed a new version in 405, now called the VULGATE (which see): the first edition was printed (without date) about 1456; the first dated 1462; Coptic, second or third century; Ethiopic; Armenian, fourth or fifth century; Slavonic, ninth century; and the Mæso-Gothic, by Ulfilas, the apostle of the Goths, about 360, a manuscript copy of which, called the Codex Argenteus, is at Upsal. The Psalms were translated into Saxon by bishop Aldhelm about 706; Cædmon's metrical paraphrase of a portion of the Bible, about 680; and the Gospels by bishop Egbert, about 721; parts of the Bible by Bede, in the eighth century.

Biblia Pauperum (the Bible for the Poor), consisting of engravings illustrating Scripture history, with texts, carved in wood—a "block book"—printed early in the fifteenth century, was compiled by Bonaventura, general of the Franciscans, about 1260. A fac-simile was published by J. Russell Smith in 1859.

* "The Bible of Every Land" (ed. 1860), published by Messrs. Bagsters, London, is full of information respecting ancient and modern versions of the Bible.

† An "Index to the Persons, Places, and Subjects occurring in the Holy Scriptures," compiled by B. Vincent, editor of the present work, was published by the queen's printers in 1848; others published since.

‡ This society has issued 24,247,667 copies of the Bible, or parts of it, up to Jan. 1851; in May, 1863, the number had risen to 43,044,334; in 1867 to 59,639,089; in 1875 to 76,432,723; in March, 1881, to 91,014,448. The income of that year was £22,920; in 1876, 206,978; in 1878, 212,303; in year 1880-1, 209,519. In 1857 the society published a catalogue of its library, which contains a large number of remarkable editions of the Bible. The foundation-stone of its new Central hall, Queen Victoria street, London, was laid by the prince of Wales, 11 June, 1866. The society has promoted translations of the Bible into 225 languages or dialects.

Biblical Archaeology, SOCIETY FOR, established by Dr. Samuel Birch and others, 1871. Besides a journal, it has published "Records of the Past," translations from the Assyrian, Egyptian, and other languages, 1873-8.

Bibliomania (or book-madness) very much prevailed in 1811, when Dr. Dibdin's work with this title was published; see Boccaccio, and Printing, 1450-5.

Biccoca (N. Italy). Lautrec and the French were here defeated by Colonna and the Imperialists, 29 April, 1522, and Francis thereby lost his conquests in Milan.

Bicycle, see Velocipede.

Bidasoa. The allied army under lord Wellington, having driven the French from Spain, effected the passage of this river 8 Oct. 1813, and entered France.

Biddenden Maids. A distribution of bread and cheese to the poor takes place at Biddenden, Kent, on Easter Mondays, the expense being defrayed from the rental of twenty acres of land, in 1875 yielding about 20*l.* a year, the reputed bequest of the Biddenden maids, two sisters named Chulchurst, said to have been joined together like the Siamese twins, and to have died in the twelfth century. In 1656, William Horner, the rector, was nonsuited in an attempt to add the "Bread and Cheese lands" to his glebe.

Big Bethel (Virginia, U. S.), BATTLE OF, fought 10 June, 1861. Gen. Pierce attacked the Confederates in their fortifications, and was repulsed, after a partial success, losing about 40 men.

Bigamy. The Romans branded the guilty party with an infamous mark; and in England the punishment, formerly, was death. An act respecting it was passed 5 Edw. I. 1276.—Viner's Statutes. Declared to be felony, without benefit of clergy, 1 James I. 1603. Punishable, by imprisonment or transportation, 35 Geo. III. 1794; by imprisonment, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (1861). In the United States, bigamy is punishable by imprisonment.

Bilbao (N.E. Spain), founded about 1300; was taken by the French and held a few days, July, 1795. It was delivered from the Carlists by Espartero, assisted by the British, 24 Dec. 1836. It was besieged by Carlists from Feb. to May, 1874, when the siege was raised by marshal Concha, who entered Bilbao 2 May.

Bill of Exceptions. The right of tendering such a bill to a judge, either to his charge, to his definition of the law, or to other errors of the court, at a trial between parties, provided by the 2d statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I. 1284, was abolished by the Judicature Act, 1875. The practice is still maintained in American courts.

Bill of Pains, etc., see Queen Caroline.

Bill of Rights, etc., see Rights.

Billiards. The French ascribe their invention to Henrique Devigne, an artist, about 1571. Slate billiard-tables were introduced in England in 1827.

Billingsgate, the fish-market in London, is said to have derived its name from Belinus Magnus, a British prince, the father of king Lud, 400 B.C., but Stow thinks from a former owner. It was the old port of London, and customs were paid here under Ethelred II., A.D.

979.—Stow. Billingsgate was made a free market, 1699.—Chamberlain. Fish by land-carriage, as well as sea-borne, now arrives daily here. In 1849 the market was extended and improved, and a new one was erected in 1852, Mr. Bunning architect. Another new one, erected by Horace Jones, founded 27 Oct. 1874; completed Sept. 1876; lit by electric light, 25 Nov. 1878.

Bills of Exchange were invented by the Jews as a means of removing their property from nations where they were persecuted, 1160.—Anderson. Bills are said to have been used in England, 1307. The only legal mode of sending money from England, 4 Richard II. 1381. Regulated, 1698; first stamped, 1782; duty advanced, 1797; again, June, 1801; and since. It was made capital to counterfeit bills of exchange in 1734. In 1825, the year of disastrous speculations in bubbles, it was computed that there were 400 millions of pounds sterling represented by bills of exchange and promissory notes. The present amount is not supposed to exceed 50 millions. The many statutes regarding bills of exchange were consolidated by act 9 Geo. IV. 1828. An act regulating bills of exchange passed 3 Vict. July, 1839. Great alterations were made in the law on the subject by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83 (1854), and in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67 (1855). Days of grace were abolished in the case of bills of exchange payable on sight in Aug. 1871. Forgery of bills to obtain discount was detected by the bank of England, 28 Feb., after 102,217*l.* had been paid. The culprits (Americans) were tried and condemned to penal servitude for life, 26 Aug. 1873; see Trials, Aug. 1873.

A Bills of Exchange Act, declaring the law relating to acceptance, passed 16 April, 1878.

For the various laws and regulations in force in the United States, see Harper's "Cyclopædia of Commerce," p. 167 et seq.

Bills of Mortality FOR LONDON. These bills were first compiled by order of Cromwell, about 1538, 30 Hen. VIII., but in a more formal and recognized manner in 1603, after the great plague of that year. No complete series of them has been preserved. They have been superseded by the weekly returns of the registrar-general since 1837; see Public Health. The following show the numbers for London at decennial periods:

Bills of Sale, an act to consolidate and amend the law for preventing frauds upon creditors by secret bills of sale of personal chattels (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31) was passed 22 July, 1878.

Bimetallism, the system of having two standard metallic currencies in a country—gold and silver—much advocated by MM. H. Cernuschi and E. Lavellye, and others since 1867. By 56 Geo. III. c. 68 (1816), it was enacted that "gold coins only should be legal tender in all payments of more than 40*s.*" in this country. A bi-metallic currency was established in France in 1803. It was recommended for Germany in 1879, and was discussed at the Arithmetic Conference at Paris, April, 1881.

Binary Arithmetic, that which counts by twos, for expeditiously ascertaining the property of numbers, and constructing tables, was invented by Leibnitz, of Leipsic, about 1703. For the Binary theory in chemistry, see Compound Radical.

Binomial Root, in Algebra, composed of only two parts connected with the sign plus or minus; a term first used by Recorda about 1550, when he published his "Algebra." The celebrated binomial theorem of Newton is said to have been discovered in 1663.

Biography (from the Greek βίος, life, and γράφω, I write), defined as "history teaching by example." The Book of Genesis contains the biography of the patriarchs, and the Gospels that of Christ. Plutarch wrote the "Lives of Illustrious Men;" Cornelius Nepos, "Lives of Military Commanders;" and Suetonius, "Lives of the Twelve Cæsars" (all three in the first century after Christ); Diogenes Laertius, "Lives of the Philosophers" (about 205).—Boswell's "Life of Johnson" (published in 1790) is the most remarkable English biography.

Biology, termed the science of life and living things by Treviranus, of Bremen, in his work on Physiology, published 1802–22. Biology includes zoology, anthropology, and ethnology (which see). Herbert Spencer's "Principles of Biology," published 1865–7. T. H. Huxley, "Practical Instruction in Biology," 1875.

Birch-tree. The black (Betula nigra), brought from North America, 1736. The birch-tree known as the Betula pumila, introduced into Kew gardens, England, by Mr. James Gordon, from North America, 1762.—Hardy's Annals.

Birds were divided by Linnaeus into six orders (1735); by Blumenbach into eight (1805); and by Cuvier into six (1817). The most remarkable works are those published by John Gould, F.R.S.; they now consist of nearly 40 folio volumes of colored plates, etc. They include the birds of Europe, Asia, Australia, Great Britain, and New Guinea, besides monographs of the humming-birds, etc. John Gould died 3 Feb. 1881. Dr. John Latham's "Synopsis of Birds," 1781–90. John James Audubon's "Birds of America," 1826–40; see Wild Birds.

Birkbeck LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION, Southampton buildings, W. C., the present name of the mechanics' institution founded by Dr. Birkbeck in 1823.

Birkenhead (Cheshire), a modern town on the Mersey, opposite to Liverpool. The great dock here was projected by Mr. John Laird, constructed by Mr. Rendell, and opened in Aug. 1847 by lord Morpeth. In 1861 Birkenhead was made a parliamentary borough, and Mr. Laird was elected first representative. He died 29 Oct. 1874. Birkenhead received a charter of incorporation in 1878. Population in 1831, 200; in 1861, 51,649; in 1871, 65,971; see Wrecks, 1852.

Birman Empire, or EMPIRE OF AVA, see Burmese Empire and India.

Birmingham, formerly Bromwicham and Brum-megem (Warwickshire), existed in the reign of Alfred, 872; and belonged to the Bermengehams, at Domesday Survey, 1086. There were "many smythes" here in the time of Henry VIII. (Leland), but its great importance commenced in the reign of William III.

Births. The births of children were taxed in Eng- land, viz.: birth of a duke, 30*l.*; of a common person, 2*s.*, 7 Will. III. 1695. Taxed again, 1783. The in- stances of four children at a birth are numerous; but it is recorded that a woman of Königsberg (3 Sept. 1784), and the wife of Nelson, a tailor, of Oxford Market, Lon- don (Oct. 1800), had five children at a birth. The queen usually presents a small sum of money to a poor woman giving birth to three or more living children at one time; see Bills of Mortality and Registers.

Bishop (Greek ἐπίσκοπος, overseer), a name given by the Athenians to those who had the inspection of the city. The Jews and Romans had also like officers. St. Peter, styled the first bishop of Rome, was martyred 65. The presbyter was the same as a bishop.—Jerome. The episcopate became an object of contention about 144. The title of pope was anciently assumed by all bishops, and was exclusively claimed by Gregory VII. (1073-85).

Bishops in SCOTLAND were probably nominated in the fourth century.

The Reformers, styling themselves "the Congregation of the Lord," having taken up arms and defeated the queen-mother, Mary of Guise, called a parliament, which set up a new form of church polity on the Genevese model, in which bishops were replaced by "superintendents" 1561 episcopacy; declared the throne vacant; drew up a claim of right; and proclaimed William and Mary, 11 April, 1689 Episcopacy formally abolished, and the bishops' revenues sequestrated. 19 Sept. " "

The Episcopal church was thus reduced to the condition of a Nonconformist body, at first barely tolerated. It opened its first congress. 19 May, 1874
Bishop Rose connected the established episcopal church of Scotland with that form of it which is now merely tolerated, he having been bishop of Edinburgh from 1687 till 1720, when, on his death, Dr. Fullarton became the first post-revolution bishop of that see. Fife (now St. Andrews, so called in 1844) now unites the bishopric of Dunkeld (reinstitution in 1727) and that of Dunblane (reinstitution in 1731). Ross (of uncertain date) was united to Moray (reinstitution in 1727) in 1838. Argyll and the Isles never existed independently until 1847, having been conjoined to Moray and Ross, or to Ross alone, previously to that year. Galloway has been added to the see of Glasgow.

Bishops, AMERICAN. The first was Samuel Seabury, consecrated bishop of Connecticut by four non-juring prelates, at Aberdeen, in Scotland, 14 Nov. 1784. The bishops of New York and Pennsylvania were consecrated in London by the archbishop of Canterbury, 4 Feb. 1787, and the bishop of Virginia in 1790. Several American bishops formed part of the Pan-Anglican synod at Lambeth, 24-27 Sept. 1867. The first Roman Catholic bishop of the United States was Dr. Carroll, of Maryland, in 1780. The first Methodist Episcopal bishop ordained in America was Francis Asbury, 27 Dec. 1784.

Bishops, COLONIAL, etc. † By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 52 (1852), and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 49 (1853), the colonial bishops may perform all episcopal functions in the United Kingdom, but have no jurisdiction.

† Between 1847-59, Miss (now baroness) Burdett-Coutts gave 60,000*l.* to endow colonial bishoprics. In 1866 she petitioned parliament, on account of some of the bishops professing independence of the church of England. Since then, colonial bishops have been appointed without intervention of the civil power. Much discussion took place in 1867, through the deposition of Dr. Colenso, bishop of Natal, by his metropolitan, Dr. Gray, bishop of Cape Town, and the attempts of the latter to consecrate a new bishop, in opposition to the law; see under Africa and Church of England.

* An order in council, Oct. 1838, directed the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph to be united on the next vacancy in either, and Manchester, a new see, to be created thereupon; this order, as regarded the union of the sees, was rescinded in 1846.

† The sees of Bristol and Gloucester were united, 1856.

Bishops, SUFFRAGAN, to assist metropolitans, existed in the early church. Twenty-six, appointed by Henry VIII. 1534, were abolished by Mary, 1553, and restored by Elizabeth, 1558. The last appointed is said to have been Sterne, bishop of Colchester, 1606. The appointment of suffragan bishops was revived in 1869, and archdeacon Henry Mackenzie, suffragan bishop of Nottingham (diocese of Lincoln) was consecrated 2 Feb. 1870, and archdeacon Edward Parry, suffragan bishop of Dover (diocese of Canterbury), 23 March, 1870. Others have been appointed since: Guildford, 1874; Bedford, 1879.

Bismuth was recognized as a distinct metal by Agricola in 1529. It is very fusible and brittle, and of a yellowish white color.

Black Book (Liber Niger), a book kept in the exchequer, which received the orders of that court. It was published by Hearne in 1728.

A book doubtfully said to have been kept in monasteries, wherein details of the enormities practised in religious houses were entered for the inspection of visitors, under Hen. VIII. 1535. The name was given to the list of pensioners, printed 1831; and to other books. See Italy, 1876. The title Black Book was given to a list of Habitual Criminals, 1869-76; published by lieut.-col. Du Cane of Brixton, March, 1877.

Black Friday, 11 May, 1866, the height of the commercial panic in London, through the stoppage of Overend, Gurney, & Co. (limited), on 10 May. Messrs. John Henry and Edmund Gurney and their partners, committed for trial for conspiracy to defraud, 21 Jan. 1869, were tried and acquitted, 13-23 Dec. 1869. In the United States the term Black Friday is applied to Friday, 24 Sept. 1869, when a group of speculators in New York succeeded in advancing the price of gold very suddenly to 162½, and creating a disastrous panic.

Black Monday, Easter-Monday, 14 April, 1360, "so full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold that many men died on their horsebacks with the cold."—Stow. In Ireland, Black Monday was the day on which a number of the English were slaughtered at a village near Dublin, in 1209.

Black Museum, at Scotland Yard, is a collection of relics connected with crime, begun in 1874.

Black Prince, EDWARD, eldest son of king Edward III., born 15 June, 1330; victor at Poitiers, 19 Sept. 1356; at Najara, 3 April, 1367; died 8 June, 1376.

Black Rock. The vicinity of Black Rock, a short distance below Buffalo, was the scene of stirring events during the war of 1812-15. An American expedition opposite that place destroyed the enemy's boats and batteries, 29 Nov. 1812. On 11 July, 1813, gen. Peter B. Porter, with a considerable force, defended it against a British force 340 strong under lieut.-col. Bisshopp. The Americans lost 9 men, the British 23. On 30 Dec. 1813, col. Hall, of New York, was at Black Rock with 1200 militia. They were attacked on that day by a British and Indian force 1000 strong. The Americans had 50 killed and 52 wounded; the British, 25 killed and 50 wounded. Again, on 3 Aug., 1200 British troops were repulsed in this vicinity by a rifle corps of 240 men, under major Lodowick. The Americans lost 2 killed and 8 wounded. The British lost 50.

Black Rod has a gold lion at the top, and is carried by the usher of the order of the Knights of the Garter (instituted 1349), instead of the mace. He also keeps the door when a chapter of the order is sitting, and during the sessions of parliament attends the house of lords and acts as their messenger to the commons.

Black Sea, THE EUXINE (Pontus Euxinus of the ancients), a large internal sea between the S.W. provinces of Russia and Asia Minor, connected with the sea of Azoff by the straits of Yenikale, and with the sea of Marmora by the channel of Constantinople.

This sea was much frequented by the Greeks and Italians, till closed to all nations by the Turks after the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

A dreadful storm in this sea raged, and caused great loss of life and shipping, and valuable stores for the allied armies. See Russo-Turkish War..... 13 to 16 Nov. "

The Black Sea was opened to the commerce of all nations by the treaty of 1856.

The article of the treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856, by which the sea was opened to the commerce of all nations, and interdicted to any ships of war; and the erection of military maritime arsenals forbidden, was repudiated by a Russian circular, dated..... 31 (19) Oct. 1870

After some correspondence, the meeting of a conference on the subject, in London, was agreed to by all the powers concerned in the treaty.

The conference met in London 17 Jan. 1871, and a treaty was signed by which the neutralization of the sea was abrogated; but it was agreed by a special protocol that no nation shall liberate itself from the obligations of a treaty without the consent of the others who signed it, 13 March, 1871

Blockade of the Black Sea declared by Turkey during the war..... about 3 May, 1877

Black Watch, armed companies of the loyal clans (Campbells, Monros, etc.) employed to watch the Highlands from about 1725 to 1789, when they were formed into the celebrated 42d regiment, enrolled as "The Royal Highland Black Watch. Their removal for foreign service probably facilitated the outbreak in 1745. They wore dark tartans, and hence were called Black Watch. They distinguished themselves in the Ashantee war, Jan., Feb. 1874.

Blackburn, Lancashire, so called in Domesday-book. The manufacture of a cloth called Blackburn check, carried on in 1650, was superseded by Blackburn grays. In 1767, James Hargreaves, of this town, invented the spinning-jenny, for which he was eventually expelled from the county. About 1810 or 1812, the townspeople availed themselves of his discoveries, and engaged largely in the cotton manufacture, now their staple trade. Blackburn murder, see Trials, July, 1876.

Blackfriars Bridge, London. The first stone of the late bridge was laid 31 Oct. 1760, and it was completed by Mylne in 1770. It was frequently repaired, 1834-50, and began to sink. In 1864 it was pulled down, and a temporary bridge erected. The foundation of a new five-arched bridge, designed by Mr. Joseph Cubitt, was laid by lord mayor Hale, 20 July, 1865, and the bridge was opened by the queen 6 Nov. 1869. The first railway train (London, Chatham, and Dover) entered the city of London over the new railway bridge, Blackfriars, 6 Oct. 1864.

Blackheath, Kent, near London. Here Wat Tyler and his followers assembled, 12 June, 1381; and here also Jack Cade and his 20,000 Kentish men encamped, 1 June, 1450; see Tyler and Cade. Here the Cornish rebels were defeated and Flammock's insurrection quelled, 22 June, 1497. The ancient cavern, on the ascent to Blackheath, popularly termed "the retreat of Cade," and of banditti in the time of Cromwell, was rediscovered in 1780. Several daring highway robberies were committed near the heath, and the youthful culprits punished, in 1877; see Trials.

Black-lead, see Graphite.

Black-letter, employed in the first printed books in the middle of the fifteenth century. The first printing-types were Gothic; but they were modified into the present Roman type about 1469: Pliny's "Natural History" was then printed in the new characters.

Black-mail, a compulsory payment for protection of cattle, etc., made in the border counties, was prohibited by Elizabeth in 1601. It was exacted in Scotland from the lowlanders by the highlanders till 1745. It checked agricultural improvement.

Blacks, or Neri, see Bianchi.

Blackstocks, BATTLE AT. On 20 Nov. 1780, Americans under gen. Sumter, and British cavalry under col. Tarleton, had an engagement at Blackstock's plantation, on the Tyger river, Union District, S. C. After a sharp engagement, Tarleton fled, leaving nearly 200 men dead or wounded upon the field. Sumter lost only 3 killed and 5 wounded.

Blackwall (London), the site of fine commercial docks and warehouses; see Docks. The Blackwall railway was opened to the public, 4 July, 1840; the eastern terminus being at Blackwall wharf, and the western in Fenchurch street.

Blackwater, BATTLE OF, in Ireland, 14 Aug. 1598, when the Irish chief O'Neil defeated the English under sir Henry Bagnall. Pope Clement VIII. sent O'Neil a consecrated plume, and granted to his followers the same indulgence as to crusaders.

Blanketeers. A number of operatives who, on 10 March, 1817, met in St. Peter's field, near Manchester, many of them having blankets, rugs, or great-coats rolled up and fastened to their backs. This was termed the Blanket meeting. They proceeded to march towards London, but were dispersed by the magistracy. It is stated that their object was to commence a great insurrection; see Derby. Eventually the ringleaders had an interview with the cabinet ministers, and a better understanding between the working classes and the government ensued.

Blankets are said to have been first made at Bristol by Thos. Blanket, in the fourteenth century. This is doubtful.

Blasphemy was punished with death by the law of Moses (Lev. xxiv.), 1491 n.c.; and by the code of Justinian, A.D. 529. It is punishable by the civil and canon law of England, regulated by 60 Geo. III. c. 8 (1819). Daniel Isaac Eaton was tried and convicted in London of blasphemy, 6 March, 1812. Robert Taylor, a protestant clergyman, was tried twice for the same crime. He was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and largely fined, July, 1831. In Dec. 1840, two publishers of blasphemous writings were convicted.

Blasting Gelatine (a mixture of nitro-glycerine and gun-cotton), a violent explosive prepared by Alfred Nobel, and modified by professor Abel, 1879.

Blazonry. Bearing coats-of-arms was introduced and became hereditary in France and England about 1192, owing to the knights painting their banners with different figures, thereby to distinguish them in the crusades.—Dugdale.

Bleaching was known in Egypt, Syria, India, and Gaul.—Pliny. An improved chemical system was adopted by the Dutch, who introduced it into England and Scotland in 1768. There were large bleach-fields in Lancashire, Fife, Forfar, and Renfrew, and in the vale of the Leven, in Dumbarton. The application of the gas chlorine to bleaching is due to Berthollet's discovery, about 1785. Its combination with lime (as chloride of lime) was devised by Mr. Tennant, of Glasgow, who took out a patent for the process in 1798, and by his firm it is still extensively manufactured. In 1822 Dr. Ure published an elaborate series of experiments on this substance. In 1860 bleaching and dyeing works were placed under the regulations of the Factories Act.

Blenheim (or PLINTHEIM) a village in Bavaria on the left bank of the Danube, near the town of Hochstett, the site of a battle fought 2 Aug. (x. s., 13) 1704, between the English and confederates, commanded by the duke of Marlborough, and the French and Bavarians, under marshal Tallard and the elector of Bavaria. The latter were defeated with the loss of about 12,000 killed, and 13,000 prisoners (including Tallard). Bavaria became the prize of the conquerors. The British parliament gave Marlborough the honor of Woodstock and hundred of Wotton, and erected for him the house of Blenheim.*

Blind. The first public school for the blind was established by Valentine Hatty, at Paris in 1784. The first in England was at Liverpool, in 1791; in Scotland, at Edinburgh, in 1792; and the first in London in 1799. Printing in raised or embossed characters for the use of the blind was begun at Paris by Hatty in 1786. The whole Bible was printed at Glasgow in raised Roman characters about 1848. A sixpenny magazine for the blind, edited by the late rev. W. Taylor, F.R.S., so eminent for his forty years' exertions on behalf of these sufferers, was published in 1855-6. He aided the establishment of a college for the blind of the upper classes at Worcester, in 1866. There is hardly any department of human knowledge in which blind persons have not obtained distinction.* Laura Bridgman, born in 1829, became dumb and blind two years after. She was so well taught by Dr. Howe, of Boston, U.S., as to become an able instructor of blind and dumb persons. By the census of 1851, there were in Great Britain 21,487 blind persons; 11,273 males, 10,214 females; about one in 975 blind. Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, established 1873. By the census of 1870, there were in the United States 20,320 blind persons; 11,343 males, 8997 females.

Blinding, by consuming the eyeballs with lime or scalding vinegar, was a punishment inflicted anciently on adulterers, perjurers, and thieves. In the middle ages the penalty was frequently changed from total blindness to a diminution of sight. A whole army of Bulgarians were deprived of sight by the emperor Basil, 104. Several of the Eastern emperors had their eyes torn from their heads.

Blisters, used by Hippocrates (460-357 B.C.), made, it is said, of cantharides (which see).

Block Books, see Printing.

Blockade is the closing an enemy's ports to all commerce; a practice introduced by the Dutch about 1584. The principle recognized by the European powers is that every blockade, in order to be binding, must be effective. The Elbe was blockaded by Great Britain, 1803; the Baltic, by Denmark, 1848-9 and 1864; the gulf of Finland by the Allies, 1854; and the ports of the Southern States of North America by president Lincoln, April 19, 1861. The naval force of the United States then consisted of 90 vessels, of which only 42 were in commission, these latter mounting between 500 and 600 guns. The Home Squadron consisted of 12 vessels. The institution of the blockade was a formal recognition of the belligerent rights of the Confederates. A large number of vessels succeeded in running the blockade during the war; 1143 were captured by blockading squadrons, valued at $24,500,000; and 355 destroyed, valued at $7,000,000; see Orders in Council and Berlin.

Blocks employed in the rigging of ships were much improved in their construction by Walter Taylor, about 1781. In 1801, Mark I. Brunel invented a mode of making blocks by machinery, which was put into operation in 1808, and in 1815 was said to have saved the country 20,000*l.* a year.

Blois, France, the Roman Blesum. The count Guy II. sold it with his domains to Louis duke of Orleans in 1391, and eventually it accrued to the crown. The states-general were held here 1576 and 1588, on account of the religious wars; and here Henry duke of Guise was assassinated by order of the king, Henry III., 23 Dec. 1588. The empress Maria Louisa retired here in 1814.

Blood. The circulation of the blood through the lungs was known to Michael Servetus, a Spanish physician, in 1553. Cæsalpinus published an account of the general circulation, of which he had some confused ideas, improved afterwards by experiments, 1569. Paul of Venice, or Father Paolo (real name Peter Sarpi), discovered the valves which serve for the circulation; but the honor of the positive discovery of the circulation belongs to William Harvey, between 1619 and 1628.—Freind. A memorial window in the church at Folkestone, his birthplace, was uncovered 9 April, 1874.

* James Holman, the "blind traveller" (born 1768, died 1857), visited almost every place of note in the world. His travels were published in 1825. In April, 1858, a blind clergyman, rev. J. Sparrow, was elected chaplain to the Mercers' Company, London, and read the service, etc., from embossed books.

Viscount Cranborne (blind) was the author of many interesting historical essays. He died in June, 1865. On 13 July, 1865, Henry Fawcett, the blind professor of political economy at Cambridge, was elected M.P. for Brighton; for Hackney, 1874 and 1880, and was appointed postmaster-general, April 1880. Mr. F. J. Campbell (blind) ascended Mont Blanc in 1880.

EATING BLOOD was prohibited to Noah, Gen. ix.; to the Jews, Lev. xvii., etc.; and to the Gentile converts by the apostles at an assembly at Jerusalem, A. D. 52, Acts xv.

BLOOD-DRINKING was anciently tried to give vigor to the system. Louis XI., in his last illness, drank the warm blood of infants, in the vain hope of restoring his decayed strength, 1483.—Hénault.

In the fifteenth century an opinion prevailed that the declining vigor of the aged might be repaired by TRANSFUSING into their veins the blood of young persons. It was countenanced in France by the physicians about 1668, and prevailed for many years, till the most fatal effects having ensued, it was suppressed by an edict. "An English physician (Louver, or Lower) practised in this way; he died in 1691."—Freind. It was attempted again in France in 1797, and more recently there, in a few cases, with success; and in England (but the instances are rare) since 1823. Tried at Philadelphia, U. S., April, 1877; in London, unsuccessful, 10 May, 1877.

Blood's Conspiracy. Blood, a discarded officer of Oliver Cromwell's household, with his confederates, seized the duke of Ormond in his coach, intending to hang him, and had got him to Tyburn, when he was rescued by his friends, 6 Dec. 1670. Blood afterwards, in the disguise of a clergyman, attempted to steal the regal crown from the Jewel-office in the Tower, 9 May, 1671; yet, notwithstanding these and other offences, he was not only pardoned, but had a pension of 5000*l.* per annum settled on him by Charles II. 1671. He died 24 Aug. 1680.

"Bloody Assizes," held by Jeffreys in the west of England, in Aug. 1685, after the defeat of the duke of Monmouth in the battle of Sedgemoor. Upwards of 300 persons were executed after short trials; very many were whipped, imprisoned, and fined; and nearly 1000 were sent as slaves to the American plantations.

Bloomer Costume, see a note to article Dress.

Bloomsbury Gang, a cant term applied to an influential political party in the reign of George III., who met at Bloomsbury House, the residence of the duke of Bedford. The marquess of Stafford, the last survivor, died 26 Oct. 1803.

Bloreheath (Staffordshire), where, 23 Sept. 1459, the earl of Salisbury and the Yorkists defeated the Lancastrians, whose leader, lord Audley, was slain with many Cheshire gentlemen. A cross commemorates this conflict.

Blowing-machines. The large cylinders used in blowing-machines were erected by Mr. Smeaton at the Carron iron-works, 1760. One equal to the supply of air for forty forge-fires was erected at the king's dockyard, Woolwich. The hot-air blast, a most important improvement, causing great economy of fuel, was invented by Mr. James B. Neilson, of Glasgow, and patented in 1828. He died 18 Jan. 1865.

Blow-pipe. An Egyptian using one is among the paintings on the tombs at Thebes. It was employed in mineralogy by Antony von Swab, a Swede, about 1733, and improved by Wollaston and others. In 1802, professor Robert Hare, of Philadelphia, increased the action of the blow-pipe by the application of oxygen and hydrogen. By the agency of Newman's improved blow-pipes, in 1816, Dr. E. D. Clarke fused the carths, alkalies, metals, etc. A work on the blow-pipe by Plattner and Muspratt, published 1854; by G. Plympton, 1874.

Blue was the favorite colour of the Scotch covenanters in the seventeenth century. Blue and orange or yellow became the whig colors after the revolution in 1688; and were adopted on the cover of the whig periodical, the Edinburgh Review, first published in 1802. The Prussian-blue dye was discovered by Diesbach, at Berlin, in 1710. Fine blues are now obtained from coal-tar; see Aniline. BLUE-COAT SCHOOLS, so called in reference to the costume of the children. The Blue-coat school in Newgate Street, London, was instituted by Edward VI. in 1552; see Christ's Hospital. BLUE-STOCKING, a term applied to literary ladies, was originally conferred on a society comprising both sexes (1760 et seq.). Benjamin Stillingfleet, the naturalist, an active member, wore blue worsted stockings; hence the name. The beautiful Mrs. Jerminham is said to have worn blue stockings at the conversaziones of Mrs. Montagu.

Blue-books, reports and other papers printed by order of parliament; are so named on account of their wrappers; 70 vols. were printed for the lords, and 76 vols. for the commons in 1871.

Blumenau, Lower Austria; on 22 July, 1866, the Austrians in possession of this place were attacked by the Prussians on their march towards Vienna; a severe conflict was interrupted by the news of the armistice agreed to at Nikolsburg; and the same evening Austrians and Prussians bivouacked together.

Boats. Flat-bottomed boats, made in England in the reign of William I.; again brought into use by Barker, a Dutchman, about 1690; see Life-boat. A mode of building boats by the help of the steam-engine was invented by Mr. Nathan Thompson of New York in 1860, and premises were erected for its application at Bow, near London, in 1861. Charles Clifford's valuable Boat-lowering apparatus was invented 1856; see Canal-boats.

Boat Voyage. Alfred Johnson, a young man, started from America in the Centennial, a boat 20 feet long, on 15 June, and landed at Abercastle, Pembrokeshire, 11 Aug. 1876

Boat-races, see Dogget and University. The London rowing club beat the Atalanta rowing club in a four-oared race on the Thames, 10 June, 1872.

Boccaccio's Decamerone, a collection of a hundred stories or novels (many very immoral), severely satirizing the clergy, feigned to have been related in ten days, during the plague of Florence in 1348. Boccaccio lived 1313-75. A copy of the first edition (that of Valdarfer in 1471) was knocked down at the duke of Roxburgh's sale, to the duke of Marlborough, for 2260*l.*, 17 June, 1812. This copy was afterwards sold by public auction, for 875 guineas, 5 June, 1819.

Bodleian Library, Oxford, founded in 1598, and opened in 1602, by sir Thos. Bodley (died 28 Jan. 1612). It is open to the public, and claims a copy of all works published in this country. In 1868 it contained about 250,000 volumes. For rare works and MSS. it is said to be second only to the Vatican. Mr. Macray's "Annals of the Bodleian Library," published 1868.

Bœotia, a division of Greece, north of Attica, known previously as Aonia, Messapia, Hyantis, Ogygia, and Cadmeis. Thebes, the capital, was celebrated for the exploits and misfortunes of its kings and heroes. The term Bœotian was used by the Athenians as a synonym for dullness; but unjustly—since Pindar, Hesiod, Plutarch, Democritus, Epaminondas, and Corinna were Bœotians. The early history and dates are mythical; see Thebes.

Bogotá, SANTA FÉ DE, capital of New Granada (which see), founded 1538.

Bogs, probably the remains of forests, covered with peat and loose soil. An act for the drainage of Irish bogs passed March, 1830. The bog-land of Ireland has been estimated at 3,000,000 acres; that of Scotland at upwards of 2,000,000; and that of England at near 1,000,000 of acres. In Jan. 1849, Mr. Rees Reece took out a patent for certain valuable products from Irish peat. Candles and various other articles produced from peat have been since sold in London. Fuel for railway engines and other purposes was made from peat (April, 1873); and a peat, coal, and charcoal company established.

Much destruction has been caused by the motion of bogs. Leland (about 1546) speaks of Chat Moss doing so. Mischief was done at Enaghmore, Ireland, 3 Jan. 1853; and farm-houses and fields near Dunmore were covered, Oct. 1873.

Bohemia, formerly the Hercynian forest (Boiemum, Tacitus), derives its name from the Boii, a Celtic tribe. It was governed by dukes (Borziwoi the first, 891), till Ottocar assumed the title of king, 1198. The kings at first held their territory from the empire: and the crown was elective till it came to the house of Austria, in which it is now hereditary. The original Bohemians term themselves Czechs, and, following the example of Hungary, now call for autonomy. Prague, the capital, is famous for sieges and battles. Bohemian Brethren, a body of Christians in Bohemia, appear to have separated from the Calixtines (which see), a branch of the Hussites, in 1467. Dupin says, "They rejected the sacraments of the church, were governed by simple laics, and held the Scriptures for their only rule of faith. They presented a confession of faith to king Ladislav in 1504 to justify themselves from errors laid to their charge." They appear to have had communication with the Waldenses, but were distinct from them. Luther, in 1533, testifies to their purity of doctrine, and Melancthon commends their discipline. They were dispersed during the religious wars of Germany in the seventeenth century.

Boii, a Celtic people of N. Italy, who emigrated into Italy, and were defeated at the Vadimonian lake, 283 B.C. They were finally subdued by Scipio Nasica, 191 B.C.

Boilers, STEAM. Many lives have been lost by their explosions. 23 persons were killed at Glasgow iron-works, 5 March, 1879; and 21 killed at the Birchill iron-works, near Walsall, 15 May, 1880.

Boiling of Liquids. Dr. Hooke, about 1683, ascertained that liquids were not increased in heat after they had once begun to boil, and that a fierce fire only made them boil more rapidly. The following boiling-points have been stated:

Ether.....	93° Fahr.	Phosphorus.....	554° Fahr.
Alcohol.....	173 "	Oil of Turpentine..	312 "
Water.....	212 "	Sulphur.....	822 "
Nitric acid.....	187 "	Mercury.....	662 "

Boiling to Death, made a capital punishment in England, by stat. 22 Hen. VIII. 1531 (repealed in 1547). This act was occasioned by seventeen persons having been poisoned by Richard Rosse, otherwise Coke, the bishop of Rochester's cook, two of whom died. Margaret Davy, a young woman, suffered in the same manner for a similar crime, 28 March, 1542.—Stow.

Bois-le-duc, Dutch Brabant, the site of a battle between the British and the French republican army, in which the British were defeated, and forced to abandon their position and retreat to Schyndel, 14 Sept. 1794. This place was captured by the French, 10 Oct. following; it surrendered to the Prussian army, under Bulow, in Jan. 1814.

Bokhara, the ancient Sogdiana, after successively forming part of the empires of Persia, of Alexander, and Bactriana, was conquered by the Turks in the sixth century, by the Chinese in the seventh, and by the Arabs about 705. After various changes of masters, it was subdued by the Uzbek Tartars, its present possessors, in 1505. The British envoys col. Stoddart and capt. Conolly were murdered at Bokhara, the capital, by the khan, about June, 1843. In the war with Russia, begun in 1866, the czar's army was defeated several times in May et seq. Peace was made 11 July, 1867. The Russians were again victors, 25 May, 1868, and occupied Samarcand the next day. Further conquests were made by the Russians, and Samarcand was secured by treaty, Nov. 1868. A new political and commercial treaty with Russia was published Dec. 1873.

Bomarsund, a strong fortress on one of the Aland isles in the Baltic sea, taken by sir Charles Napier, commander of the Baltic expedition, aided by the French military contingent under gen. Baraguay d'Hilliers, 15 Aug. 1854. The gov. Rodisco, and the garrison, about 2000 men, became prisoners. The fortifications were destroyed.

Bombay, the most westerly and smallest of our Indian presidencies, was visited by the Portuguese in 1509, and acquired by them in 1530. It was given (with Tangier in Africa, and 300,000*l.* in money) to Charles II. as the marriage portion of the infanta Catherine of Portugal, 1662. In 1668, it was granted to the East India company, who had long desired it, "in free and common socage," as of the manor of East Greenwich, at an annual rent of 10*l.* Confirmed by William III., 1689. The two principal castes at Bombay are the Parsees (descendants of the ancient Persian fire-worshippers) and the Borahs (sprung from early converts to Islamism). They are both remarkable for commercial activity.

Bondage, see Slavery.

Bones. The art of softening bones was discovered about 1688, and they were used in the cutlery manufacture, etc., immediately afterwards. The declared value of the bones of cattle and of other animals, and of fish (exclusive of whale-bone), imported into the United Kingdom from Russia, Prussia, Holland, Denmark, etc., amounted to 363,613*l.* in 1851, to 628,535*l.* in 1870, to 741,899*l.* in 1877, and to 432,642*l.* in 1879. Bone-dust has been extensively employed in manure since the publication of Liebig's researches in 1840.

Bonesetting cannot be said to have been practised scientifically until 1620.—Hill.

Bonn, a town on the Rhine (the Roman Bonna), was in the electorate of Cologne. It has been frequently besieged, and was assigned to Prussia in 1814. The academy founded by the elector in 1777, made a university, 1784; abolished by Napoleon; re-established and enlarged, 1818. Here Albert, our late prince-consort, was entered as a student, May, 1837.

Bonny River, Guinea, West Africa, a seat of the palm-oil trade; king George visited England in 1878.

Bons Hommes, hermits of simple and gentle lives, appeared in France about 1257; in England about 1263. The prior of the order was called le bon homme by Louis VI.

Book (Anglo-Saxon, boec; German, buch). Books were originally made of boards, or the inner bark of trees; afterwards of skins and parchment. Papyrus, an indigenous plant, was adopted in Egypt. Books with leaves of vellum were invented by Attalus, king of Pergamus, about 156 B.C., at which time books were in volumes or rolls. The MSS. in Herculaneum consist of papyrus, rolled and charred and matted together by the fire, and are about nine inches long, and one, two, or three inches in diameter, each being a separate treatise. The most ancient books are the Pentateuch of Moses and the poems of Homer and Hesiod. The first PRINTED Books (see Printing) were printed on one side only, the leaves being pasted back to back.

In Paris 6445 volumes were published in 1842, and 7360 in 1861, see Bibliography.

Books or Books.—Jerome (who died 420) states that he had ruined himself by buying a copy of the works of Origen. A large estate was given by Alfred for a book on cosmography, about 872. The "Roman de la Rose" was sold for about 30*l.*, and a homily was exchanged for 200 sheep and five quarters of wheat. Books frequently fetched double or treble their weight in gold. They sold at prices varying from 10*l.* to 400*l.* each in 1440. A copy of "Macklin's Bible" ornamented by Mr Tomkins was declared worth 600 guineas.—Bulter. A yet more superb copy was mounted in a London office for 3000*l.*; see Harleian's Decameron.

BONNINISM.—The book of St. Catherine, a very early ornamental book, is supposed to have been bound about 800

A Latin Psalter was bound in oak boards ninth century

 Velvet was first covering in the fourteenth century, and silk soon after. Vellum was introduced early in the fifteenth century; it was stamped and ornamented
 about 1510
 Leather came into use about the same time.
 The rolling machine, invented by Mr. William Burr, was substituted for the beating hammer, and gas-stoves began to take the place of the charcoal fires used to heat the gilder's finishing tools. 1830
 Cloth binding superseded the common boards generally, about 1831

Book-keeping. The system by double-entry, called originally Italian book-keeping, was taken from the course of algebra published by Burgo, in the fifteenth century, at Venice. John Gwogne, a printer, published a treatise "on the keeping of the famous reconyng . . .
 Debitor and Creditor," London, 1543. This is our earliest work on book-keeping. James Peele published his "Book-keeping" in 1569. John Mellis published "A Briefe Instruction and Manner how to Keepe Bookes of Accompts," in 1588. Improved systems were published by Benjamin Booth in 1789 and by Edward Thomas Jones in 1821 and 1831.

Booksellers, at stationarii, from their practice of having booths or stalls at the corners of streets and in markets. They were long subject to vexatious restrictions, from which they were freed in 1758.

The earliest bookseller's catalogue is said to be that published by Andrew Maunsell, of Lothbury, dedicated to queen Elizabeth, 1595.

"Booksellers' Provident Institution," founded 1837; "Retreat," Abbot's Langley, Herts, 1843.

The Bookseller, a monthly newspaper of British and foreign literature, published in 1858; with it was incorporated Bent's Literary Advertiser, established in 1802.

Booksellers' Association. The chief publishers in London formed themselves into an association and fixed the amount of discount to be allowed, 29 Dec. 1829, and for some years restricted the retail booksellers from selling copies of works under the full publishing price.
 A dispute arose as to the right of the latter to dispose of books which had become theirs by purchase at such less profit as they might deem sufficiently remunerative.
 The dispute was referred to lord chief-justice Campbell, at Stratheden House, 14 April, 1852. His lordship gave judgment against the association, which led to its dissolution, 19 May following.

Booneville (Mo.), BATTLE OF, fought 17 June, 1861. Gov. Jackson of Missouri, a Confederate sympathizer, had abandoned Jefferson City, which was immediately occupied by gen. Lyon. The Confederate forces in the state were concentrating about Booneville, 50 miles above Jefferson City. Before they could accomplish this, however, Lyon moved upon Booneville, and, with 2000 men, defeated Marmaduke, who offered little resistance. The action only lasted 20 minutes. The result of Lyon's prompt movement compelled the Confederate detachments to concentrate on the southern border of the state.

Boothia Felix, a large peninsula, N.W. point of America, discovered by sir John Ross in 1830, and named after sir Felix Booth, who had presented him with 20,000*l.* to fit out his polar expedition. Sir Felix died at Brighton in Feb. 1850.

Boots, said to have been the invention of the Car-ians, were mentioned by Homer, 907 B.C., and frequently by the Roman historians. A variety of forms may be seen in Fairholt's "Costume in England." An instrument of torture termed "the boot" was used in Scotland upon the Covenanters about 1666.

Borax (Boron), known to the ancients, used in soldering, brazing, and casting gold and other metals, was called chrysocolle. Borax is produced naturally in the mountains of Thibet, and was brought to Europe from India about 1713. Homberg, in 1702, discovered in borax boracic acid, which latter, in 1808, was decomposed by Gay-Lussac, Thénard, and H. Davy into oxygen and the previously unknown element boron. Borax has lately been found in Saxony. It is now largely manufactured from the boracic acid found by Hoeser to exist in the gas arising from certain lagoons in Tuscany; and an immense fortune has been made by their owner, M. Lardarel, since 1818.

Bordeaux (W. France), the Roman Burdigalla, in Aquitania, was taken by the Goths, 412; by Clovis, 508.
 It was gained by Henry II. on his marriage with Eleanor of Aquitaine, 1151. Edward the Black Prince brought John, king of France, captive to this city after the battle of Poitiers, 19 Sept. 1356, and here held his court eleven years; his son, our Richard II., was born at Bordeaux, 1366. After several changes Bordeaux finally surrendered to Charles VII. of France, 14 Oct. 1453. The fine equestrian statue of Louis XV. was erected in 1743.
 Bordeaux was entered by the victorious British army after the battle of Orthès, fought 27 Feb. 1814.—Thirteen vessels were burned and others injured in the port, through the ignition and explosion of petroleum spirit, 28 Sept. 1869. The French delegate government and the representatives of foreign powers removed here from Tours, 11 Dec. 1870. M. Gambetta remained for a time with the army of the Loire. By the "pacte de Bordeaux," between the different parties of the national assembly, M. Thiers became chief of the executive power, 17 Feb. 1871. The French Association for the Advancement of Science held its first meeting here, 5 Sept. 1872;
 M. Quatrefores, president.

 buan and consul-general of Borneo, visits England and receives many honors. Oct. 1847
 He destroys many of the Bornean pirates. 1849
 Labuan made a bishopric; the bishop (F. J. MacDougall) consecrated at Calcutta, the first English bishop consecrated out of England. 18 Oct. 1855
 The Chinese in Sarawak rise in insurrection and massacre a number of Europeans; sir James Brooke escapes by swimming across a creek; he speedily returns with a force of Malays, etc., and chastises the insurgents, of whom 2000 are killed. 17, 18 Feb. 1857

Borough or BURGH, anciently a company of ten families living together, now such towns as send members to parliament, since the election of burgesses in the reign of Henry III. 1265. Charters were granted to towns by Henry I., 1132; which were remodelled by Charles II. in 1682-4, but restored in 1688. Twenty-two new English boroughs were created in 1553. Burgesses were first admitted into the Scottish parliament by Robert Bruce, 1326; and into the Irish, 1365. Acts to amend the Representation of the People in England and Wales passed 7 June, 1832, and 15 Aug. 1867; and the Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations, 9 Sept. 1835; see Constituency.

Borough-bridge (W. R. of York). Here Edward II. defeated the earls of Hereford and Lancaster, 16 March, 1322. Lancaster was mounted on a lean horse, led to an eminence near Pontefract, and beheaded.

Borough-Englab, an ancient tenure by which the younger son inherits, is mentioned as occurring 834. It was abolished in Scotland by Malcolm III. in 1062.

Boscobel, near Dodington, Shropshire. Charles II. (after his defeat at Worcester, 3 Sept. 1651), disguised in the clothes of the Pendrill, remained from 4 to 6 Sept. at White Ladies; on 7 and 8 Sept. he lay at Boscobel House, near which exists an oak, said to be the acorn of the Royal Oak in which the king was part of the time hidden with col. Careless. — Shurpe. The "Boscobel Tracts" were first published in 1650. In 1861 Mr. F. Manning published "Views," illustrating these tracts. W. II. Answorth's "Boscobel," a story with authentic details, published 1872.

Bosnia, in European Turkey formerly part of Pan-nonia, was governed by chiefs till a brother-in-law of Louis, king of Hungary, was made king, 1376. He was defeated by the Turks in 1389, and became their vassal. Bosnia was incorporated with Turkey in 1463. Many efforts have been made by the Bosnians to recover their independence. A rebellion, begun in 1849, was quelled by Omar Pacha in 1851. The Bosnians joined the insurgents in Herzegovina, Sept. 1875; revolt was subdued, Aug. 1877; see Turkey.

Boston (Lincolnshire), a trading town, made a sta- ple for wool, 1357; St. Botolph's church, with a lofty tower, was erected about 1309.

Boston (Massachusetts, U. S.), built about 1637. Here originated that resistance to the British authori- ties which led to American independence. The act of parliament laying duties on tea, papers, colors, etc. (passed June, 1767), so excited the indignation of the citizens of Boston that they destroyed several hun- dreds of chests of tea, 16 Dec. 1773. Population in 1890, 262,535.

Boston, EVACUATION OF, 17 March, 1776. The American army under Washington had hemmed the British army within the small area of the peninsula in which Boston stands, for several months, during which time there had been frequent skirmishing and some can- nonading. At length Washington took such a com- manding position upon Dorchester Heights that the British general, Howe, agreed to leave the city immedi- ately if allowed to do so in peace. The permission was granted, and, on 17 March, gen. Howe, with 7000 sol- diers, 4000 seamen, and 1500 loyalist families, sailed for Halifax. The American army then took possession, to the great joy of the remaining inhabitants. Congress gave Washington a gold medal in commemoration of the event.

Bosworth Field (Leicestershire), the site of the thirteenth and last battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, 22 Aug. 1485, when Richard III. was de- feated by the earl of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.) and slain, through the desertion of sir William Stanley. It is said that Henry was crowned on the spot with the crown of Richard, found in a hawthorn bush near the field.

Botany. Aristotle is considered the founder of the science (about 347 B.C.). Historia Plantarum of Theophrastus was written about 320 B.C. Authors on botany became numerous at the close of the fifteenth century. Fuchsius, Bock, Bauhin, Cæsalpinus, and others wrote between 1535 and 1600. The system and arrangement of the great Linnæus was made known about 1735; and Jussieu's system, founded on Tournefort's, and called "the natural system," in 1758. At Linnæus's death (1778) the species of plants actually described amounted in number to 11,800. The number of species now recorded cannot fall short of 100,000. J. C. Loudon's "Encyclopedia of Plants," a most comprehensive work, first appeared in 1829. De Candolle's "Prodromus Systematis Naturalis Regni Vegetabilis" (of which Vol. I. appeared in 1818) is now complete (1876). An International Botanical congress was opened in London 23 May, 1866, professor A. De Candolle president; another at Amsterdam, 13 April, 1877. Robert Brown, who accompanied Flinders in his survey of New Holland in 1803, died 10 June, 1858, aged 85, was long acknowledged to be the chief of the botanists of his day (facile princeps).

Botany Bay (Australia), discovered by capt. Cook, 28 April, 1770, received its name from the great variety of plants growing on the shore. It was fixed on for a colony of convicts from Great Britain. The first governor, capt. Arthur Phillip, who sailed from England in May, 1787, arrived at the settlement in Jan. 1788. The colony was eventually established at Port Jackson, about thirteen miles to the north of the bay; see New South Wales and Transportation.

Bothwell Bridge (Lanarkshire). The Scotch Covenanters, who took up arms against the intolerant government of Charles II., and defeated the celebrated Claverhouse at Drumclog, 1 June, 1679, were totally routed by the earl of Monmouth at Bothwell Bridge, 22 June, 1679, and many prisoners were tortured and executed.

Bottle-conjurer. In accordance with a wager, a person having advertised that he would jump into a quart bottle at the Haymarket Theatre, on 16 Jan. 1749, the house was densely crowded and besieged by thousands anxious to gain admittance. The pickpockets had a rich harvest, and the duped crowd nearly pulled down the edifice.

Bottles in ancient times were made of leather. The art of making glass bottles and drinking-glasses was known to the Romans at least before 79; for these articles and other vessels have been found in the ruins of Pompeii. Bottles were made in England about 1558. A bottle which contained two hogsheds was blown, we are told, at Leith, in Scotland, in Jan. 1747-8; see Glass.

Bouillon, Belgium, formerly a duchy, was sold by Godfrey, its ruler, to Albert, bishop of Liège, to obtain funds for the crusade, 1095. It was seized by the French in 1672, and held by them till 1815, when it was given to the king of the Netherlands, as duke of Luxemburg. It was awarded to Belgium after the Revolution of 1830.

Boundary Act. Commissioners were appointed by the Reform Bill, passed 15 Aug. 1867. Viscount Eversley, Russell Gurney, sir John T. B. Duckworth, sir Francis Crossley, and John Walter, first sat 16 Aug. England and Wales were divided into 18 districts, and other arrangements made. Another boundary act was passed 13 July, 1868.

Bounties, premiums granted to the producer, exporter, or importer of certain articles—a principle introduced into commerce by the British parliament. The first granted on corn, in 1688, were repealed in 1815. They were first legally granted in England for raising naval stores in America, 1703, and have been granted to the herring-fishery, on sail-cloth, linen, and other goods.

Bounty Mutiny took place on board the Bounty, an armed ship which quitted Otaheite, with bread-fruit trees, 7 April, 1789. The mutineers put their captain, Bligh, and nineteen men into an open boat, with a small stock of provisions, near Annamooka, one of the Friendly isles, 28 April, 1789; these reached the island of Timor, south of the Moluccas, in June, after a voyage of nearly 4000 miles. Some of the mutineers were tried 15 Sept. 1792; six were condemned and three executed. For the fate of others, see Pitcairn's Island.

Bourbon, HOUSE OF (from which came the royal houses of France, Spain, and Naples), derives its origin from the Archambauds, lords of Bourbon, in Berry.

Bourbon FAMILY COMPACT (a defensive alliance between France, Spain, and the Two Sicilies concluded by M. de Choiseul)..... 15 Aug. 1761

The Bourbons expelled France, 1791; restored 1814; again expelled on the return of Bonaparte from Elba, and again restored after the battle of Waterloo, 1815. The elder branch was expelled once more, in the person of Charles X. and his family, in 1830, in consequence of the revolution of the memorable days of July in that year.

Orleans branch ascended the throne in the person of the late Louis Philippe, as "king of the French," 9 Aug. 1830; deposed, 24 Feb. 1848; and his family also was expelled.

The Bourbon family fled from Naples (6 Sept. 1860), and Francis II. lost his kingdom; expelled from Spain, Sept. 1808; restored by Alfonso XII., 31 Dec. 1874; see France, Spain, Naples, Orleans, Parma, Conde, and Legitimists.

Bourbon, ISLE OF (in the Indian ocean), discovered by the Portuguese about 1542. The French are said to have first settled here in 1642. It surrendered to the British, under admiral Rowley, 21 Sept. 1809, and was restored to France in 1815.—Alison. An awful hurricane in Feb. 1829, did much mischief. Bourbon was named "l'île de la Réunion" in 1848; see Mauritius.

Bourdeaux, see Bordeaux.

Bourignonists, a sect founded by Antoinette Bourignon, who, in 1658, took the Augustine habit and travelled in France, Holland, England, and Scotland; in the last she made many converts about 1670. She maintained that Christianity does not consist in faith and practice, but in inward feeling and supernatural impulse. A disciple named Court left her a good estate. She died in 1680, and her works, 21 volumes 8vo, were published 1686.

Bournous, the Arabic name of a hooded garment worn in Algeria, which has been introduced in a modified form into England and France since 1847.

Bouvines (N. France), the site of a desperate battle, 27 July, 1214, in which Philip Augustus of France was victorious over the emperor Otho and his allies, consisting of more than 150,000 men. The counts of Flanders and Boulogne were taken prisoners, and the earl of Salisbury, brother of king John.

Boxtel (in Dutch Brabant), where the British and allied army, commanded by the duke of York, was defeated by the French republicans, who took 2000 prisoners and eight pieces of cannon, 17 Sept. 1794.

Box-tree, indigenous to this country, and exceedingly valuable to wood-engravers. In 1815 a large box-tree at Box Hill, Surrey, was cut down, and realized a large sum. Macculloch says that "the trees were cut down in 1815, and produced upwards of 10,000*l.*" About 1820 the cutting of trees on the hill produced about 6000*l.*—In the United States the tree is common from Massachusetts to Florida. It is called, indifferently, boxwood or dogwood. Boxwood is now the only wood used for engravings, and it is extensively used also by mathematical-instrument makers.

Boy-bishop. During the middle ages a choir-boy was frequently elected on St. Nicholas's day, 6 Dec., and held office till the 28th. The custom was suppressed in England in July, 1542, but lingered for some time after.

Boycotting, see Ireland, 1880. A Boycott fund to assist capt. Boycott in his trouble was subscribed in 1880-1.

Boyle Lectures, instituted by his will (18 July, 1691), by Robert Boyle (son of the great earl of Cork), a philosopher distinguished by his genius, virtues, and benevolence, who died 30 Dec. 1691. Eight lectures (in vindication of the Christian religion) are to be delivered. The office of lecturer is tenable for three years.

Boyne, a river in Ireland, near which William III. defeated his father-in-law, James II., 1 July, 1690. The latter lost 1500 (out of 30,000) men; the Protestant army lost about a third of that number (out of 36,000). James fled to Dublin, thence to Waterford, and escaped to France. The duke of Schomberg was killed by mistake by his own soldiers as he was crossing the river, and here also was killed the rev. George Walker, who defended Londonderry in 1689. Near Drogheda is a splendid obelisk, 150 feet in height, erected in 1736 by the Protestants of the empire in commemoration of this victory.

Brabant, part of Holland and Belgium, an ancient duchy, part of Charlemagne's empire, fell to his son Charles, 806. It became a separate duchy (called at first Lower Lorraine) in 959. It descended to Philip II. of Burgundy, 1429, and in regular succession to the emperor Charles V. In the seventeenth century it was held by Holland and Austria, as Dutch Brabant and the Walloon provinces, and underwent many changes through the wars of Europe. The Austrian division was taken by the French in 1746 and 1794. It was united to the Netherlands in 1814, but South Brabant was given to Belgium, 1830. The heir of the throne of Belgium is styled duke of Brabant; see Belgium.

Braganza, a city in Portugal, gave title to Alfonso, natural son of John I. of Portugal (in 1422), founder of the house of Braganza. When the nation, in a bloodless revolution in 1640, threw off the Spanish yoke, John, duke of Braganza, was called to the throne as John IV., and his descendants now reign over Portugal and Brazil (which see).

Brahmins, Hindoo priests, the highest of the four castes. Pythagoras is thought to have learned from them his doctrine of the Metempsychosis; and it is affirmed that some of the Greek philosophers went to India on purpose to converse with them. The Brahmins derive their name from Brahma, one of the three beings whom God, according to their theology, created, and with whose assistance he formed the world. See Vedas.

Brandy (German Branntwein, burnt wine), the spirit distilled from wine. Alcohol appears to have been known to Raymond Lully in the thirteenth century, and to have been manufactured in France early in the fourteenth. It was at first used medicinally, and miraculous cures were ascribed to its influence. In 1852, 3,959,452; in 1866, 5,621,930; in 1870, 7,942,965; in 1874, 3,378,057; in 1876, 7,913,092; in 1877, 2,962,697; in 1879, 5,024,668 gallons were imported into the United Kingdom. It is now largely manufactured in Britain.

Brandywine, a river in N. America, near which a battle took place between the British, under Howe, and the Americans under Washington, in which the latter (after a day's fight) were defeated with great loss, 11 Sept. 1777. Philadelphia fell into the possession of the victors.

Brass. That mentioned in the Bible was most probably bronze. When Lucius Mummius burned Corinth to the ground, 146 B.C., he found immense riches, and during the conflagration, it is said, all the metals in the city melted, and, running together, formed the valuable composition described as Corinthian Brass. This is well doubted, for the Corinthian artists had long before obtained great credit for their method of combining gold and silver with copper.—Du Fresnoy. Some of the English sepulchral engraved brasses are said to be as old as 1277; a white brass produced by Mr. P. M. Parsons, about 1875.

Brauronia, festivals in Attica, at Brauron, where Diana had a temple. The most remarkable that attended these festivals were young virgins in yellow gowns, dedicated to Diana. They were about ten years of age, and not under five; and therefore their consecration was called ἑκατεννία, from ἑκα, ten; 600 B.C.

Bravo Case. Mr. Charles Delauney Turner Bravo, barrister, died suddenly and mysteriously (at Balham, Surrey), suicide suspected, 18 April, 1876; open verdict at inquest; new inquest ordered 26 June, 1876; began 10 July. Verdict: "Wilful murder by administration of tartar emetic; but not sufficient evidence to fix the guilt upon any person," 11 Aug. 1876.

Bray, Berks. Fuller says that its vicar, Symon Symonds, was twice a papist and twice a Protestant—in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth (1533-1558). Upon being called a turn-coat, he said he kept to his principle, that "of living and dying the vicar of Bray." The modern song refers to the political changes of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Bray's Associates for founding clerical libraries and supporting negro schools. This society began in 1723, by Dr. Thomas Bray, rector of Sheldon, appointing trustees to expend 900*l*. bequeathed by Mr. D'Alloue for the instruction of negroes. In 1733 these trustees received their present name, and their fund was increased by legacies in 1767 and 1768.

Dr. Bray, who was one of the founders of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, and who had acted energetically as commissary in Maryland for the bishop of London, about 1696, died 15 Feb. 1730, bequeathing part of his books to Sion College, and part to found a parochial library, under certain conditions, complied with at Maidstone; and also money for other religious purposes. The associates assist schools and libraries in the colonies, and parochial libraries at home.

Brazen Bull, said to have been contrived by Perillus, at Athens, for Phalaris, tyrant of Agrigentum, 570 B.C. It had an opening in the side to admit the victims, and a fire was kindled underneath to roast them to death; their groans resembled the roaring of a bull. Phalaris admired the invention, but ordered the artist to make the first experiment. The Agrigentes revolted against Phalaris, cut his tongue out, and roasted him in the brazen bull, 549 B.C.

Brazil, an empire in South America, was discovered by Vincent Pinzon in Feb. 1500. Pedro Alvarez de Cabral, a Portuguese, driven upon its coasts by a tempest, April following, called it the land of the Holy Cross; but it was subsequently named Brazil, on account of its red wood. The French having seized on Portugal in 1807, the royal family and nobles embarked for Brazil, and landed 7 March, 1808. The dominant religion is Roman Catholic; but others are tolerated. Constitution of 25 March, 1824; modified 12 Aug. 1834, and 12 May, 1840. Population, Aug. 1872, 10,093,978 (above 1½ million slaves and aborigines); see Portugal.

Heir: Pedro, born 15 Oct. 1875.

Breach of Promise of MARRIAGE; a resolution in favor of abolishing the action was adopted in the Commons (106-65) 6 May, 1879.

Bread. Ching-Noung, the successor of Fohi, is reputed to have been the first who taught men (the Chinese) the art of husbandry, and the method of making bread from wheat, and wine from rice, 1998 B.C.—Univ. Hist. Baking of bread was known in the patriarchal ages: see Exodus xii. 15. It became a profession at Rome, 170 A.C. After the conquest of Macedon, 148 B.C., numbers of Greek bakers came to Rome, obtained special privileges, and soon obtained a monopoly. During the siege of Paris by Henry IV., owing to famine, bread, which had been sold whilst any remained for a crown a pound, was at last made from the bones of the charnel-house of the Holy Innocents, A.D. 1594.—Hénault. In the time of James I., barley-bread was used by the poor; and now in Iceland, cod-fish, beaten to powder, is made into bread; potato-bread is used in Ireland. The London Bakers' Company was incorporated in 1307. Bread street was once the London market for bread. Until 1302, the London bakers were not allowed to sell any in their own shops.—Stow. Bread was made with yeast by the English bakers in 1634. In 1856 and 1857 Dr. Daughlish patented a mode of making "aerated bread," in which carbonic-acid gas is combined with water and mixed with the flour, and which is said to possess the advantages of cleanliness, rapidity, and uniformity. In 1862 a company was formed to encourage Stevens's bread-making machinery. An act for regulating bakehouses was passed in July, 1863. A strike of the journeyman bakers of the metropolis, 23 Sept., was settled by concessions, 9 Oct. 1872. A Bread Reform League formed; meeting at the Mansion House, London, 17 Dec. 1880.

ASSISE OF BREAD. The first statute for the regulation of the sale of bread was 3 John, 1203. The chief justiciary, and a baker commissioned by the king, had the inspection of the assize.—Matthew Paris. The assize was further regulated by statute in 51 Hen. III. 1266, and 8 Anne, 1710. Broad Act, Ireland, placing its sale on the same footing as in England, 1 Vict. 1838. Bread was directed to be sold by weight in London in 1832; the statute "Assessio Panis" was repealed in 1824; and the sale of bread throughout the country was regulated in 1836.

Bread-fruit Tree, a native of the South Sea islands. A vessel under captain Bligh was fitted out to convey some of these trees to various British colonies in 1789 (see Bounty), and again in 1791. The number taken on board at Otaheite was 1151. Some were left at St. Helena, 352 at Jamaica, and five were reserved for Kew Gardens, 1793. The tree was successfully cultivated in French Guiana, 1802.

Breakwaters. The first stone of the Plymouth breakwater was lowered 12 Aug. 1812. It stretches 5280 feet across the sound, is 360 feet in breadth at the bottom and more than 30 at the top, and consumed 3,660,000 tons of granite blocks, from one to five tons each, up to April, 1841, and cost a million and a half sterling. The architects were Mr. John Rennie and his son sir John. The first stone of the light-house on its western extremity was laid 1 Feb. 1841. Breakwaters have been constructed at Holyhead, Portland, Dover, etc.

Breastplate. One was worn by the Jewish high-priest, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xxxix.). Goliath "was armed with a coat of mail," 1063 B.C. (1 Sam. xvii.). Breastplates dwindled to the diminutive gorgets. Ancient breastplates are mentioned as made of gold and silver.

Brechin, Scotland; sustained a siege against the army of Edward III., 1333. The battle of Brechin or Huntly-hill was fought between the earls of Huntly and Crawford (the latter defeated), 18 May, 1452. The see of Brechin was founded by David I. in 1150. One of its bishops, Alexander Campbell, was made prelate when but a boy, 1556. The bishopric, discontinued soon after the revolution in 1688, was revived in 1731.

Breda, Holland, was taken from the Spaniards by prince Maurice of Nassau in 1590; retaken by the Spaniards, under Spinola, June, 1625; and by the Dutch, Oct. 1637. The "Compromise of Breda" was a proposal to Philip II., deprecating his harsh measures in the Netherlands, presented and refused in 1566. Our Charles II. resided here at the time of the Restoration, and here he issued his declaration of a free general pardon, 4 April, 1660; see Restoration. Breda was taken by the French in 1793. The French garrison was expelled by the burghesses in 1813.

Breeches. Among the Greeks, this garment indicated slavery. It was worn by the Dacians, Parthians, and other northern nations; and in Italy, it is said, was worn in the time of Augustus Cæsar. In the reign of Honorius, about 394, the braccarii, or breeches-makers, were expelled from Rome. The "Geneva Bible," termed the "Breeches Bible" (from the rendering in Gen. iii. 7), published 1660.

Breed's Hill, see Bunker Hill.

Brehons, ancient judges in Ireland, are said to have administered justice with religious impartiality, but in later times with a tendency to love of country. It was enacted by the statute of Kilkenny that no English subject should submit to the Brehon laws, 40 Edw. III. 1365. These laws, however, were recognized by the native Irish till 1650. A translation of them was proposed in 1852, and a commission appointed. The publication of the "Ancient Laws of Ireland," by the government, began 1865.

Breitenfeld, see Leipsic.

Bremen (N. Germany), said to have been founded in 788, and long an archbishopric, and one of the leading towns of the Hanseatic League, was allowed a seat and a vote in the college of imperial cities in 1640. In 1648 it was secularized and erected into a duchy, and held by Sweden till 1712, when it was taken possession of by Denmark, by whom it was sold to Hanover in 1731. It was taken by the French in 1757, who were expelled by the Hanoverians in 1758. Bremen was annexed by Napoleon to the French empire in 1810; but its independence was restored in 1813, and all its old franchises in 1815. It became a member of the North German Confederation in 1866. International agricultural exhibition opened 13 June, 1874. Population of the province, 1871, 122,402; see Hanse Towns. For the explosion at Bremerhaven, 11 Dec. 1875, see Dynamite.

Brenneville, N.W. France. Here Henry I. of England defeated Louis VI. of France, who supported William Cliton, son of Robert, duke of Normandy, 20 Aug. 1119.

Brentford, county town of Middlesex. Here Edmund Ironside defeated the Danes, May, 1016. It was taken by Charles I., after a sharp fight, 12 Nov. 1642.

Brescia, N. Italy (the ancient Brixia), became important under the Lombards, and suffered by the wars of the Italian republics, being attached to Venice. It was taken by the French under Gaston de Foix, Feb. 1512, when it is said 40,000 of the inhabitants were massacred. It was retaken 26 May, 1516. It surrendered to the Austrian gen. Haynau, 30 March, 1849, on severe terms. It was annexed to Sardinia in 1859.

Breslau, in Silesia, was burned by the Mongols in 1241, and conquered by Frederick II. of Prussia, Jan. 1741. A fierce battle took place here between the Austrians and Prussians, the latter under prince Bevern, who was defeated 22 Nov. 1757. Breslau was taken; but was regained 21 Dec. the same year. It was besieged by the French, and surrendered to them, Jan. 1807, and again in 1813.

Bressa Prize. Dr. Cesare Antonio Bressa, by will of 4 Sept. 1835, bequeathed property to the Royal Academy of Sciences, Turin, to give a prize every two years for some important discovery or valuable work published relating to physics, natural history, geography, history, statistics, etc. The first prize (about 1200*l.*) to be awarded in 1879 to a foreigner; the second to an Italian, and so on alternately.

Brest, a seaport, N.W. France, was besieged by Julius Cæsar, 54 B.C.; possessed by the English, A.D. 1378; given up to the duke of Brittany, 1390. Lord Berkeley and a British fleet and army were repulsed here with dreadful loss in 1694. The magazine burned, to the value of some millions of pounds sterling, 1744. The marine hospitals, with fifty galley slaves, burned, 1766. The magazine again destroyed by fire, 10 July, 1784. From this great depot of the French navy, numerous squadrons were equipped against England during the late war, among them the fleet which lord Howe defeated on 1 June, 1794. England maintained a large blockading squadron off the harbor from 1793 to 1815, but with little injury to France. It is now a chief naval station, and is considered impregnable. The British fleet visited Brest, Aug. 1865.

Brethren, see Bohemian and Plymouth Brethren.

Bretigny, PEACE OF, concluded with France, 8 May, 1360, by which England retained Gascony and Guienne, and acquired other provinces; renounced her pretensions to Maine, Anjou, Touraine, and Normandy; was to receive 3,000,000 crowns, and to release king John, long a prisoner. The treaty not being carried out, the king remained and died in England.

Breton, see Cape Breton.

Bretwalda (wide-ruling chief), one of the kings of the Saxon heptarchy, chosen by the others as a leader in war against their common enemies. The following are mentioned by Bede (492 to 642): Ella, king of Sussex; Ceawlin of Wessex; Ethelbert of Kent; Redwald of East Anglia; Edwin, Oswald, and Oswy of Northumbria. The title was bestowed upon Egbert, 828; see Britannia.

Breviary (so called as being an abridgment of the offices used in the Roman Catholic service) contains the seven canonical hours, viz., matins about midnight; lauds (when not joined to matins, about 3 A.M.); primes (about 6), tierce (about 9), sexts (about 12), nones (about 3 P.M.), vespers (4 or 6), complines (about 9). Lord Bute published a translation of the breviary, 1879. The breviary is ascribed to pope Gelasius I. about 492. It was first called the canon, and afterwards the breviary; came into use among the ecclesiastical orders about 1080; and was reformed by the councils of Trent and Cologne, and by Pius V., Urban VIII., and other popes. The quality of type in which the breviary was first printed gave the name to the printing type called brvier.

Brewers are traced to Egypt. Brewing was known to our Anglo-Saxon ancestors.—Tindal. "One William Marie, a rich maltman or brewer, of Dunstable, had two horses all trapped with gold, 1414."—Stow. In Oct. 1851, there were 2205 licensed brewers in England, 146 in Scotland, and 97 in Ireland; total, 2548: these are exclusive of retail and intermediate brewers. There were 40,414 licensed brewers in the United Kingdom in 1856; the revenue from whom to the state was in that year 81,030*l*. In 1858 in England there were 205 great brewers; see Alc. Porter.

In 1800 the brewers' license (for sale) was made 1*l*.; not for sale, 6*s*.; a duty was laid upon beer calculated upon the specific gravity of the wort (43 & 44 Vict. c. 20).

Briar's Creek (N. America), near which the Americans, 2000 strong, under gen. Aphe, were totally defeated by the English under gen. Prevost, 3 March, 1779.

Bribery forbidden (Deut. xvi. 19). Samuel's sons were guilty of it, 1112 B.C. (1 Sam. viii. 8). Thos. de Weyland, a judge, was banished for bribery in 1288; he was chief-justice of the common pleas. William de Thorpe, chief-justice of the king's bench, was convicted of bribery in 1351. Another judge was fined 20,000*l*. for the like offence, 1616. Mr. Walpole, secretary-at-war, was sent to the Tower for bribery in 1712. Lord Stratford was suspended from voting in the Irish house of lords for soliciting a bribe, Jan. 1784.

Bribery at Elections. In 1854 an important act was passed consolidating and amending previous acts relating to this offence, from 7 Will. III. (1695) to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 184.

Bric-à-Brac (French), old curiosities; such as cabinets, pieces of ironwork, etc. The collecting began about the time of queen Anne, 1702-14. The publication of Bric-à-Brac, a monthly price list, began in 1868.

Bricks were used in Babylon, Egypt, Greece, and Rome, in England by the Romans about 44. Made under the direction of Alfred the Great, about 898.—Saxon Chron. The size regulated by order of Charles I., 1625. Taxed, 1784. The number of bricks which paid duty in England in 1820 was 949,000,000; in 1830, above 1,100,000,000; in 1840, 1,400,000,000; and in 1850, 1,700,000,000. The duties and drawbacks of excise on bricks were repealed in 1850. In 1839 Messrs. Cooke and Cunningham brought out their machinery by which, it is said, 18,000 bricks may be made in ten hours. Messrs. Dixon and Corbett, near Newcastle, in 1862, were making bricks by steam at the rate of 1400 per hour. The machinery is the invention of Clayton & Co., London.

Bridewell, once a palace of king John, near Fleet-ditch, London, 1210, was given to the city for a work-house by Edward VI., 1553.* The New Bridewell prison, erected in 1829, was pulled down in 1864; that of Tothill-fields was rebuilt in 1881.

Bridges were first of wood. There are ancient stone bridges in China. Abydos is famous for the bridge of boats which Xerxes built across the Hellespont, 480 B.C. Trajan's magnificent stone bridge over the Danube, 4770 feet in length, was built in A.D. 106. Brotherhoods for building bridges existed in S. France about 1180. The Devil's bridge in the canton of Uri was built on two high rocks; and many stories have been invented to account for it. At Schaffhausen an extraordinary bridge was built over the Rhine, 400 feet wide: there was a pier in the middle of the river, but it is doubtful whether the bridge rested upon it; a man of the lightest weight felt the bridge totter under him, yet wagons heavily laden passed over without danger. The bridge was destroyed by the French in 1799; see London, Warrington, Blackfriars, Southwark, and other bridges, in separate articles. The chief Thames bridges were freed from toll 24 May, 1879, and 26 June, 1900.

Bridgewater, Somersetshire, was incorporated by king John, in 1200. In the war between Charles I. and the parliament, the king's forces burned part of the town, 1643. Here stood an ancient castle in which the ill-advised duke of Monmouth lodged when proclaimed king in 1685. The town was disfranchised for bribery, 1870.

Bridgewater Canal, the first great work of the kind in England, was begun by the duke of Bridgewater, the father of canal navigation in this country, in 1759, and opened 17 July, 1761. James Brindley was the engineer. It commences at Worsley, seven miles from Manchester; and at Barton Bridge is an aqueduct which, for upwards of 200 yards, conveys the canal across the river Irwell. The length of the canal is about twenty-nine miles.

Bridgewater Treatises. The rev. Francis, earl of Bridgewater, died in April, 1829, leaving by will 8000*l.* to be given to the author or authors, appointed by the president of the Royal Society, who should write an essay "on the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, as manifested in the creation." The essays (by sir Charles Bell, Drs. T. Chalmers, John Kidd, William Buckland, William Prout, Peter M. Roget, and the revs. William Whewell and William Kirby) were published 1833-35.

"Brief," a weekly newspaper, began Nov. 1877.

Briefs are the letters of the pope despatched to princes and others on public affairs, and usually written short, without preface or preamble, and on paper; in which particulars they are distinguished from bulls. The latter are ample, and written on parchment. Briefs are sealed with red wax and the seal of the fisherman, or St. Peter in a boat, and always in the presence of the pope. The queen's letters, called "briefs," authorizing collections in churches for charitable purposes are now discontinued. A lawyer's brief is an abridgment of his client's case.

Britain (called by the Romans Britannia,* from its Celtic name Prydhain, Camden). The earliest records of the history of this island are the manuscripts and poetry of the Cambrians. The Celts, the ancestors of the Britons and modern Welsh, were the first inhabitants of Britain. It is referred to as the Cassiterides or tin-islands by Herodotus, 450 B.C.; as Albion and Ierne (England and Ireland) by Aristotle, 350 B.C., and Polyb-

* The Romans eventually divided Britain into Britannia Prima (country south of the Thames and Severn); Britannia Secunda (Wales); Flavia Caesariensis (between the Thames, Severn, and Humber); Maxima Caesariensis (between the Humber and Tyne); and Valentia (between the Tyne and Firth of Forth).

ius, 260 B.C. Britain, including England, Scotland, and Wales, was anciently called Albion, the name of Britain being applied to all the islands collectively—Albion to only one.—Pliny. (See Albion, England, Scotland, and Wales.)

British Columbia (N. America). In June, 1858, news came to California that in April gold had been found in abundance on the mainland of North America, a little to the north and east of Vancouver's Island. A great influx of gold-diggers (in a few weeks above 50,000) from all parts was the consequence; and Mr. Douglas, governor of Vancouver's Island, evinced much ability in preserving order. The territory with adjacent islands was made a British colony with the above title, and placed under Mr. Douglas. The colony was nominated and the government settled by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 1858), and a bishop nominated in 1859.—For a dispute in July, 1859, see United States. Vancouver's Island was incorporated with the colony in 1866, and Victoria was made the capital, 24 May, 1868. Recent governors: Frederick Seymour, 1864; Anthony Musgrave, 1869; J. W. Trutch, 1871. The colony was annexed to Canada, 1871.

Britton, an ancient treatise on English law written in French by or in the name of king Edward I., about 1291. Coke attributed the work to John le Breton, bishop of Hereford, who died in 1275. An edition of "Britton," with a translation in English by Mr. F. Nicholls, was published in 1865.

Broad Arrow. All attempts to ascertain the origin of this mark have been fruitless. It is stated that timber trees fit for shipping in the forest of Dean in 1639 were marked with the crown and broad arrow. It is said to have been the device of viscount Sydney, earl of Romney, master-general of the ordnance, 1698-1702.—Breuer.

"Broad Bottom" Administration. The Pelham administration (which see) was so called because formed by a coalition of parties, Nov. 1744.

Broad Church School in the Church of England, whose members reject traditional beliefs and substitute what has been termed "negative theology." It became prominent about 1836, through the lectures of Dr. Hampden, and still more through the "Theological Essays" of Mr. F. D. Maurice, in 1853; the "Essays and Reviews" (which see), in 1860; the works of bishop Colenso on the Pentateuch, etc., 1862 et seq.; and of Dr. Arnold, dean Stanley, canon Kingsley, and others.

Brocade, a silken stuff, variegated with gold or silk ver, and enriched with flowers and figures, originally made by the Chinese; the manufacture was established at Lyons in 1757.

Broccoli, said to have been brought to England from Italy in the sixteenth century.

Brokers, both of money and merchandise, were known early in England; see Appraisers. They are licensed, and their dealings regulated by law in 1695-8, 1816, and 1826. The dealings of stockbrokers were regulated in 1719, 1733, and 1736, and subsequently; see Parabroker and Barnard's Act. Brokers in the city of London placed under the supervision of the lord mayor and aldermen, in 1707, were relieved from it by an act passed 9 Aug. 1870.

Bromine (from the Greek βρωμος, a stink), a poisonous volatile liquid element discovered in salt water by M. Balard in 1826. It is found in combination with metals and mineral waters.

Bromley College, Kent, founded in 1666, for widows of clergy of the Church of England; residence and pension.

Bronze was known to the ancients, some of whose bronze statues, vessels, etc., are in the British Museum. The bronze equestrian statue of Louis XIV., 1699, in the Place Vendôme at Paris (demolished 10 Aug. 1792), the most colossal ever made; it contained 60,000 pounds. Bronze is composed of copper and tin, with sometimes a little zinc and lead. The present bronze coinage, penny, halfpenny, and farthing (composed of 95 parts of copper, 4 tin, 1 zinc), came into circulation Dec. 1860.

Brown, Fort, a work partly completed by the Americans on the Rio Grande, opposite Matamoras, in the spring of 1846, and commanded by major Brown, in honor of whom it was named. It was cannonaded from Matamoras on 8 May, 1846. Major Brown was mortally wounded. Gen. Taylor marched from Point Isabel to its relief, which was afforded after a cannonade and bombardment of 160 hours. This was the opening of hostilities between the United States and Mexico; see Mexican War.

Brown Institute, Battersea, with a hospital for quadrupeds and birds useful to man, established by means of a bequest of Thomas Brown of Dublin; first professor, Dr. Burdon-Sanderson; opened 2 Dec. 1871. Dr. Greenfield, professor, Dec. 1878.

Brown's Insurrection, see United States, 1859.

Brownian Motion, so called from Robert Brown, the celebrated botanist, who in 1827, by the aid of the microscope, observed in drops of dew a motion of minute particles which at first was attributed to rudimentary life, but was afterwards decided to be due to currents occasioned by inequalities of temperature and evaporation.

Brownists, or BARROWISTS, the first Independents (which see), named after Robert Brown, a schoolmaster in Southwark, about 1590. Henry Penry, Henry Barrow, and other Brownists, were cruelly executed for alleged sedition, 29 May, 1586.

Brownstown (Mich.), 26 miles below Detroit. Here 200 Ohio volunteers, under major Van Horne, were defeated by some British and Indians on 4 Aug. 1812. The Americans lost 17 killed and 8 wounded.

Bruce's Travels. James Bruce, the "Abyssinian traveller," set out in June, 1768, to discover the source of the Nile. Proceeding first to Cairo, he navigated the Nile to Syene, thence crossed the desert to the Red Sea, and, arriving at Jeddah, passed some months in Arabia

Felix, and, after various detentions, reached Gondar, the capital of Abyssinia, in Feb. 1770. On 14 Nov. 1770, he obtained a sight of the sources of the Blue Nile. He returned to England in 1778, and died 27 April, 1794.

Bruges, Belgium, in the seventh century, was capital of Flanders, and in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries almost the commercial metropolis of the world. It suffered much through an insurrection in 1488, and the consequent repression. It was subjected to France in 1794, to the Netherlands in 1814, and to Belgium in 1830.

Brunaire Revolution, see Directory.

Brunanburg (supposed by some to be near Ford, Northumberland). Aulaf, with an army of Northmen from Ireland, and Constantine III., king of Scots, landed at the mouth of the Humber, and were defeated with very great slaughter at Brunanburg by Athelstan, 937.

Brundisium (now Brindisi), S. Italy, a Greek city, taken by the Romans, 267 B.C.; and made a colony, 244. Here Virgil died, 22 Sept. 19 B.C.

Brünn, capital of Moravia, since 1641; was entered by the French under Murat, 18 Nov. 1805; and by the Prussians, 13 July, 1866.

Brunswick Clubs, established to maintain the house of Hanover and the Protestant ascendancy in church and state, began in England at Maidstone, 18 Sept. 1828; in Ireland at the Rotunda in Dublin, 4 Nov. same year. Other cities formed similar clubs.

Brunswick, DUCHY OF. The duchy of Brunswick, in Lower Saxony, was conquered by Charlemagne, and governed afterwards by counts and dukes. Albert-Azzo II., marquis of Italy and lord of Este, died in 1097, and left by his wife Cunegonde (the heiress of Guelph, duke of Carinthia in Bavaria), a son, Guelph, who was invited into Germany by Imtza, his mother-in-law, and invested with all the possessions of his wife's step-father, Guelph of Bavaria; see Bararia. His descendant, Henry the Lion, married Maud, daughter of Henry II. of England, and was the founder of the Brunswick family. His dominions were very extensive; but, having refused to assist the emperor Frederick Barbarossa in a war against pope Alexander III., through the emperor's resentment he was proscribed at the diet at Wurtzburg, in 1180. The duchy of Bavaria was given to Otho of Wittelsbach, ancestor of the family of Bavaria; the duchy of Saxony to Bernard Ascanius, founder of the house of Anhalt; and his other territories to different persons. On this, he retired to England; but, at the intercession of our Henry II., Brunswick and Luneburg were restored to him. The house of Brunswick in 1409 divided into several branches. Brunswick was included by Napoleon in the kingdom of Westphalia in 1806, but was restored to the duke in 1815. Population of the duchy of Brunswick in 1871, 812,170; in 1875, 827,498. Brunswick joined the North German Confederation, 18 Aug. 1866.

 (See Hanover and England.)

Brunswick Theatre, Well Street, East London, built to replace the Royalty (burned down 11 April, 1826), was opened 25 Feb. 1828. On the 29th the building was destroyed by the falling in of the walls, too much weight being attached to the heavy iron roof. Fortunately, the catastrophe happened in the day-time (during a rehearsal of "Guy Maunering"), and only twelve persons perished.

Brussels, once capital of Austrian Brabant, now of Belgium (since 1831), was founded by St. Gery, of Cambray, in the seventh century. It is celebrated for its fine lace, carpets, and tapestry. The Hôtel de Ville has a turret 364 feet in height; and on its top is a copper figure of St. Michael, 17 feet high, which turns with the wind; see Belgium.

Bubble Companies, see Companies, Law's Bubble, and South Sea Bubble.

Buccaneers, cruel, piratical adventurers, French, English, and Dutch, who commenced their depredations on the Spaniards of America soon after the latter had taken possession of that continent and the West Indies. Their numbers were much increased by a twelve years' truce between the Spaniards and Dutch in 1609, when many of the discharged sailors joined the buccaneers. The first levy of ship-money in England, in 1635, was to defray the expense of chastising these pirates. The principal commanders of the first buccaneers were Montbar, Lolonois, Basco, and Morgan. Van Horn, of Ostend, captured Vera Cruz, 1603; Morgan took Panama, 1670; Gramont seized Campeachy, 1685; and Pointis took Carthage, 1697; all gained enormous booty. The buccaneer confederacy was broken up through the peace of Ryswick, 10 Sept. 1697.

"Bucentaur," the vessel in which the doge of Venice used to proceed to wed the Adriatic, from the twelfth to the eighteenth century.

Buchanites (in Scotland): followers of Mrs. Buchan, who about 1779 pretended to be the woman of Rev. xii., and promised to conduct them to the new Jerusalem, etc. She died in 1791, and her followers dispersed.

Bucharest (in Wallachia). Preliminaries of peace were ratified at this place between Russia and Turkey, it being stipulated that the Pruth should be the frontier of the two empires, signed 28 May, 1812. The subsequent war between these powers altered many of the provisions of this treaty. Bucharest was occupied by the Russians, Turks, and Austrians, successively, in the Crimean war. The last quitted it in 1856. It is now capital of the kingdom of Roumania, established 26 March, 1881.

Buckhurst Peerage, see Trials, 1876.

Buckingham Palace, the London residence of the sovereign. Old Buckingham House was built on the "Mulberry Gardens," by John Sheffield, duke of Buckingham, in 1703. In 1761 it was bought by George III., who in 1775 settled it on his queen, Charlotte. She made it her town residence; and here all her children, except the eldest, were born. Here were married the duke of York and princess Frederica of Prussia, in 1791; the duke of Gloucester and princess Mary, 1816; the prince of Hesse-Homburg and princess Elizabeth, 1818; and the duke of Cambridge and princess of Hesse the same year. The house was pulled down in 1825, and the present palace commenced on its site. After an expenditure of nearly a million sterling, it was completed, and occupied by queen Victoria, 13 July, 1837. Further improvements were made in 1853. The marble arch, taken down from the exterior of this palace, was re-erected at Cumberland Gate, Hyde Park, 29 March, 1851.

Bucklers, used in single combat, are said to have been invented by Proetus and Acrisius of Argos, about 1370 B.C. When Lucius Papirius defeated the Samnites, he took from them bucklers of gold and silver, 309 B.C.

Buckles were worn instead of shoestrings in the reign of Charles II., and soon became fashionable and expensive; about 1791 they fell out of use. Ornamental buckles became fashionable, 1873.

Buda (or OFEN), the ancient Aquincum, on the W. bank of the Danube opposite Peshth, and with it (termed Buda-Peshth) the capital of Hungary. It was taken by Charlemagne in 799; and sacked by Solymán II. after the battle of Mohatz, when the Hungarian king, Louis, was killed, and 200,000 of his subjects carried away captives, 1526. Buda was sacked a second time, when the inhabitants were put to the sword, and Hungary was annexed to the Ottoman empire, 1541. Retaken by the Imperialists, under the duke of Lorraine, and the Mahometans delivered up to the fury of the soldiers, 1686. It suffered much in 1848; was entered without resistance by the Austrians, 5 Jan. 1849; stormed, 20 May; given up by Russians to Austrians, July, 1849. Here the emperor Francis Joseph was crowned king of Hungary, 8 June, 1867; see Hungary. Buda-Peshth constituted the capital of Hungary, Nov. 1873. Great loss of life (about 120) and property by a storm, 26 June, 1875; another storm, 11 July following.

Buddhism, the chief religion in Asia beyond the Ganges, and in China, Japan, and Ceylon, originated with Gautama Siddhartha, the Sakya Muni, generally termed Buddha, or "the enlightened," a prince of Kapilavastu, in Central India, said to have been born 623, and to have died 543 B.C.

In July, 594 B.C., disgusted with the behavior of the Brahmins, he retired from the world for a time, and, on coming forth, preached a new religion so successfully that it predominated in India till the tenth century, A.D.*

Buddhism inculcates strict morality; it forbids killing, stealing, adultery, lying, and drunkenness, and every shade of these vices, and declares charity or love to be the source of all virtues. Some writers assert that Buddhism includes belief in the transmigration of souls, and the absorption of good souls into God himself, from whom they have emanated; others reckon annihilation or eternal sleep (the Nirvāṇa) among Buddhist tenets.

A form of Buddhism, termed the religion of Fō, exists in China, besides the system of Confucius and Lao-tse. It is said to have been introduced in the reign of Ming-ti, A.D. 68-81.

"Le Boudha et ses Religions," by M. J. B. St. Hilaire, was published in 1860. Mr. T. Rhyl David's "Buddhism," in 1874.

The Buddhists in the world are estimated at 455,000,000.

Bude Light (so named from Bude in Cornwall, the residence of Mr.—afterwards sir Goldsworthy—Gurney, its inventor) consists of two or more concentric argand gas-burners, one rising above another, which produce a most brilliant flame, like the petals of a rose. The illuminating powers were increased by subjecting manganese, etc., to the action of the flame, in order to produce oxygen and hydrogen gas. This light was patented 1839 and 1841.

Budget (from the French bougette, Latin bulga, a small bag), a term applied to the English chancellor of exchequer's annual statement of the finances of the country, from the documents having been formerly presented in a leather bag. The budgets of sir Robert Peel in 1842 (including the income-tax) and 1846 (free trade), and of Mr. Gladstone in 1860 (in connection with the treaty with France), are the most important in recent times. A surplus of about 6,000,000*l.* was announced by sir Stafford Northcote, 16 April, 1874; since then there has been a deficiency; see Revenue.

Buena Vista, BATTLE OF. This important conflict took place on 22 and 23 Feb. 1847. Taylor, with only about 5000 men (500 of them regulars), was compelled to confront a Mexican army of 20,000, under gen. Santa Anna, not far from San Luis Potosí. There was slight skirmishing on the 22d, but on the morning of the 23d a terrible battle opened. The conflict was a fierce and bloody one. The Americans held the field, and that night the Mexicans withdrew, leaving their dead and wounded behind. The Americans lost 267 killed, 456 wounded, and 23 missing. The Mexicans lost almost 2000. They left 500 of their comrades dead on the field; see Mexican War.

Buenos Ayres, a province of S. America, now part of the Argentine republic. The country was explored by Sebastian Cabot in 1526, and the capital, Buenos Ayres, founded by don Pedro de Mendoza in 1535. In 1585 the city was rebuilt and recolonized; and made a bishopric, 1620; and a viceroyalty, 1775. Population of the province in 1868, 550,000; see Argentine Confederation.

Buffoons were originally mountebanks in the Roman theatres. Their shows were discouraged by Domitian, and abolished by Trajan, 98; see Jesters.

Building. In early times men dwelt in caves; wood and clay were the first building materials. Building with stone was early among the Tyrians. In Ireland a castle was built of stone at Tuam by the king of Connaught in 1161; and it was "so new and uncommon as to be called the Wonderful Castle." Building with brick was introduced by the Romans into their provinces. Alfred encouraged it in England in 886. It was adopted by the earl of Arundel about 1598, London being then almost wholly built of wood; see Architecture.

Building acts were passed by Elizabeth in 1562, 1580, and 1592; and by Charles II. in 1667. Recent acts are very numerous. The Building Act for the Metropolis, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84 (1844), was amended in 1855, 1860, 1869, 1871, and 1878.

Building societies, formed to enable a person to purchase a house by paying money periodically to a society for a certain number of years, instead of paying rent to a landlord, began about 1836, when an act was passed for their regulation; a new act was passed 30 July, 1874.

Bulgaria, the ancient Moesia Inferior, a principality tributary to Turkey. The Bulgarians were a Slavonian tribe, who harassed the Eastern empire and Italy from 499 to 678, when they established a kingdom. They defeated Justinian II., 687; but were subdued, after several conflicts, by the emperor Basil, in 1018. After defeating them in 1014, and taking 15,000 Bulgarian prisoners, he caused their eyes to be put out, leaving one eye only to every hundredth man, to enable him to conduct his countrymen home. The kingdom was re-established in 1186; but after several changes was conquered by Bajazet and annexed to the Ottoman empire, 1396. Bulgaria was a chief site of the Russo-Turkish war (which see), 1877-8.

Bull, or EDICT OF THE POPE. The bulla is properly the seal, either of gold, silver, lead, or wax. On one side are the heads of Peter and Paul, and on the other the name of the pope and year of his pontificate. A bull against heresy was issued by Gregory IX. in 1231. Pius V. published a bull against Elizabeth, 25 April, 1570; in 1571 bulls were forbidden to be promulgated in England. The bull Unigenitus (beginning with this word) against the Jansenists was issued by Clement XI., 1713; confirmed by Benedict XIII., 1725. The Golden Bull of the emperor Charles IV., so called from its golden seal, was made the fundamental law of the German empire, at the diet of Nuremberg, 1356; see Brazen Bull. Pius IX. published an encyclical letter censuring modern errors, 8 Dec. 1864; see under Rome; see Stocks.

Bull-baiting, or Bull-Fighting, was an amusement at Stamford in the reign of John, 1209; and at Tutbury, 1374. In the Sports of England we read of the "Easter fierce hunts, when foaming boars fought for their heads, and lusty bulls and huge bears were baited with dogs;" and near the Clink, London, was the Paris, or Bear Garden, so celebrated in the time of Elizabeth for the exhibition of bear-baiting, then a fashionable amusement. A bill to abolish bull-baiting was thrown out in the commons, chiefly through the influence of the late Mr. Windham, who made a speech in favor of the custom, 24 May, 1802. It was made illegal in 1835; see Cruelty to Animals. Bull-fights were introduced into Spain about 1200; abolished there, "except for pious and patriotic purposes," in 1784. Bull-fights are very common in Spain. A bull-fight at Lisbon, attended by 10,000 spectators, on Sunday, 14 June, 1840; one took place at Havre, 5 July, 1868. Somewhat theatrical fights with Spanish bulls, at the Agricultural Hall, London, were stopped 28 March, 1870, for cruelty.

Bullets of stone were in use, 1514. Iron ones are mentioned in the Fadera, 1550. Lead bullets were made before the close of the sixteenth century. The conoidal cup rifle-ball was invented by capt. Minié, about 1833; a modification of this (conoidal but without cup), by Mr. Pritchett (1853), is used with the Enfield rifle. Other bullets have been since devised.

Bullion, uncoined gold and silver. The "Bullion Report" of a parliamentary committee in 1810, principally guided by Mr. Horner and Mr. (afterwards sir Robert) Peel, established the conclusion, that paper money is always liable to be over-issued, and consequently depreciated, unless it be at all times immediately convertible into gold. This principle has been adopted in British monetary arrangements; see Bank of England.

Bulwer-Clayton Treaty, concluded 19 April, ratified 4 July, 1850, by which sir Henry Lytton Bulwer for the British, and Mr. Clayton for the American government, declared that neither should obtain exclusive control over the proposed ship-canal through Central America, or erect any fortification on any part of the country. Disputes afterwards arose with respect to this treaty, and the connection of Great Britain with the Mosquito territory (which see), which were settled in 1857.

Its abrogation was proposed by the Americans in 1880, on account of De Lesseps's plan for a canal in Central America.

Bundschuh, see Jacquerie.

Bunhill-fields (originally Bonhill-field), a burial-ground near Finsbury Square, E. London, termed by Southey "the Campo Santo of the Dissenters;" first used in 1665. Here were interred Thomas Goodwin (1679), John Owen (1683), Isaac Watts (1748), John Bunyan (1688), George Fox, the Quaker (1690), gen. Fleetwood, son-in-law of Cromwell (1692), and Daniel De Foe (1731).—Cunningham. An act for the preservation of the ground as an open space was passed 15 July, 1867, and it was reopened by the lord mayor 14 Oct. 1869; and a monument to De Foe, subscribed for by boys and girls, was inaugurated, 16 Sept. 1870.

Bunker Hill, BATTLE OF (near Boston), was an engagement between American and British troops on 17 June, 1775. The former were commanded by col. Prescott and gen. Putnam, and the latter by gen. William Howe. The British loss, in killed and wounded, was 1054; that of the Americans, 450. Although the Americans were driven from their position after their powder was exhausted, and the triumph of arms was with the British, the moral effect of this first battle of the Americans, and the immense loss to the enemy, made it equivalent to a victory for the Republicans. On the ground where the hottest of the battle was fought, a granite obelisk, 220 feet in height, has been erected in commemoration of the event at a cost of £100,000, raised by voluntary subscription. The corner-stone was laid by gen. Lafayette, when the guest of the United States in 1825. It was completed in July, 1842. Ralph Farnham, who was present at the battle, died on 28 Dec. 1860, aged 104½ years. He was introduced to the prince of Wales when in America. Centenary of the battle celebrated 17 June, 1875.

Buonaparte, see Bonaparte.

Burford Club, the appellation given (according to Mr. Laver, the barrister, a conspirator; see Laver) by the Pretender and his agents to a pretended Jacobite club, of which lord Orrery was chairman, and lord Strafford, sir Henry Goring, earl Cowper, Mr. Hutcheson, the bishop of Rochester, sir Constantine Phipps, gen. Webb, lord Bingley, lord Craven, Mr. Dawkins, lord Scarsdale, lord Bathurst, Mr. Shippen, and lord Gower, were members. This story was set aside by the solemn declarations of lord Cowper and lord Strafford. The list of this club was published in the Weekly Journal, printed in Whitefriars; but when Read, the printer, was ordered to appear at the bar of the house, he absconded, March, 1722.—Salmon.

Burgesses, from the French Bourgeois, a distinction coeval in England with corporations. They were called to parliament in England, 1265; in Scotland in 1296; and in Ireland about 1265. Burgesses to be resident in the places they represented in parliament, 1 Hen. V. (1413). During the colonial period the Virginia House of Representatives was called the House of Burgesses; see Borough.

Burgbers and Antiburghers. In 1782 Ebenezer Erskine and others seceded from the church of Scotland. Differing in regard to the interpretation of the burgess oath, they divided into two sections with the foregoing names in 1747. In 1820 they were reunited as the United Associate Synod of the Secession church, which on 13 May, 1847, joined the Relief church, together forming the United Presbyterian church.

Burglary was a capital offence till 1829. Formerly he who convicted a burglar was exempted from parish office, 1699; Statute of Rewards, 5 Anne, 1706, and 6 Geo. I. 1720. Receivers of stolen plate and other goods to be transported, 10 Geo. III. 1770. Persons having upon them picklock-keys, etc., to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, 18 Geo. III. 1773-8. The laws with respect to burglary were amended by Mr. (afterwards Sir Robert) Peel's acts between 1823 and 1829, and by the criminal laws of 1861.

Burglaries in England, 1671, 614; 1673, 423, 1675, 801; 1679, 420.

Burgos (Spain), the burial-place of the Cid, 1098. Lord Wellington entered Burgos on 19 Sept. after the battle of Salamanca (fought 22 July, 1812). The castle was besieged by the British and allied army; but the siege was abandoned 21 Oct. same year. The fortifications were blown up by the French, 12 June, 1813.

Burgundy, a large province in France, derives its name from the Burgundians, a Gothic tribe who overran Gaul in 275, and were driven out by the emperor Probus; they returned in 287, and were defeated by Maximin. In 413 they established a Kingdom, comprising the present Burgundy, large parts of Switzerland, with Alsace, Savoy, Provence, etc. Gondicar, their leader, the first king. It was conquered by the Franks, 584.—The second kingdom, consisting of a part of the first, began with Gontran, son of Clovis I. of France, in 561. The kingdoms of Arles, Provence, and Transjuran Burgundy were formed out of the old kingdom.—Drucur. In 877 Charles the Bald made his brother-in-law Richard the first duke of Burgundy. In 938, Hugh the Great, count of Paris, founder of the house of Capet, obtained the duchy. His descendant Henry, on becoming king of France, conferred it on his brother Robert, in whose family it remained till the death of Philippe de Rouvre, without issue, in 1361. In 1363, king John of France made his fourth son, Philip, duke; see Austria and Germany.

DECE.

1363. Philip the Bold, marries Margaret, heiress of Flanders, 1369.

1404. John the Fearless (son), joined the English invaders of France; privy to the assassination of the duke of Orleans in 1407, himself assassinated at Montreuil, in presence of the dauphin, Sept. 1419.

1419. Philip the Good (son), the most powerful duke.

1467. Charles the Bold, married to Margaret of York, sister to Edward IV., 9 July, 1469, invaded France, 1473; Switzerland, 1476, killed in an engagement with the Swiss before Nancy, 4 Jan. 1477.

1477. Mary (daughter), married, 19 Aug. 1477, to Maximilian of Austria, died 27 March, 1482.

1478. Louis XI. annexed Burgundy to France. The other dominions fell to Austria.

Burials. Abraham buried Sarah at Machpelah, 1860 A.C. Gen. xxiii. Places of burial were consecrated under pope Calixtus I. in A.D. 210.—Eusebius. The Greeks had their burial-places at a distance from their towns; the Romans near the highways; hence the necessity for inscriptions. The first Christian burial-place, it is said, was instituted in 596; burial in cities, 742; in consecrated places, 750; in churchyards, 758. Many of the early Christians are buried in the catacombs at Rome; see Catacombs, Cemeteries, and Dissenters.

Burking, a new species of murder, committed in Britain, thus named from Burke, the first known criminal by whom it was perpetrated. His victims were killed by pressure or other modes of suffocation, and the bodies, which exhibited no marks of violence, were sold to the surgeons for dissection. He was executed at Edinburgh, 28 Jan. 1829. A monster named Bishop was apprehended in Nov. 1831, and executed in London, 5 Dec., with Williams, one of his accomplices, for the murder of a poor, friendless Italian boy named Carlo Ferreri. They confessed to this and other similar murders.

Burlingame Treaty, promoted by Mr. Anson Burlingame and a Chinese embassy, and signed at Washington 4 July, 1868. It authorized mutual immigration. California prospered through Chinese labor; but depression in 1879-80 led to a demand for its expulsion and abrogation of the treaty. Two new treaties between the United States and China, one relating to immigration and the other to commerce, were signed 17 Nov. 1880.

Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, opened 20 March, 1819.

Burlington Fine Arts Club, for exhibiting works of art, and promoting intercourse between artists, amateurs, etc., founded 1867.

Burlington Heights. After a fierce contest here between the British and the United States forces, 6 June, 1813, the British carried the heights.

Burlington House (Piccadilly, London) was built by Denham for Lord Burlington about 1664, and rebuilt by Lord Burlington, the architect, about 1731. It was bought for 140,000*l*. by the government, authorized by vote of the house of commons, on 27 July, 1834. It became the home of the Royal, Linnean, and Chemical societies in 1837 (who occupied new rooms in 1878), and of the Antiquaries, Geological, and Royal Astronomical societies in 1878. In 1866, sites for buildings for the University of London and the Royal Academy were granted in the grounds of Burlington House. The entrance, colonnade, etc., were removed in 1868, and the exhibition of the Royal Academy was first opened here 3 May, 1869. Burlington charity-school, near here, founded 1699.

Burmah, or Burmese Empire, founded in the middle of the eighteenth century by Alompra, the first sovereign of the present dynasty. Our first dispute with this formidable power in 1795 was amicably adjusted by Gen. Erskine. Hostilities were commenced by the British in 1824, and they took Rangoon on 11 May. The fort and pagoda of Syriam were taken in 1825. After a short armistice, hostilities were renewed, 1 Dec. same year, and pursued until the successive victories of the British led to the cession of Arracan, and to the signature of peace, 24 Feb. 1826. For the events of this war, and of the war in 1831, see India. Pegu was annexed to our Indian empire 30 Dec. 1852. The war ended 20 June, 1853.

Burnett Prizes, to be awarded every 40 years to the authors of the two best essays on "the evidence that there is a Being all powerful, wise, and good, by whom everything exists, etc.," were founded by Mr. Burnett, a Scottish gentleman, who died 1784, bequeathing moneys for the purpose. Various amounts have been paid to Dr. W. L. Brown, to rev. J. B. Sumner, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, 1815; to Rev. R. A. Thompson, and to Dr. J. Tulloch, 1855. The establishment of a Burnett lectureship in Aberdeen by the trustees (the lecturer to be chosen in 1883) was sanctioned Aug. 1880; but opposed by the house of lords, 24 Jan. 1881.

Burnham Beeches (Bucks), the picturesque remains of an ancient forest, were purchased for public use by the corporation of London in 1879.

Burning Alive was inflicted among the Romans, Jews, and other nations, and was countenanced by bulls of the pope; see Witches. Many persons have been burned alive as heretics. Sir William Sawtre, priest of St. Osyth, London, suffered 12 Feb. 1401. In the reign of Mary numbers were burned; see Protestants. Elizabeth Gaunt, an Anabaptist, was burned at Tyburn for treason (concealing rebels under Monmouth), 23 Oct. 1685.

Burning the Dead was practised among the Greeks and Romans, and Homer gives descriptions. It was very general about 1225 B.C., and was revived by Sylla about 78 B.C. It is still practised in parts of the East Indies, and has been advocated in this country by the eminent surgeon, sir Henry Thompson, and others, 1873; see Suttees, Barroes.

Burning-glass and CONCAVE MIRRORS. Their power was known to Archimedes, and it is even asserted that by their aid he burned a fleet in the harbor of Syracuse, 214 B.C. Their powers were increased by Set-talla; Tschirnhausen, 1680; Buffon, 1747; and Parker and others more recently. The following experiments were made about 1800 with Mr. Parker's lens or burning-mirror, which cost 700*l*., and is said to have been the largest ever made. It was sold to capt. Mackenzie, who took it to China, and left it at Pekin.

Green wood takes fire instantaneously; water boils immediately; bones are calcined; and things not capable of melting at once become red-hot, like iron.

Burton Crescent (London). Here Mrs Rachael Samuel, a widow living alone, was murdered in the night 11 Dec. 1878. No robbery. Mary Donovan, a charwoman, was arrested and discharged, 10 Jan. 1879.

Burwell Fire. A number of persons assembled to see a puppet-show in a barn at Burwell, near Newmarket, 8 Sept. 1727. A candle having set fire to a heap of straw, seventy-six individuals perished, and others died of their wounds.

Bury St. Edmund's (Suffolk), named from St. Edmund, king of East Anglia, who was murdered by the Danes on 20 Nov. 870, and buried here, and to whose memory its magnificent abbey was founded. Magna Charta was prepared here by the barons on 20 Nov. 1214. Henry VI. summoned a parliament in Feb. 1447, when Humphry, duke of Gloucester, was imprisoned, and died here, it is supposed by poison. It was almost consumed by fire in 1608, and was desolated by plague in 1636.

Burying Alive. In Beotia, Creon ordered Antigone, the sister of Polynices, to be buried alive, 1225 B.C. The Roman vestals were subjected to it for any levity that excited suspicion of their chastity. The vestals buried alive on a charge of incontinence were Minutia, 337 B.C.; Sextilla, 274 B.C.; Cornelia, A.D. 92. Lord Bacon gives instances of the resurrection of persons who had been buried alive, Duns Scotus being of the number. The two assassins of Capo d'Istria, president of Greece, were sentenced to be immured in brick walls built around them up to their chins, and to be supplied with food in this species of torture until they died, Oct. 1831.

Busaco, or Buzaco (Portugal). Here the British, under lord Wellington, repulsed the French under Massena, 27 Sept. 1810. The latter lost one general and 1000 men killed, two generals and about 3000 men wounded, and several hundred prisoners; the loss of the allies did not exceed 1300; the British retreated to the lines of Torres Vedras, too strong for Massena to force, and the armies remained in sight of each other to the end of the year.

Bushel. This measure was ordered to contain eight gallons of wheat, 12 Hen. VIII. 1520; the legal Winchester bushel was regulated 9 Will. III. 1697; the imperial corn bushel of 2218.192 cubic inches is to the Winchester of 2150.42 as 32 to 31. Regulated by act 5 Geo. IV., June, 1824, which act came into operation 1 Jan. 1826. The same in the United States.

Bushire (on the Persian Gulf), attacked by sea by sir H. Leeke, and by land by gen. Stalker, was taken 10 Dec. 1856. The place proved stronger than was expected, and was bravely defended. Brigadier Stopford and col. Malet were killed in a previous attack on the fort at Reshire, 9 Dec. The loss of the British was four officers killed and one wounded; five men killed and thirty-five wounded.

Bushrangers, Australian highwaymen, formerly escaped convicts. Morgan, a desperate robber and murderer, was surrounded and shot April, 1865. The "Kelly gang" seized and pillaged the town of Jerilderie, New South Wales, 8-10 Feb. 1879. Ned Kelly and some of his gang were captured and taken to Melbourne, 27, 28 June, 1880.

Busta. Lysistratus, the statuary, was the inventor of moulds from which he cast wax figures, 328 B.C.—Pliny. Busts from the face, in plaster of Paris, were first taken by Andrea Verrochi, about A.D. 1466. Smaller busts and statuettes are now accurately produced from larger ones by machinery.

Butchers. Among the Romans there were three classes: the Suarii provided hogs, the Boarii or Pecuarii oxen and sheep, which the Lanii or Carnifices killed. The Butchers' Company in London is ancient, though not incorporated till 1604.

Bute Administration. John, earl of Bute,* tutor of prince George (afterwards George III.), formed an administration in May, 1762, which, after various changes, resigned 8 April, 1763. It was severely attacked by Junius and John Wilkes.

Butter is said to have been used by the Arabs in early times, but not by the Greeks and Romans, who had excellent oil. It is not mentioned as food by Galen, A.D. 130-200. It has long been used by northern nations. Various statutes have passed respecting its package, weight, and sale; the principal of which are the 36th & 38th Geo. III. and 10 Geo. IV. 1829. In Africa, vegetable butter is made from the fruit of the shea tree, and is of richer taste, at Kebba, than any butter made from cow's milk.—Mungo Park. The import duties of 5s. per cwt. on foreign butter (producing, in 1859, 104,587l. on 421,354 cwt.) was repealed in 1860. Butter imported, 1846, 257,385 cwt.; 1856, 513,392 cwt.; 1866, 1,165,081 cwt.; 1870, 1,159,210 cwt.; 1874, 1,619,808 cwt.; 1876, 1,659,492 cwt.; 1877, 1,637,403 cwt.; 1879, 2,045,399 cwt. The export of butter from the United States, during the year ended June 30, 1880, amounted to 31,061,610 lbs., valued at $5,179,071.

Buttons, an early manufacture in England; those covered with cloth were prohibited, to encourage the manufacture of metal buttons, 8 Geo. I. 1721. Buttons largely employed to ornament ladies' dresses, 1873-81.

Buxar, a town in Bengal, near which, on 23 Oct. 1764, major, afterwards sir Hector Monro (with 857 Europeans and 6215 Sepoys) gained a great victory over the troops of the nabob of Oude, etc., 50,000 in number; 6000 of these were killed, and 130 pieces of cannon were taken. The loss of the English was trifling.

Bye Plot, of lord Gray of Wilton and others, to imprison James I., and compel him to grant liberty of worship to Romanists, was suppressed 1603. It was called also the "surprise plot."

By-laws, or BYE-LAWS, private ordinances made by subordinate communities, such as corporations. These laws must not militate against the law of the land. By 5 & 6 Will. IV. 1834, those made by corporate bodies became valid, if not disallowed by the king's council within forty days after their enactment.

Byng, HON. ADMIRAL JOHN, was charged with neglect of duty in an engagement with the enemy off Minorca, 20 May, 1756, condemned for an error of judgment, and shot on board the Monarch at Spithead, 14 March, 1757.

Byron National Memorial. Its erection determined on, at a meeting in London, 16 July, 1875; Mr. Disraeli in the chair. About 3000l. were subscribed. The statue by Richard Claude Belt, placed on a pedestal near Hamilton place, Hyde Park, was uncovered privately by lord Houghton, 24 May, 1880. A marble pedestal was promised by the Greeks.

Byron's Voyage. Commodore Byron left England on his voyage round the globe, 21 June, 1764, and returned 9 May, 1766. He discovered the populous island in the Pacific Ocean which bears his name, 16 Aug. 1765. Though brave and intrepid, such was his general ill-fortune at sea that he was called by the sailors of the fleet "Foulweather Jack."

Byzantium, now Constantinople, and Stamboul, in the ancient Thrace, founded by a colony of Megarians, under Byzas, 667 B.C.; but various dates and persons are given. It was taken successively by the Medes, Athenians, and Spartans. In 340 B.C., in alliance with the Athenians, the Byzantines defeated the fleet of Philip of Macedon. During the wars with Macedon, Syria, etc., it became an ally of the Romans, by whom it was taken, A.D. 73. Rebelling, it was taken after two years' siege, and laid in ruins by Severus in 196. It was refounded by Constantine in 324, and dedicated on 22 May, 330, all the heathen temples being destroyed; and from him it received its name; see Constantinople. BYZANTINE ART flourished from the time of Constantine to about 1204. The BYZANTINE or Eastern empire really commenced in 395, when Theodosius divided the Roman empire; see East. The "Byzantine Historians," from 325 to 1453, were published at Paris, 1645-1711; and at Venice, 1722-33.

C.

Caaba, a sacred black stone, kept in a temple at Mecca, and venerated by the Arabs, long before the Christian era. Its guardians, the tribe of Koreish, were defeated by Mahomet and the worship abolished, 623-630.

Cabal. In English history the term has been applied to the cabinet of Charles II. 1667-74; the word Cabal being formed from the initials of their names: sir Thomas, afterwards lord Clifford (C); the lord Ashley (A), (afterwards earl of Shaftesbury); George Villiers, duke of Buckingham (B); Henry, lord Arlington (A); and John, duke of Lauderdale (L).

Cabala, a Jewish system of philosophy or theosophy, deriving its name from a Hebrew word signifying reception or tradition, said to have been given by God to Adam, and transmitted from father to son by his descendants. It is said to have been lost at the Babylonian captivity (587 B.C.), but to have been revealed again to Ezra. Its supporters assert that the cabalistic book "Sohar," or "Splendour," a mystic commentary on the Pentateuch, was first committed to writing by Simon

Ben-Jochai, A.D. 72-110. The true date of the books containing the cabala is now considered to range from the ninth to the fourteenth century, and their origin to be the mingling of Talmudism with the Greek philosophy termed Neo-Platonism. Some of their dogmas are akin to Christian tenets, such as the trinity, the incarnation, etc. The cabala exercised much influence upon the mental development of the Jews, and even captivated the greatest thinkers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Cabbages. Some new kinds were brought to England from Holland about 1510, it is said by sir Arthur Ashley of Dorset, and introduced into Scotland by Cromwell's soldiers.

Cabeira (Asia Minor). Here Mithridates, king of Pontus, was defeated by Lucullus, 71 B.C.

Cabinet Council. In the U. S. government the heads of the different departments compose a council, which is known as a cabinet. They are appointed by the president, and hold office at his will, and are, under him, the executive officers of the general government. The secretaries of state, treasury, war, navy, interior, and the postmaster-general and attorney-general, form the cabinet. There were councils in England as early as the reign of Ina, king of the West Saxons, 690; Offa, king of the Mercians, 758; and in other reigns of the Hephtharchy. State councils are referred to Alfred the Great. —Spelman; see Administrations. CABINET NOIR, or "Dark Closet," the chamber in which letters intrusted to the French post were opened for state purposes. The system, which began with Louis XI., was organized under Louis XV.; and is said to have been discontinued in 1868.

Cables. A machine was invented in 1792 for making them, by which human labor was reduced nine tenths. Chain cables were introduced into the British navy about 1812; directions for testing them enacted, 1864 and 1874.

Cabochiens, an armed Burgundian faction, including 500 butchers, named from their leader Simonet Cabochie, a skinner, 1412. They ruled Paris with violence, and constrained the doctors of the Sorbonne to become their allies and the dauphin to recognize them as the "White Floods," and reformers. They were exterminated by the citizens in 1418.

Cabriolets (ruigo Cabs), one-horsed vehicles, were introduced into the streets of London in 1822, when the number plying was twelve. In 1831 they had increased to 165, and then the licenses were thrown open. The number in 1862 running in the metropolis exceeded 6000 (of which about 1800 only plied on Sunday). Previous to throwing open the trade, the number of hackney-carriages was limited to 1200, when there were few omnibuses; see Hackney-coaches.

Cab Strike.—On 28 June, 1853, an act (called Mr. Fitz-Roy's act) was passed for "the better regulation of metropolitan stage and hackney carriages, and for prohibiting the use of advertising vehicles," by which the cab fares were reduced to 6d. a mile. It came into operation 11 July, and on the 27th a general strike of the London cabmen took place. Much inconvenience was felt, and every kind of vehicle was employed to supply the deficiency. Some alterations having been made in the act, the cabs reappeared on the stands on the 30th.

A London General Cab Company published its prospectus, professing a reformed system. July, 1862
Cabs running in London: in 1855, 3296; in 1867, 6149; in 1874, 7844; in 1877, about 8000.

Cab Tragedy.—S. H. Hunt, a servant of Butler and McCulloch's, seedsmen, Covent Garden, London, poisoned his wife and children in a cab, on 7 Nov. 1863; and himself on 9 Nov., at his own house, just before his apprehension.

The cabmen in Paris strike against a company; above 3000 vehicles stopped, 16 June; fierce attack on men who give in; strike subsides. 23 June, 1865

Second Cab Strike.—Metropolitan Streets Act, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 17 (passed 20 Aug.), required hackney-carriages to carry lamps; and changed lowest fare from 6d. to 1s. The cab proprietors and drivers struck at 4 p.m., 3 Dec.; but, by the intervention of lord Elcho, an arrangement was made with Mr. Gathorne Hardy, the home secretary, and the strike ceased. 4 Dec. 1867

Third Cab Strike to compel railway companies to discontinue privileged cabs; unsuccessful. 5-9 Sept. 1868

Caddee, or LEAGUE OF GOD'S HOUSE, the league of independence in Switzerland, formed by the Grisons to resist domestic tyranny, 1400 to 1419. A second league of the Grisons was called the Grise or Gray League (Graubündten), 1424. A third league, the League of Ten Jurisdictions, was formed in 1436; see Grisons. They united in 1471.

Cade's Insurrection. In May, 1450, Jack Cade, an Irishman, assumed the name of Mortimer, and headed about 20,000 Kentish men, who armed "to punish evil ministers, and procure a redress of grievances." He defeated and slew sir Humphry Stafford, at Sevenoaks, 27 June; entered London in triumph, and beheaded the lord treasurer, lord Saye, and several other persons of consequence, 3 July. When the insurgents lost ground, a general pardon was proclaimed, and Cade, deserted by his followers, fled. A reward having been offered for his apprehension, he was discovered, and, refusing to surrender, was slain by Alexander Iden, sheriff of Kent, 11 July.

Cadmium, a metal, discovered by Stromeyer and Hermann in 1818.

Cæcilian Society, instituted in London in 1785, for the performance of sacred music, especially Handel's. At first it met at private houses, afterwards at various city company halls, and finally at Albion Hall, Moorfields, till its dissolution in 1861. Mr. Z. W. Vincent, the first conductor, held the office for upwards of thirty years. Out of this society, which was the predecessor of the Sacred Harmonic Society, came many eminent professional musicians.

Caen (N. France), a place of importance before 912, when it became the capital of the possessions of the Normans, under whom it flourished. It was taken by the English in 1346 and 1417; but was finally recovered by the French 1 July, 1450. Here were buried William the Conqueror (1087) and his queen (1083).

Caerleon, Monmouthshire, a Roman station, and made the seat of an archbishopric by Dubritius. His disciple and successor, St. David (522), removed it to Menevia, now St. David's, 577.

Caernarvon (N. Wales). In the castle (founded in 1282) Edward II. was born, 25 April, 1284; and the town was then chartered by Edward I. The town suffered by the civil war of Charles, but was finally retained for the parliament.

* The case of Alice O'Neal, an Irishwoman, who survived the section, which was performed by a female, is authenticated by Dr. Gabriel King, of Armagh, and surgeon Duncan Stewart of Dunganon. In Jan. 1847, the operation was performed in St. Bartholomew's hospital, London, on a young woman of diminutive stature, under the influence of ether; but she died the next day. On 9 Dec. 1860, a similar operation was successfully performed by Dr. James Edmunds at Bethnal Green. On the continent the operation is said to have been more frequent and more successful. Cooper's "Surgical Dictionary" (ed. 1861) contains a table, which, out of 2009 cases, gives a mortality of 55.4 per cent. of the mothers and 29.45 per cent. of the children.

Calendar, or Spanish Era, is reckoned from 1 Jan. 38 A.C., being the year following the conquest of Spain by Augustus. It was much used in Africa, Spain, and the south of France; but by a synod held in 1180 its use was abolished in all the churches dependent on Barcelona. Pedro IV. of Aragon abolished the use of it in his dominions in 1350. John of Castile did the same in 1383. It was used in Portugal till 1415, if not till 1422. The months and days of this era are identical with the Julian calendar; and to turn the time into that of our era, subtract thirty-eight from the year; but if before the Christian era, subtract thirty-nine.

Caesium (Latin, bluish), a rare alkaline metal, found in some mineral waters by Bunsen in 1861, by means of the "spectrum analysis" (which see).

Caffeine, an alkaline body, discovered in coffee by Berge in 1820, and in tea (and named theine) by Oudry in 1827. The identity of the two was proved by Jobst and Mulder in 1828.

Calabria (the ancient Messapia of S.E. Italy) was conquered by the Romans 266 A.C. It formed part of the kingdom of the Ostrogoths under Theodoric, A.D. 493; was reconquered (for the Eastern empire) by Belisarius, 536; subdued by the Lombards and joined to the duchy of Benevento, 572. After various changes, it was conquered by Robert Guiscard, the Norman, 1058, who obtained the title of duke of Calabria, and eventually that of king of Naples; see Naples.

Calais (N.W. France), fortified by Baldwin IV., count of Flanders, 997; taken by Edward III. after a year's siege, 4 Aug. 1347. It was retaken by the duke of Guise, in the reign of Mary, 7 Jan. 1558, and its loss so deeply touched the queen's heart as to cause some to say it occasioned her death, which occurred soon afterwards, 17 Nov. same year. "When I am dead," said the queen, "Calais will be found written on my heart." It was taken by the Spaniards, April, 1596; restored, 1598. Here Louis XVIII. landed after his long exile from France, April, 1814; see Tunisia.

Calcinum, the metallic base of lime, was discovered at the Royal Institution, London, by Humphry Davy, in 1808.

Calculating-machines. To avoid errors in computing and printing logarithms and tables of figures, machines to calculate and print have been devised. Pascal, when nineteen years of age, invented one (about 1650). The construction of Mr. C. Babbage's differential machine was commenced at the expense of government in 1821, and continued till 1833, when the work was suspended after an expenditure of above 15,000*l*. The portion completed was placed in the library of King's College, London, it is now at South Kensington. Professor Clifford, in his lecture at the Royal Institution, 24 May, 1872, stated that Babbage expended 20,000*l*. upon his machines, and that the analytical machine was nearly finished and would eventually be much used. In 1857 Messrs. E. and G. Scheutz, two Swedish engineers, published in London specimen tables, calculated and printed by machinery constructed between 1837 and 1843, after a study of the account of Mr. Babbage's machine. Messrs. Scheutz brought their machine to England in 1854. It was bought for 1000*l*. by Mr. J. F. Hathlone, an American merchant, to be presented to Dudley observatory, in his own city, Albany. In 1857 Messrs. Scheutz were engaged to make one for the British government, which is now completed. Mr. Wiberg's machine, exhibited at Paris, Feb. 1863, was much commended. Tables constructed by means of Scheutz's machine, and edited by Dr. W. Farre, were published by the government in 1864. The arithmometer, patented by M. Thomas (de Colmar) in 1822 (?), exhibited at the International exhibitions, 1855 and 1862, is said to be in use in insurance offices. George B. Grant described a simpler machine in the American Journal of Science, Oct. 1874.

Caledonia (now Scotland). The name is supposed by some to be derived from Gael, or Gaelmen or Gadel-dine, corrupted by the Romans. Tacitus, who died 99, distinguishes this portion of Britain by the appellation of Caledonia. Venerable Bede says that it retained this name until 258, when it was invaded by a tribe from Ireland and called Scotia. The ancient inhabitants appear to have been the Caledonians and Picts, tribes of the Celts, who passed over from the opposite coast of Gaul. About the beginning of the fourth century of the Christian era they were invaded (as stated by some authorities) by the Scythians or Scythians (since called Scots), who, having driven the Picts into the north, settled in the Lowlands, and gave their name to the whole country; see Scotland.

Caledonian Canal, from the North Sea to the Atlantic Ocean. The act for its construction received the royal assent 27 July, 1803; and the works were commenced same year. The nautical intercourse between the western ports of Great Britain and those also of Ireland to the North Sea and Baltic is shortened in some instances 800, and in others 1000 miles. A sum exceeding a million sterling was granted by parliament from time to time; and safe navigation for ships was opened 1 Nov. 1822. It has not been successful commercially.

Calendar, see Jewish Era and Calendar. The Roman calendar was introduced by Romulus, who divided the year into ten months, comprising 304 days, 738 n.c.
 This year was of fifty days' less duration than the lunar year, and of sixty-one less than the solar year, and its commencement did not correspond with any fixed season. Numa Pompilius, 713 n.c., added two months; and Julius Cesar, 45 n.c., to make it more correct, fixed the solar year at 365 days 6 hours, every fourth year being bissextile, or leap-year; see Leap-year. This calendar was defective, as the solar year consists of 365 days, 5 hours, 49 minutes, and not of 365 days 6 hours. This difference, in the sixteenth century, amounted to 10 entire days, the vernal equinox falling on 11th instead of 21st March. To obviate this error, pope Gregory XIII.
 ordained, in 1582, that that year should consist of 355 days only (5 Oct. became 15 Oct.); and, to prevent further irregularity, it was determined that a year ending a century should not be bissextile, with the exception of that ending each fourth century; thus 1700 and 1800 have not been bissextile, nor will 1900 be so; but the year 2000 will be a leap-year. In this manner three days are retrenched in 400 years, because the lapse of eleven minutes makes three days in about that period.
 The year of the calendar is thus made as nearly as possible to correspond with the true solar year, and future errors of chronology are avoided; see New Style and French Revolutionary Calendar.

Comte, in his "Système de Politique Positive" (instituting the "Religion of Humanity"), published a calendar of 13 months, dedicated successively to Moses, Homer, Aristotle, Archimedes, Cesar, Paul, Charlemagne, Dante, Gutenberg, Shakespeare, Descartes, Frederic, and Bichat; an eminent person was commemorated every day.

Calender, a machine used in glazing various kinds of cloth, was introduced into England by the Huguenots, who were driven by persecution from France, Holland, and the Netherlands to these countries, about 1685.—
Anderson.

Calends were the first days of the Roman months.
 The Nones of March, May, July, and Oct. fell on the 7th, and their Ides on the 15th. The other months had the Nones on the 5th and the Ides on the 13th. As the Greeks had no Calends, "on the Greek Calends," ad Græcus Calendas, meant never.

Calico, cotton cloth, named from Calicut, a city of India, visited by the Portuguese in 1498. Calico was first brought to England by the East India Company in 1631. Calico-printing and the Dutch loom-engine were first used in 1676, when a Frenchman established a factory at Richmond, near London.—Anderson. Calicoes were prohibited to be printed or worn in 1700; and again in 1721 a penalty of 5*l.* was laid on the wearer, and 20*l.* on the seller of calico. In 1831, by the exertions of Mr.

 Poulett Thompson, afterwards lord Sydenham, and others, the consolidated duty of 8*d.* on the square yard of printed calico was taken off. Since 1834, the manufacture has been greatly increased by the applications of science. Cylinders for printing are now engraved by galvanism, and many new dyes have been introduced by the discoveries of Liebig, Hofmann, Perkin, etc.; see Cotton and Dyeing.

Cali Yuga, the Hindoo era of the Deluge, dates from 3101 n.c. (according to some, 3102), and begins with the entrance of the sun into the Hindoo sign Aswin, now on 11 April, n.s. In 1600 the year began on 7
 April, n.s., from which it has now advanced four days, and from the precession of the equinoxes, is still advancing at the rate of a day in sixty years. The number produced by subtracting 3102 from any given year of the Cali Yuga era will be the Christian year in which the given year begins.

Calicut (now Kolikod), S.W. India, the first Indian port visited by Vasco da Gama, 20 May, 1498. It was seized by Hyder Ali, 1766, taken by the English, 1782; destroyed by Tippoo Saib, 1789; ceded to the English, 1792.

California (from the Spanish Caliente Fornalla, hot furnace, in allusion to the climate), was discovered by Cortez in 1537; others say by Cabrillo in 1542; and visited by sir Francis Drake, who named it New Albion, in 1579. California was a province of Mexico, after the revolution in 1824. Its coasts were explored by the United States naval expedition under commander Wilkes in 1841-3, co-operating with a land expedition under capt. Fremont. It was again explored by Fremont in 1845-6. In July, 1846, San Francisco was taken possession of by com. Montgomery. During that summer a military government was established there by American commanders on the coast. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (which see) secured California to the United States in 1848. A state constitution was framed by a convention held at Monterey in Aug. 1849; in Dec. it was adopted by a popular vote, and P. H. Burnett was chosen the first governor. California was admitted into the Union in Sept. 1850. It is advancing rapidly in wealth and importance. The population in 1856 was 506,067; in 1880, 864,686.

Caliper Compass, whereby the bore of cannon, vented by an artificer of Nuremberg in 1540.

Caliph (Arabic), Vicar, or Lieutenant, the title assumed by the sopher of Persia, as successor of Ali, and, since 1517, by the sultan of Turkey, as successor of Mahomet and sovereign of Mecca and Medina. The caliphate began with Abubeker, the father of the prophet's second wife. The Fatimite caliphs ruled in Egypt, 908-1171.

Calippic Period, invented by Calippus, about 380 B.C., to correct the Metonic cycle, consists of four cycles, or of seventy-six years, at the expiration of which he incorrectly imagined the new and full moons return to the same day of the solar year. This period began about the end of June, third year or 112th Olympiad, year of Rome 424, and 830 A.C.

Calixtina. 1. A sect derived from the Humites, about 1420 demanded the cup (Greek, kaluk) in the Lord's supper. They were also called Utraquists, as partaking of both elements. They were reconciled to the Roman church at the council of Basle, 1433. 2. The followers of George Calixtus, a Lutheran, who died in 1656. He wrote against the celibacy of the priesthood, and proposed a reunion of Catholics and Protestants based on the Apostles' Creed.

Callao (Peru). After an earthquake, the sea retired from the shore, and returned in mountainous waves, which destroyed the city in 1687, and on 28 Oct. 1746. The attempt of the Spanish admiral Nuñez to bombard Callao, 2 May, 1866, was defeated by the Peruvians; blockaded by Chileans, April, 1890; see Chili.

Calligraphy (beautiful writing). Calligraphes is said to have written an elegant dactyl on a scutum med. 472 A.C. In the sixteenth century Peter Bales wrote the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and Decalogue, two short Latin prayers, his own name, motto, day of the month, year of our Lord, and of the reign of queen Elizabeth (to whom he presented them at Hampton Court), all within the circle of a silver penny, encased in a ring and border of gold, and covered with crystal, so accurately done as to be plainly legible.—Hobinshed.

Calmar, UNION OF. The treaty whereby Denmark, Sweden, and Norway were united under one sovereign, Margaret, queen of Sweden and Norway, "the Semiramis of the North," June, 1397; see Sweden. The union was dissolved by Gustavus Vasa in 1523.

Calmuks, see Tartary.

Calomel ("beautiful black"), a compound of mercury, sulphuric acid, and chloride of sodium, first mentioned by Crolius early in the seventeenth century. The first directions given for its preparation were by Beguin in 1608.

Calorescence. In Jan. 1865, professor Tyndall rendered the ultra-red rays of the spectrum of the electric light visible by causing a focus of them to impinge on a plate of platinum, which they raised to a white heat. He termed the phenomenon Calorescence; see Fluorescence.

Caloric, see Heat.

Calotype Process (from the Greek kalós, beautiful), by which negative photographs are produced on paper, is the invention of Mr. Henry Fox Talbot, about 1840. Also called TALBOTYPE; see Photography.

Caloyers (meaning good old men). The monks of the Greek church, of the order of St. Basil. Their most celebrated monastery in Asia is at Mount Sinai, endowed by Justinian (died 545); the European one is at Mount Athos.

Calpoe, India. Sir Hugh Rose defeated the mutineers here, and took the town, 22, 23 May, 1858.

Calvary, MOUNT, the place where the Redeemer suffered death, 5 April, A.D. 30 (Hales, 31; Clinton, 29; others, 38); see Luke xxiii. 33. Adrian, at the time of his persecution of the Christians, erected a temple of Jupiter on Mount Calvary, and a temple of Adonis on the manger at Bethlehem, 142. The emperor Helena built a church here about 326; see Holy Places.

Calves' Head Club, noblemen and gentlemen, who are said to have exposed raw calves' heads at the windows of a tavern, 30 Jan. 1735, the anniversary of the execution of Charles I. An incensed mob was dispersed, and the club was suppressed.

Calvi (Cortica). The British forces besieged the fortress of Calvi, 12 June, 1794. After fifty-nine days, it surrendered on 10 Aug. It surrendered to the French in 1796.

Calvinists, named after John Calvin (or Chauvin), who was born at Noyon, in Picardy, 10 July, 1509. Adopting the reformed doctrine, he fled to Angoulême, where he composed his "Institutio Christiane Religionis" in 1533; published in 1536. He retired to Basle, and settled in Geneva, where he died, 27 May, 1564. He was instrumental in burning Servetus for denying the Trinity in 1553. A formal separation between the Calvinists and Lutherans took place after the conference of Poissy in 1561, where the former expressly rejected the tenth and other articles of the Confession of Augsburg, and took the name of Calvinists. In France (see Huguenots) they took up arms against their persecutors. Henry IV., originally a Calvinist, on becoming king, secured their liberty by the Edict of Nantes in 1598 (which see). Calvinistic doctrines appear in the articles of the church of England and in the confession of the church of Scotland, and are held by many Protestant sects.

Camaldulæ, or CAMALDULITÆ, a religious order founded at Camaldoli, near Florence, by Romuald about 1022.

Cambium Regia, see Royal Exchange.

Cambodia (central Asia), a kingdom divided between the emperor of Annam and the king of Siam, 1820.

Cambray (N. France), the ancient Camaracum, was in the middle ages the capital of a prince bishop subject to the emperor. It gives its name to cambric. Councils held here 1064, 1308, 1383, 1565.

Cambridge (Mass.), the seat of Harvard University and a principal centre of American literary activity. The town was founded by governor Winthrop in 1630, and called Newtown. In 1636 the general court of the colony appropriated 400*l.* to establish a school of high grade at Cambridge, and in 1638 the Rev. John Harvard further endowed this school, which took the name of Harvard College. The institution is the oldest and one of the most celebrated universities in the United States. During the British occupation of Boston the American army occupied Cambridge, and there Washington assumed command in 1775. The city of Cambridge was incorporated in 1846. Population in 1880, 52,740.

Cambuskenneth, near Stirling (central Scotland). Here Wallace defeated the English under Warrenne and Cressingham, 10 Sept. 1297.

The abbey, one of the richest in Scotland, was founded by king David I. in 1147; was spoiled and the fabric nearly destroyed by the reformers in 1650.

Camden (S. C.). Here, 16 Aug. 1780, lord Cornwallis defeated the revolted Americans, under Gates. At a second battle (also called Hobkirk's Hill), between gen. Greene and lord Rawdon, the Americans were again defeated, 25 April, 1781. Camden was evacuated and burned by the British, 13 May, 1781.

Camden Society, established 1838, publishes British historical documents. 134 volumes had been issued July, 1881.

Camden Town, N. W. London, begun by land let for building 1400 houses by earl Camden in 1791; received his name a few years after.

Camel, DAY OF THE, 4 Nov. 656 (according to some, 658 or 659), when Talha and Zobeir, rebel Arab chiefs, were defeated and slain by the caliph Ali. Ayesha, Mahomet's widow, friend of the chiefs, was present in a litter, on a camel; hence the name.

Camera-lucida, invented by Dr. Hooke about 1674; another by Dr. Wollaston in 1807.

Camera-obscura, or DARK CHAMBER, constructed, it is said, by Roger Bacon in 1297; improved by Baptista Porta, about 1500; and remodelled by sir Isaac Newton. By the invention of M. Daguerre, in 1839, the pictures of the camera are fixed; see Photography.

Cameron's Act, Dr., see Debtors, 1880.

Cameronians, a name frequently given to the Reformed Presbyterian church of Scotland, the descendants of the Covenanters of the seventeenth century, the established church, 1638-50.* Charles II. signed the League and Covenant in 1650, in hopes of recovering his kingdoms, but renounced it in 1661, and revived episcopacy. A revolt ensued in 1666, when many Covenanters were slain in battle (in the Pentland hills, etc.); and many, refusing to take the oaths required, and declining to accept the king's indulgence, died on the scaffold, after undergoing cruel tortures. The name Cameronian is derived from: Richard Cameron, one of their ministers, who was killed in a skirmish in 1680. On 22 June in that year he and others issued at Sanquathar a declaration for religious liberty. The bi-centenary was kept in 1880. In 1689 they raised a body of soldiers to support William III., who enrolled them under the command of lord Angus, as the 26th regiment, since so famous. In 1712 they renewed their public covenants, and are described in one of their tracts as "the suffering anti-popish, and anti-prelatical, anti-erastian, true Presbyterian church of Scotland." They have now between thirty and forty congregations in Scotland.—The 79th regiment (Cameron Highlanders), raised in 1793 by Allan Cameron, has no connection with the Cameronians.

* They were frequently called hill-men or mountain men, and society people (from the places and modes of worship to which they were frequently reduced); and McMillanites, from John McMillan, their first minister, after their secession from the church of Scotland on account of its subserviency to the English government, and its declining from its original rigid principles. They assumed the name of the "Reformed Presbyterian Church" on May 25, 1876, and soon after united with the Free Church of Scotland.

Camisards (from chemise, Latin camisia, a shirt, which they frequently wore over their dress in night attacks), a name given to the French Protestants in the neighborhood of the Cévennes (mountain-chains in S. France), who, after enduring much severe persecution in consequence of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, 22 Oct. 1685, took up arms in July, 1702, to rescue some imprisoned brethren. They revenged the cruelties of their enemies, and maintained an obstinate resistance against the royalist armies commanded by marshal Montrevel and other distinguished generals till 1705, when the insurrection was suppressed by marshal Villars. After futile conciliatory efforts, several of the heroic leaders suffered death rather than surrender. Cavalier, an able general, unable to carry out a treaty made with Villars, seceded in 1704, entered the British service, and died governor of Jersey, 1740.

Camlet, formerly made of silk and camel's hair, but now of wool, hair, and silk. Oriental camlet first came here from Portuguese India in 1660.—Anderson.

Camorra, a secret society of plunderers and ratteners, exacting money from the shopkeepers and traders, in Naples (said to have originated from the extreme destitution of the lower classes); tolerated under the Bourbons; checked by the king of Italy; about 80 Camorristi seized and transported, Sept.-Oct. 1874. Many Camorristi seized in the markets at Naples, 30 Aug. and 1 Sept. et seq. 1877.

Camp. The Hebrew encampment was first laid out by divine direction, 1490 B.C. (Numb. ii.). The Romans and Gauls had intrenched camps in open plains; and vestiges of such exist to this day in England and Scotland. A camp was formed in Hyde Park in 1745 and 1814; see Chobham, Aldershot, and Kildare.

Campagna, near Rome. Its drainage and planting were authorized by the Italian senate, 31 May, 1878.

Campania (S. Italy), was occupied by Hannibal and various cities declared in his favor 216 B.C.; conquered by the Romans, 213. Its capital was Capua (which see).

Campbell's Acts, introduced by John Campbell, lord chancellor. 1. Against libels and slanders, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96 (1843), and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 75 (1845). 2. To compel railway companies to make compensation for injuries by culpable accidents, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 (1846). 3. Against obscene publications, prints, etc., 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83 (1857). In accordance with the second act, the family of a gentleman killed through the breaking of a rail, obtained a verdict for 13,000*l.* from the Great Northern Railway Company. On appeal the sum was reduced.

Campbellites, or Rowites, a name given to the followers of the rev. John McLeod Campbell, minister of Row, Dumbartonshire, who, on 24 May, 1831, was deposed by the general assembly of the church of Scotland for teaching the universality of the atonement, and other doctrines contrary to the church's standard. Dr. Campbell established a congregation in Glasgow in 1833. The "Disciples of Christ" (which see) are also sometimes termed Campbellites.

Campeachy Bay (Yucatan, Central America), discovered about 1517, and settled by Spaniards in 1540; taken by the English in 1659, by the buccaners in 1678, and by the freebooters of St. Domingo in 1685. These last burned the town and blew up the citadel. The English logwood-cutters made their settlement here about 1662.

BRITISH CANALS.

The first was by Henry I., when the Trent was joined to the Witham, 1134.
 Francis Bawley in 1656, and Andrew Yarranton in 1657, he vain strongly urged improvement in internal navigation.
 In England there are said to be 2800 miles of canals, and 2600 miles of rivers taking the length of those only that are navigable - total, 5400 miles. (Mr Porter, in 1861, says 6000 miles.)
 In Ireland there are 300 miles of canals, 150 of navigable rivers, and 80 miles of the Shannon navigable below Limerick, in all, 510 miles. - Williams.
 The prosperity of canals, for a time largely checked by the formation of railways, is now greatly revived, and railways are connected with them (1875).

Candlemas-day, 2 Feb., is kept in the church in memory of the purification of the Virgin, who presented the infant Jesus in the Temple. From the number of candles lit (it is said in memory of Simeon's song, Luke ii. 32, "a light to lighten the Gentiles," etc.), this festival was called Candlemas, as well as the Purification. Its origin is ascribed by Bede to pope Gelasius in the fifth century. The practice of lighting the churches was forbidden by order of council, 2 Edw. VI. 1548; but is still continued in the church of Rome. Candlemas is a Scotch quarter-day.

Candles. The Roman candles were composed of string surrounded by wax, or dipped in pitch. Splinters of wood fattened were used for light among the lower classes in England, about 1300. Wax candles were little used, and dipped candles were usually burned. The Wax-chandlers' Company was incorporated 1484. Mould-candles are said to be the invention of the sieur Le Brez, of Paris. Spermaceti candles are of modern manufacture. The Chinese make candles from wax obtained from the candleberry-tree (Myrica cerifera). The duty upon candles made in England, imposed in 1709, amounted to about 500,000*l.* annually, when it was repealed in 1831. Very great improvements in the manufacture of candles are due to the researches on oils and fats carried on by "the father of the fatty acids," Chevreul, since 1811, and published in 1823. At Price's manufactory at Lambeth, the principles involved in many patents are carried into execution; including those of Gwynne (1840), Jones and Price (1842), and Wilson in 1844, for candles which require no snuffing (termed composite). Palm and cocoa-nut oils are now extensively used. In 1860, at the Belmont works, 900 persons were employed, and in winter 100 tons (7000*l.* worth) of candles are manufactured weekly. Candles are manufactured at Belmont from the mineral oil of tar (paraffine) brought from Rangoon in the Burmese empire, and from Trinidad. This substance was first discovered in petroleum by Buckner in 1820; it was discovered as a product of the distillation of wood by Reichenbach in 1830. Paraffine from petroleum is now extensively used in the manufacture of candles. In 1870 the manufacture of candles from a mineral substance named ozokerit began. Electric candles of Jablochkoff and Jamin, see under Electricity.

Candlesticks (or lamp-stands) with seven branches were regarded as emblematical of the priest's office, and were engraven on their seals, cups, and tomba. Reza-leel made "a candlestick of pure gold" for the tabernacle, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xxxvii. 17). Candlesticks were used in Britain in the days of king Edgar, 959 ("silver candelabra and gilt candelabra well and honorably made").

Candy (Ceylon) was taken by a British detachment, 20 Feb. 1803, who capitulated 23 June following, on account of its unhealthiness, and many were treacherously massacred at Colombo, 26 June. The war was renewed in Oct. 1814; the king was made prisoner by gen. Brownrigg, 19 Feb. 1815; and the sovereignty was vested in Great Britain, 2 March, 1815.

Canicular Period, see Dog-star.

Cannæ (Apulia). Here, on 2 Aug. 216 B.C., Hannibal with 50,000 Africans, Gauls, and Spaniards, defeated Paulus Æmilius and Terentius Varro, with 88,000 Romans, of whom 40,000 were slain. The victor sent to Carthage three bushels of rings taken from the Roman knights. The place is now denominated by some "the field of blood."

Cannibal, an Indian term, thought to be a form of Carribal; as Columbus, in 1493, found the Caribs of the West Indies gross cannibals. Anthrophophagi (man-eaters) are mentioned by Homer and Herodotus; and the practice still exists in some of the South Sea islands and other savage countries.

Canning Administration.* The illness of lord Liverpool, Feb., led to the formation of this administration, 24-30 April, 1827. Mr. Canning died 8 Aug. following; see Goderich.

Mons Mrg. a large cannon (above 13 ft. long, 20 in. calibre) in Edinburgh castle, said to have been cast at Mons, in Hainault, in 1486, but more probably forged at Castle Douglas, Galloway, by three brothers named McKim, and presented by them to James II. at the siege of Thrieve castle, 1455. It was removed to London, 1754; but, at the request of sir Walter Scott, restored to Edinburgh, 1829.

A cannon of Mahomet II., dated 1464, presented to the British government by the sultan of Turkey, and placed in the Artillery Museum, Woolwich, 1865.

Mook e. Mardan, an Indian bronze gun of Beejapoor, calibre 23 inches; seventeenth century.

At Ehrenbreitstein castle, opposite Coblenz, on the Rhine, is a cannon, 184 ft. long, 14 ft. in diameter in the bore, and 3 ft. 4 in. in the breech; the ball for it weighs 180 lbs., and its charge of powder 94 lbs. It was made by one Simon.

In Dover castle is a brass gun (called queen Elizabeth's pocket pistol), 24 ft. long, a present from Charles V. to Henry VIII.

Fine specimens in the Tower of London.

A leather cannon fired three times in the King's park, Edinburgh (Phillips) 23 Oct. 1758

The Turkish piece now in St. James's park was taken by the French at Alexandria; but was retaken, and placed in the park March, 1803

Messrs. Horsfall's monster wrought-iron gun was completed in May, 1856, at Liverpool. Its length is 15 ft.

* George Canning was born 11 April, 1770; became foreign secretary in the Portland administration, 1807; fought a duel with lord Castlereagh and resigned, 1809; president of the India Board in 1820; disapproved of the queen's trial, and resigned in 1821; appointed governor-general of India in 1822, but became soon after foreign secretary, and remained such till 1827, when he became premier. He died 8 Aug. same year.

10 in., and its weight 21 tons 17 cwt. 1 qr. 14 lbs. Its cost was 3500*l*. With a charge of 25 lbs. it struck a target 2000 yards distant. It has been since presented to government.

Rifled ordnance committee appointed. 20 Aug. 1858

Recently great improvements have been made in the construction of cannon by Messrs. Whitworth, Mallet, Armstrong, Dahlgren, and others. Mr. Wm. G. Armstrong knighted. 18 Feb. 1859

He had been working for four years on gun-making, and had succeeded in producing "a breech-loading rifled wrought-iron gun of great durability and of extreme lightness, combining a great extent of range and extraordinary accuracy." The range of a 32-lb. gun charged with 5 lbs. of powder was a little more than 5 miles. The accuracy of the Armstrong gun is said, at equal distances, to be fifty-seven times more than that of our common artillery, which it greatly exceeded, also, in destructive effects. The government engaged the services of sir W. Armstrong for ten years (commencing with 1855) for 20,000*l*, as consulting engineer of rifled ordnance. 22 Feb. "

A parliamentary committee on ordnance was appointed 20 Feb., and reported. 23 July, 1860

Sir W. Armstrong resigned his appointment. 5 Feb. 1863

His gun said to be very effective in the attack on the Chinese forts at Taku. 21 Aug. 1860

Mr. Whitworth's guns and rifles greatly commended. 1860-70

An American cannon, weighing 35 tons, stated to be the largest in the world, cast. 1860

Great endeavors made to improve the construction of cannon, to counterbalance the strength given to ships of war by iron plates; trials at Shoeburyness, Essex. 1862

Targets of the thickness of the iron sides of the Warrior, three 5-inch plates of wrought iron bolted together, pierced three times by 156-lb. shot from an Armstrong gun, smooth bore, 300 lbs., muzzle-loaded with charges of 40 lbs. of powder, twice, and once of 50 lbs. 8 April, "

The Horsfall gun, mentioned above, with a charge of 75 lbs. of powder and a shot of 270 lbs., smashed a Warrior target. 16 Sept. "

Mr. Whitworth's shells sent through 54-inch iron plates and woodwork behind. 12 Nov. "

Armstrong's gun, "Big Will," tried and pronounced to be perfect; weight, 22 tons; length, 15 ft.; range with shot weighing 510 lbs., 748 to 4187 yards. 19 Nov. 1863

Clark's target destroyed. 7 July, "

Reed's target tried successfully. 8 Dec. "

The competitive trial between the Armstrong and Whitworth guns began. 1 April, 1864

Iron-plate Commission experiments close. 4 Aug. "

Capt. Palliser, by experiment, has shown that iron shot cast in cold iron moulds, instead of hot sand, is much harder, and equals steel; he also suggested the lining cast-iron guns with wrought-iron exits, which is stated to be successful. "

The competitive trials of Armstrong's and Whitworth's cannon upon the Alfred target-ship at Portsmouth closed. 15 Nov. "

Hercules target, 4 ft. 2 in. thick, 114 inches of iron, resists 300-pounders. June, 1865

National Artillery Association (see Artillery). "

Duel between the Bellerophon, with a 124-ton 9-inch rifled naval service gun with steel bolts (250 lbs.) and powder charge of 48 lbs., and the single gun turret of the Royal Sovereign, by capt. Cowper Coles; the equilibrium of the turret base undisturbed by any amount of pounding. 15 June, 1866

At Shoeburyness, Palliser's chilled metal shot (250 lbs.), by 43 lbs. of powder, in a 9-inch muzzle-loading wrought-iron Woolwich rifle gun, is sent through a target of 8 inches rolled iron, 18 inches teak, and 4-inch iron, and about 20 feet beyond. 13 Sept. "

[His patent is dated 27 May, 1863. Mr. James Nasmyth had previously suggested the use of chilled iron.]

Many experiments made with cannon and targets at Shoeburyness. 1867

The American 15-inch naval gun, with a cast-iron apical shot (453 lbs.), greatly damages an 8-inch target; other experiments at Shoeburyness. 23 July, "

Continued experiments at Shoeburyness; Plymouth model fort, with 15-inch solid shield-plates, tried with 23-ton gun of 12-inch bore, bearing 600 lb. Palliser shot; exterior of fort destroyed; interior intact; the 10-inch English gun shown to be superior to American and Prussian great guns. 16-24 June, 1868

Capt. Moncrieff's protected barbette gun-carriage (in which the recoil is utilized for reloading), tried at Shoeburyness and proved successful. 2 Oct. "

Contest at Shoeburyness: the iron targets of Brown of Sheffield resist the Whitworth guns. 2 March, 1870

Palliser shot said to have failed in the Hercules. 20 Jan. "

"Woolwich Infant," 35 tons; largest gun then ever made; length, 16 ft. 3 in.; formed of a steel tube with coiled breech piece; designed to fire a 700-lb. projectile, with 120-lb. charge; made at Woolwich in 1870; when tried in Dec. 1871, the inner tube cracked; others made. 1872

Duel between the Holspur (with 25-ton 12-inch rifle gun, heaviest afloat, with Palliser's 600 lb. shot, and 85 lbs. of powder) and the Glatton iron-clad, whose turret phases successfully resisted the attack (animals in the larvet uninjured) . . . 6 July, 1873

Canoe. In the Rob Roy, a very lightly constructed canoe, "giving the pleasure of a yacht without the expense," Mr. J. Macgregor, in 1865, travelled about a thousand miles on the rivers and lakes of Europe. His second cruise was on the Baltic. He explored the Suez canal, Nov., and the rivers of Syria, Dec., 1868, and the canals and lakes of Holland in the summer of 1871. The Octoroon (16 feet long, 23 inches broad) crossed the Channel from Boulogne to Dover in 11 hours, 19 Aug. 1867. The Royal Canoe Club founded, 1866. The prince of Wales president, 1876. There are several canoe clubs in the United States, and an annual canoe regatta is held at Lake George, N. Y. The most remarkable canoe voyages made in the United States have been those of Mr. N. H. Bishop, of Lake George, who sailed and paddled, upon inland water-ways, from the Canada line, via New York, Norfolk, and Charleston, to the Gulf of Mexico on one voyage; and on another, down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

New York Canoe Club, first in United States, organized autumn, 1870

Canon, a piece of music in two or more parts, imitating each other. "Non nobis, Domine," by Birde (died 1523), is an early specimen.

Canon of Scripture, see Bible.

Canonical Hours, see Breviary.

Canonization of pious men and martyrs as saints was instituted by pope Leo III., 800.—Talent. Every day in the calendar is now a saint's day. The first canonization by papal authority was of St. Odoricus, Ulric, in 993. Previously canonization was the act of the bishops and people.—Hæc. On 8 June, 1862, the pope canonized 27 Japanese, who had been put to death on 5 Feb. 1597, near Nagasaki, and 25 others, on 29 June, 1867. Among persons canonized by pope Pius IX. in Oct. 1872 was the late queen of Naples.

Canons, APOSTOLICAL, ascribed to the apostles by Bellarmine and Baronius, by others to St. Clement, are certainly of much later date (since 325). The Greek church allows 85, the Latin 50 of them. The first ecumenical canon was promulgated 380.—Usk. Canon-law of the church was introduced into Europe by Gratian about 1140, and into England in 1154.—Stow. See Decretals. The present canons and constitutions of the Church of England, collected from former ordinances, were established in 1603 by the clergy in convocation, and ratified by king James I., 1604. A new body of canons, formed by the convocation in 1640, were declared unlawful by the commons, 16 Dec. 1641.—An intermediate class of religious, between priests and monks, in the eighth century, were termed canons, as living by a rule. Canons in some of our cathedrals and collegiate churches resemble the prebendaries in others. The endowment of canons was facilitated by the Cathedrals Act, 1878.

Canopus, see Alexandria.

Canossa, a castle in Modena. Here the emperor Henry IV. of Germany submitted to penance imposed by his enemy, pope Gregory VII. (Hildebrand), then living at the castle, the residence of the great countess Matilda. Henry was exposed for several days to the inclemency of winter, Jan. 1077, till the pope admitted him, and granted absolution. Matilda greatly increased the temporal power of the papacy by bequeathing to it her large estates, to the injury of her second husband, Guelph, duke of Bavaria. A Canossa monument, near Harzburg, against the papacy, was inaugurated 26 Aug. 1877.

Canterbury (Kent), the Durovernum of the Romans, and capital of Ethelbert, king of Kent, who reigned 560-616. He was converted to Christianity by Augustine, 596, upon whom he bestowed many favors, giving him land for an abbey and cathedral, dedicated to Christ, 602. St. Martin's church is said to be the oldest Saxon church in Britain. The riot at Boughton, near Canterbury, produced by a fanatic called Tom or Thom, who assumed the name of sir William Courtenay, occurred 28-31 May, 1388, see Thomites. The railway to London was completed in 1844.—The ARCHBISHOP is primate and metropolitan of all England, and the first peer in the realm, having precedence of all officers of state, and of all dukes not of the blood royal. Canterbury had formerly jurisdiction over Ireland, and the archbishop was styled a patriarch. This see has yielded to the Church of Rome 18 saints and 9 cardinals, and to the civil state of England 12 lord chancellors and 4 lord treasurers. This see was made superior to York, 1073; see York. The revenue is valued in the king's books at 2816*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*—Beaton. Present income, 15,000*l.* The Cathedral was sacked by the Danes, 1011, and burned down 1067; rebuilt by Lanfranc and Anselm, and the choir, completed by the prior Conrad in 1130, and in which Becket was murdered, 1170, was burned 1174. It was rebuilt by William of Sens (1174-8), and by "Engeliah William," 1178-84. A new nave was built and other parts, 1378-1410. The great central tower was erected by prior Goldstone about 1495. The gorgeous shrine of Becket was stripped at the Reformation, and his bones burned. Here were interred Edward the Black Prince, Henry IV., cardinal Pole, and other distinguished persons. Part of the roof was destroyed by an accidental fire, and the edifice narrowly escaped, 8 Sept. 1872. The clock-tower was nearly on fire, 2 June, 1876; see Huguenots.

Caoutchouc, or INDIA-RUBBER, an elastic resinous substance that exudes by incisions from several trees that grow in South America, Mexico, Africa, and Asia, especially Castilloa Hevea or Siphonia elastica, and Ficus elastica.

Observed at Hayti by Columbus (Herrera)..... 1493
 Described by Torquemada..... 1615
 Discovered by La Condamine in Quito (termed by natives cahout-chou); brought to Europe..... about 1735
 Dr. Priestley said that he had seen "a substance excellently adapted to the purpose of wiping from paper the marks of a black lead pencil." It was sold at the rate of 3*l.* the cubic half-inch..... 1770
 India-rubber cloth was made by Samuel Peal and patented..... 1791
 Caoutchouc discovered in the Malay Archipelago, 1798; in Assam..... 1810
 Vulcanized rubber, formed by combining India-rubber with sulphur, which process removes the susceptibility of the rubber to change under atmospheric temperatures, was patented in America, by Mr. C. Goodyear.. 1839 Invented also by Mr. T. Hancock (of the firm of Mackintosh & Co.), and patented..... 1843
 Mr. Goodyear invented the hard rubber (termed Ebonite) as a substitute for horn and tortoise-shell..... 1849
 A mode of retaining India rubber in its natural fluid state (by applying to it liquid ammonia) patented in England for the inventor, Mr. Henry Lee Norris, of New York..... 1853

(See under Printing.)

African caoutchouc imported into England..... 1856
 Caoutchouc imported in 1850, 7617 cwts.; in 1856, 28,765 cwts.; in 1864, 71,027 cwts.; in 1860, 72,176 cwts.; in 1870, 152,118 cwts.; in 1874, 129,163 cwts.; in 1876, 158,692 cwts.; in 1877, 159,723 cwts.; in 1879, 150,601 cwts.

In 1823, 500 pairs of shoes were imported into Boston. At a later date gum-elastic became the subject of scientific investigation, and many persons commenced experimenting with it. In 1852, the considerable manufacture of it was commenced in Massachusetts by John Haskins and Edwin M. Chaffee, who, in connection with others, started the celebrated Roxbury India-rubber Company, which was shortly after incorporated with a capital of $400,000. For this company Mr. Chaffee invented the famous mammoth machine for spreading rubber without a solvent, the machine itself costing nearly $30,000. Similar machines are now required by all manufacturers of rubber goods. The apparent prosperity of this company induced the starting of factories in Boston, Chelsea, Woburn, and Framingham (Mass.). New York city, Staten Island, and Troy (N. Y.), with capitals of from $50,000 to $500,000. These companies made their goods by dissolving the rubber in camphene and other solvents, then mixing lampblack with it, and while in the form of paste spreading it on cloth from which coats, etc., are made. The goods were then dried in the sun or in a warm room until the solvent evaporated, leaving a coating of rubber. In 1856, the United States imported crude India-rubber to the amount of $97,796, and exported to the amount of $1,083,602 of rubber goods. In 1860, the United States imported crude India-rubber to the amount of 13,981,964 lbs., valued at $9,606,239.

Cape Breton, a large island, E. coast of North America, said to have been discovered by Cabot, 1497; by the English in 1584; taken by the French in 1632, but was afterwards restored; and again taken in 1745, and retaken in 1748. Cape Horn, or HOORN, on the last island of the Fuegian archipelago, the southernmost point of America, was discovered and named by Schouten, 1616, after his birthplace in the Netherlands.

Cape la Hogue, see La Hogue.

Cape St. Vincent (S.W. Portugal). Sir George Rooke, with twenty-three ships of war, and the Turkish fleet, was attacked by Tourville, with 160 ships, off Cape St. Vincent, when twelve English and Dutch men-of-war, and eighty merchantmen, were captured or destroyed by the French, 16 June, 1693.—Sir John Jervis, with the Mediterranean fleet of fifteen sail, defeated the Spanish fleet of twenty-seven ships of the line off this cape, taking four ships and sinking others, 14 Feb. 1797. For this victory sir John was raised to the peerage, as earl St. Vincent. Nelson was engaged in this battle. Near this cape the fleet of dom Pedro, under admiral Charles Napier, captured dom Miguel's fleet, 5 July, 1833.

Cape Verde Islands (N. Atlantic Ocean), belonging to Portugal, were known to the ancients as Gorgades, but not to the moderns till discovered by Antonio de Noli, a Genoese navigator in the service of Portugal, 1446, 1450, or 1460.

Capel Court, see under Stocks.

Capetians, the third race of the kings of France, named from Hugo Capet, count of Paris and Orleans, who seized the throne on the death of Louis V., called the Indolent, 987.—Hénault. The first line of the house of Capet ended with Charles IV., in 1328, when Philip VI. of Valois ascended the throne; see France.

Capillarity (the rising of liquids in small tubes, and the ascent of the sap in plants) is said to have been first observed by Niccolò Aggiunti of Pisa, 1600-35. The theory has been examined by Newton, La Place, and others. Dr. T. Young's theory was put forth in 1805, and Mr. Wertheim's researches in 1857.

Capital, estimated amount (R. Giffen):

Capitol, said to have been so called from a human head (caput) found when digging the foundations of the fortress of Rome, on Mons Tarpeius. Here a temple was built to Jupiter Capitolinus. The foundation was laid by Tarquinius Priscus, 616 B.C.; the building was continued by Servius Tullius; completed by Tarquinius Superbus, but not dedicated till 507 B.C. by the consul Horatius. It was destroyed by lightning 6 July, 183; burned during the civil wars, 83; rebuilt by Sylla, and dedicated again by Lutatius Catulus, 69; again burned, A.D. 69, 80; rebuilt 70, 82; sacked by Genseric, June, 455. The Roman consuls made large donations to this temple, and the emperor Augustus bestowed on it 2000 pounds weight of gold, of which metal the roof was composed: its thresholds were of brass, and its interior was decorated with shields of solid silver. The Capitoline games, instituted 387 B.C. to commemorate the deliverance from the Gauls, were revived by Domitian, A.D. 86. The Campidoglio contains palaces of the senators, erected on the site of the Capitol by Michael Angelo soon after 1546.

Capitularies, the laws of the Frankish kings, commencing with Charlemagne (801). Collections have been published by Baluze (1677) and others.

Capitulations: a name given to the judicial rights granted by treaties to foreign consuls in Turkey. After many years' opposition, the sultan addressed a memorial to the sovereigns of Europe, in June, 1869; and modifications were agreed to, April, 1870. The sultan decided on the abolition of the capitulations in Egypt about July, 1872.

Cappel (Switzerland). Here the reformer Ulric Zwinglius was slain in a conflict between the Catholics and the men of Zurich, 11 Oct. 1531.

Capri (Capræa), an island near Naples, the sumptuous residence of Augustus, and particularly of Tiberius, memorable for the debaucheries he committed during his last years, 27-37. Capri was taken by sir Sydney Smith, 12 May, 1806.

Caps, see Hats.

Caps and Hats. About 1738, Sweden was much distracted by two factions thus named, the former in the interest of the Russians, and the latter in that of the French. They were broken up and the names prohibited by Gustavus III. in 1771, who desired to exclude foreign influence. His assassination by Ankarström, 16 March, 1792, set aside all his plans for the improvement of Sweden.

Capstan, used to work ships' anchors, is said to have been invented, but more probably was only improved, by sir Samuel Morland, who died 30 Dec. 1695.

"Captain," H.M.'s iron-clad turret-ship, capsized during a squall, 12.15 A.M., 7 Sept. 1870. Capt. Hugh Burgoyne, capt. Cowper Coles, who designed the vessel, and 469 persons perished; see under Navy of England. Capua (Naples), capital of Campania, took the part of Hannibal when his army wintered here after the battle of Cannæ, 216 B.C., and it is said became enervated. In 211, when the Romans retook the city, they scourged and beheaded all the surviving senators; the others had poisoned themselves after a banquet previous to the surrender of the city. Only two persons escaped; one woman who had prayed for the success of the Romans, and another who succored some prisoners. During the middle ages Capua was successively subjugated by the Greeks, Saracens, Normans, and Germans. It was restored to Naples in 1424, and captured by Caesar Borgia, 24 July, 1501; was taken by Garibaldi 2 Nov. 1860.

Capuchin Friars, Franciscans, so named from wearing a capuchon, or cowl, hanging down upon their backs. The order was founded by Matthew Baschi about 1525, and established by the pope, Clement VII., 1529. The capuchin confessors of the queen Henrietta, introduced here 1630, were imprisoned by the parliament, 1642.

Car. The invention is ascribed to Erichthonius of Athens, about 1486 B.C. Covered cars (currus arcuati) were used by the Romans. The lectica (a soft-cushioned car), next invented, gave place to the carpentum, a two-wheeled car, with an arched covering, hung with costly cloth. Still later were the carruca, in which the officers of state rode. Triumphal cars, introduced by Tarquin the Elder, were formed like a throne.

Caracas (South America), part of Venezuela, discovered by Columbus 1498. It was reduced by arms, and assigned as property to the Welsers, German merchants, by Charles V.; but for their tyranny they were dispossessed in 1550, and a crown governor appointed. The province declared its independence, 9 May, 1810. In the city Leon de Caracas, on 26 March, 1812, nearly 12,000 persons perished by an earthquake; see Venezuela.

Caraites, see Karaites.

Carberry Hill (S. Scotland). Here lord Hume and the confederate barons dispersed the royal army under Bothwell, and took Mary queen of Scots prisoner, 15 June, 1567. Bothwell fled.

Carbolic Acid (or phenic acid), obtained by the distillation of pit-coal by Laurent, 1846-7, is a powerful antiseptic. It is largely manufactured for medical purposes, and has been advantageously used at Carlisle and Exeter in the deodorization of sewage (1860-1); and as a disinfectant during the prevalence of cholera in London in 1866. It was successfully used for embalming by professor Seely in 1868. Professor F. Crace Calvert, a great manufacturer of this acid, died 1878.

Carbon was shown to be a distinct element by Lavoisier in 1788. He proved the diamond to be its purest form, and converted it into carbonic-acid gas by combustion.

Carbonari (charcoal-burners), a powerful secret society in Italy, which derived its origin, according to some, from the Waldenses, and which became prominent early in the present century. It aimed at the expulsion of foreigners from Italy, and the establishment of civil and religious liberty. In March, 1820, it is said that 650,000 joined the society, and an insurrection soon after broke out in Naples, gen. Pépé taking the command. The king, Ferdinand, made political concessions, but the influence of the allied sovereigns at Laybach led Ferdinand to annul them and suppress the liberal party, Jan. 1821, when the Carbonari were denounced as traitors. The society spread in France, and doubtless hastened the revolutions in 1830 and 1848.

Carbonic-acid Gas, a gaseous compound of carbon and oxygen, found in the air, and a product of combustion, respiration, and fermentation. The Grotto del Cane yields 200,000 lbs. per annum. No animal can breathe this gas. The briskness of champagne, beer, etc., is due to its presence. It was liquefied by atmospheric pressure by Faraday in 1823. On exposing the liquid to the air it becomes solid, resembling snow, through vaporization.

Carchemish, see Hittites.

Cardiff Castle (S. Wales). Here Robert, duke of Normandy, eldest son of William I., is said to have been imprisoned from 1106 till his death, 10 Feb. 1135.

Cardigan Bay, see Fishguard.

Cardinals, princes in the church of Rome, the council of the pope, and the conclave, or "sacred college," at first were the principal priests or incumbents of the parishes in Rome, and said to have been called cardinales in 888. They began to assume the exclusive power of electing the popes about 1179. They first wore the red hat to remind them that they ought to shed their blood for religion, if required, and were declared princes of the church by Innocent IV., 1243 or 1245. Paul II. gave the scarlet habit, 1464; and Urban VIII. the title of Eminence in 1623 or 1630. In 1586 Sixtus V. fixed their number at 70, but there are generally vacancies. In 1860 there were 69 cardinals; in 1861, 59; in Nov. 1867, 52; in 1873, 5 of the order of bishops, 34 priests, 6 deacons; 45 in all. Nine cardinals (viz. a Bonaparte) were made 13 March, 1868.* Eleven new cardinals appointed 12 March, 1877. In 1880 6 cardinal-bishops, 47 priests, 11 deacons; in all 64 (including archbishops Manning, McCloskey, an American, Ledochowski, Edward Howard, and John Henry Newman). Two more appointed 16 Dec. 1880.

Cardross Case, see Tristia, 1861.

Cards, PLAYING. The origin of the game is uncertain. It is said to have been brought to Viterbo in 1379. Cards were illuminated for Charles VI. of France, 1392, then depressed in mind. W. A. Chatto's work on the "History of Playing-cards," published 1848. Piquet and all the early names are French. Cards first taxed in England 1710. 428,000 packs were stamped in 1775, and 966,000 in 1800. In 1825, the duty being then 2s. 6d. per pack, less than 150,000 packs were stamped, but in 1827 the stamp-duty was reduced to 1s., and 310,654 packs paid duty in 1830. Duty was paid on 239,200 packs in the year ending 5 Jan. 1840; and on near 800,000, year ending 5 Jan. 1850. By an act passed in 1802 the duty on cards was reduced to 8d. per pack, and the sellers were required to take out a license. Duty received in 1874, 13,131l.; in 1875, 13,810l.

Caria (Asia Minor), was conquered by Cyrus, 546 B.C.; by Dercyllidas, a Lacedæmonian, 397; his successor Hecatomnus became king, 385 B.C.; for his son Mausolus the Mausoleum was erected (which see). Caria was annexed by the Romans, 129 B.C. It is now part of the Turkish empire.

Caribbee Islands, see West Indies.

Caricatures. Bufalino, an Italian painter, about 1830, drew caricatures and put labels to the mouths of his figures with sentences. The modern caricatures of Gillray, Rowlandson, H. B. (John Doyle¹¹ = 11), Richard Doyle, John Leech, John Tenniel, Thomas Nast, and Du Maurier are justly celebrated. The well-known Punch was first published in 1841. The most eminent writers of fiction of the day and others (Douglas Jerrold, Thackeray, A. Becket, professor E. Forbes, etc.) contributed to it. See Charivari and Punch. Mr. T. Wright published a "History of Caricature," 1865; and "The Life and Works of James Gillray," 1873. Mr. J. Grego published "T. Rowlandson's Works and Life," 1880. Mr. James Parton's "Caricature and other Comic Art in All Times and Many Lands" was published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers in 1877.

Carignan, a small town about twelve miles from Sedan, department of Ardennes, N.E. France. At the plain of Douzy, near this place, and the encampment of Vaux, a part of MacMahon's army, retreating before the Germans, turned round and made a stand, 31 Aug. 1870. After a long, severe engagement, in which the same positions were taken and retaken several times, the Germans turned the flank of their enemies, who were compelled to fall back upon Sedan, where they were finally overcome, 1 Sept.

* English Cardinals: Henry Stuart, created 1747; Charles Erskine, 1801; Thomas Weld, 1830; Charles Acton, 1859; Nicholas Wiseman, 20 Sept. 1850-66; Henry Edward Manning, 1873; Edward Howard, 13 March, 1877; John Henry Newman, 12 May, 1879.

Carillon, see Bells.

Carinthia, a Bavarian duchy, annexed to the territories of the duke of Austria, 1836.

Carisbrooke Castle (Isle of Wight), said to have been a British and Roman fortress, was taken 580 by Certic, founder of the kingdom of the West Saxons. Its Norman character has been ascribed to William Fitz-Osborne, earl of Hereford in William I.'s time. Here Charles I. was imprisoned Nov. 1647 to Nov. 1648; and here his daughter Elizabeth, aged fifteen, died, too probably of a broken heart, 8 Sept. 1650.

Carismians (ferce shepherds living near the Caspian), having been expelled by the Tartars, invaded Syria in 1243. The union of the sultans of Aleppo, Hama, and Damascus was insufficient to stem the torrent, and the Christian military orders were nearly exterminated in a single battle in 1244. In Oct. they took Jerusalem. They were totally defeated in two battles in 1247.

Carlaverock Castle (S. Scotland), taken by Edward I., July, 1300, the subject of a contemporary poem published, with illustrations, by Sir Harris Nicolas in 1831.

Carlisle (Cumberland), a frontier town of England, wherein for many ages a strong garrison was kept. Just below this town the famous Pict's wall began, which crossed the whole island to Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and here also ended the great Roman highway. Of the great church, called St. Mary's, a large part was built by David, king of Scotland, who held Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Northumberland, from the crown of England. The castle, destroyed by the Danes, 875, restored in 1092 by William II., was the prison of Mary queen of Scots in 1568.—Taken by the parliamentary forces in 1645, and by the young Pretender, 15 Nov. 1745; retaken by the duke of Cumberland, 30 Dec. same year. The sea was erected by Henry I. in 1182, and made suffragan to York. The cathedral had been founded a short time previously by Walter, deputy for William Rufus. It was almost ruined by Cromwell, 1648, and partially repaired after the Restoration. It was reopened in 1856 after renovation, costing 15,000l. The see has been held by one lord chancellor and two lord treasurers; it is valued in the king's books at 530l. 4s. 11d. per annum. Present income 4500l.

BISHOPS OF CARLISLE.

1804 Samuel Goodenough, died 12 Aug. 1837.
1827 Hugh Percy, died Feb. 1854.
1856 Hon. R. Montagu Villiers, transl. to Durham, May, 1880.
1880 Hon. Samuel Waldegrave, died 1 Oct. 1888.
1889 Harvey Goodwin; consecrated Jan. 1870.

Carlisle Administration, see Hankins.

Carlota, see Spain, 1830-40 and 1872-3. The legitimists of Europe subscribed to their cause 1873-4. A committee in London supplied arms and money.

Carlovingians, or Carolingians, the second dynasty of the French kings, 752-987. Charles Martel (715-741) and Pepin his son (741-762) were mayors of the palace. The latter became king 762; see France.

Carlow (S.E. Ireland). The castle, erected by John, 1180, surrendered after a desperate siege to Rory Oge O'Moore in 1677; again to the parliamentary forces in 1650. Here the royal troops routed the insurgents 24 May, 1798.

Carlowitz (Austria). Here was concluded a treaty of peace between Turkey and the allies—Germany, Russia, Poland, and Venice—23 Jan. 1699, in consequence of the great defeat of the Turks by prince Eugene at Zenta, 11 Sept. 1697, by which Hungary was finally secured to Austria.

Carlsbad (or Charles's Bath), in Bohemia, the celebrated springs, said to have been discovered by the emperor Charles IV. in 1370. On 1 Aug. 1819, a congress was held here, when the great powers decreed measures to repress the liberal press, etc.

Carlsruhe, capital of Baden, built by margrave Charles William, 1715. A revolution here was suppressed by Prussian aid, June, 1849, and the grand-duke returned 18 Aug.

Carlton Club, Pall Mall (Conservative), established by the duke of Wellington and others, 1831-2; present house opened 1855.

Carmagnole, a Piedmontese song and dance, written about Aug. 1792; popular in France during the reign of terror, 1793-4. The chorus was "Dansons la Carmagnole: vive le son du canon!"

Carmathians, a Mahometan sect. Carmath, a Shiite, about 890, assumed the title of "the guide, the director," etc., including that of the representative of Mahomet, St. John the Baptist, and the angel Gabriel. His followers subdued Bahrein in 900, and devastated the East. Dissensions arose among themselves, and their power soon passed away.

Carmelites, or WHITE FRIARS, of Mount Carmel, one of the four orders of mendicants with austere rules, founded by Berthold about 1156, and settled in France in 1252.—Hennault. Their rules were modified about 1540. They claimed succession from Elijah. They had numerous monasteries in England, and a precinct in London without the Temple, west of Blackfriars, is called Whitefriars to this day, after a community of their order founded there in 1245. A Carmelite church at Kensington was founded by archbishop Manning, July, 1865. The Carmelites, as well as other orders, were expelled from their houses in France in Oct. 1880.

Carnatic, a district of southern Hindostan, extending along the whole coast of Coromandel. Hyder Ali entered the Carnatic with 80,000 troops in 1780, and was defeated by the British under sir Eyre Coote, 1 July and 27 Aug. 1781; and decisively overthrown 2 June, 1782. The Carnatic was overrun by Tippon in 1790. The British acquired entire authority over the Carnatic by treaty, 31 July, 1801; see India.

Carnation, so called from the original species being of a flesh color (carnis, of flesh). Several varieties were first planted in England by the Flemings about 1567.—Stow.

Carneian Games, observed in many Grecian cities, particularly at Sparta (instituted about 675 B.C., in honor of Apollo, surnamed Carneus), lasted nine days.

Carnifex Ferry (West Virginia), BATTLE OF, fought Sept. 10, 1861. McClellan having been assigned to the army of the Potomac, the command in West Virginia devolved upon General Rosecrans. Floyd commanded the Confederate forces on the Gauley River. The latter was attacked by Rosecrans at Carnifex Ferry. It was rather a manoeuvre than a battle, and during the night Floyd retreated.

Carnival (Carni rule, Italian, i. e. Flesh farewell!), a festival time in Italy and other Catholic countries at Shrovetide or beginning of Lent.

Carolinas (North America). Said to have been discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1498, or by De Leon in 1512. Raleigh formed a settlement at Roanoke in June, 1585, which was broken up in 1586. About 850 English settled here about 1660; and Carolina was granted to lord Clarendon and others in 1673. The cultivation of rice was introduced by governor Smith in 1695, and subsequently cotton. A constitution drawn up by John Locke was abandoned. The province was divided into North and South in 1729; see America. The Carolinas being slave states, great excitement prevailed in them in Nov. 1860, on account of Abraham Lincoln's election to the presidency of the United States, he being strongly opposed to slavery. South Carolina began the secession from the United States, 20 Dec. 1860: North Carolina followed, 21 May, 1861; see United States, 1861-5. Both readmitted to the Union 25 June, 1868. Embezzlements of South Carolina "official ring" (state government) disclosed; prosecutions, Sept., Oct. 1877.

Caroline Islands (S. Pacific), were discovered by the Spaniards in the reign of Charles II., 1686.

Carp, a fresh-water or pond fish, was it is said, first brought to these countries about 1525.—Walton. It is mentioned by lady Juliana Berners in her book printed 1496.

Carpet-baggers, a name given to adventurers in the southern states of North America, who, after the conclusion of the war, in 1865, endeavored, from interested motives, to promote the political predominance of the negroes. Their influence counteracted by the conciliatory measures of president Hayes, 1877-8. [The term, originally applied to political adventurers, was afterwards used in the South with little discrimination, and applied to all settlers from the North who took part in politics as members of the Republican party.—Am. Ed.]

Carpets are of ancient use in the East. The manufacture of woollen carpets was introduced into France from Persia, in the reign of Henry IV., between 1589 and 1610. Some artisans who had quitted France in disgust established the English carpet manufacture, about 1750. A cork-carpet company was formed in 1862. The manufacture of carpets in the United States is very extensive, and rapidly growing as the production of wool increases.

Carpi (N. Italy). Here prince Eugene and the Imperialists defeated the French 9 July, 1701.

Carpocratians, followers of Carpocrates, a Gnostic, in the second century.

Carrack, or KARRACK (Italian, Caracca), a large ship in the middle ages. The Santa Anna, the property of the knights of St. John, of about 1700 tons, sheathed with lead, was built at Nice about 1530. It was literally a floating fortress, and aided Charles V. in taking Tunis in 1535. It contained a crew of 800 men and 50 pieces of artillery.

Carriages. Erichthonius of Athens is said to have produced the first chariot about 1486 B.C. Rude carriages were known in France in the reign of Henry II., A.D. 1547; in England, in 1555. Henry IV. of France had one without straps or springs. They were made in England in the reign of Elizabeth, and then called whirling-cotes. The duke of Buckingham, in 1619, drove six horses; and the earl of Northumberland, in rivalry, drove eight. Carriages were let for hire in Paris, in 1650, at the Hôtel Fiacre: hence the name, fiacre; see Car, Cabriolets, Coaches, and License duty.—Annual license duty for carriages: 4 wheels, 2l. 2s.; under 4 cwt., or less than 4 wheels, 15s. Carlo Bianconi successfully introduced cars into Ireland about 1815; he died, nearly 90, 16 Sept. 1875. G. A. Thrupp's "History of Coaches" published, 1877.

Carrickfergus (Antrim, Ireland). Its castle is supposed to have been built by Hugh de Lacy in 1178. The town surrendered to the duke of Schomberg 28 Aug. 1689. The castle surrendered to the French admiral Thurot, Feb. 1760; see Thurot.

Carriers' Act, 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 68, 1830.

Carrociun, a vehicle containing a crucifix and a banner, usually accompanied Italian armies in the middle ages. The Milanese lost theirs at Cortenuova, 27 Nov. 1237.

Carron Ironworks, on the banks of the Carron, in Stirlingshire, established in 1760. The works in 1852 employed about 1600 men. Here, since 1776, have been made the pieces of ordnance called carronades or smashers.

Carrots and other edible roots were imported from Holland and Flanders, about 1510.

Cartes de Visite. The small photographic portraits thus termed are said to have been first taken at Nice, by M. Ferrier, in 1857. The duke of Parma had his portrait placed upon his visiting-cards, and his example was soon followed in Paris and London.

Cartesian Doctrines, promulgated by René Descartes, the French philosopher, in 1637. His metaphysical principle is, "I think, therefore I am;" his physical principle, "Nothing exists but substance." He accounts for all physical phenomena on his theory of vortices, motions excited by God, the source of all motion. He was born in 1596, and died at Stockholm, the guest of queen Christina, in 1650.

Carthage (N. coast of Africa near Tunis), founded by Dido or Elissa, 878 B.C. (869, Blair; 826, Niebuhr). She fled from her brother Pygmalion, king of Tyre, who had killed her husband, and took refuge in Africa. Carthage disputed the empire of the world with Rome, which occasioned the Punic wars. The Carthaginians bore the character of a faithless people, hence the term Punic faith. Cato the censor (about 146 B.C.) always ended his speeches in the senate with Carthago delenda est—"Carthage must be destroyed!" Many councils held here, A.D. 200-535.

Carthage (Missouri), BATTLE OF, fought July 6, 1861. Here Sigel attacked the Confederates under Price, Rains, and Jackson. The battle until two P.M. was an artillery duel, in which the Confederates were worsted. But Sigel was then obliged to retreat, which he did skilfully, saving his baggage.

Carthagoena, or NEW CARTHAGE (S.E. Spain), built by Hasdrubal, the Carthaginian general, 242 B.C.; taken by Scipio, 210. The modern Carthagoena was taken by a British force under sir John Leake, June, 1706; retaken by the duke of Berwick, Nov. It was the last place held by the Intransigentes and Internationalists of Spain; was besieged by general Martin Campos, about 22 Aug. 1878. Bombardment begun 26 Nov., taken by general Lopez Dominguez, 12 Jan. 1874; see Spain.—CARTHAGENA, in Colombia, South America, was taken by sir Francis Drake in 1585; pillaged by the French buccaneers in 1697; bombarded by admiral Vernon in March, 1741; and unsuccessfully besieged, April, 1741.

Carthusians, a religious order (springing from the Benedictines) founded by Bruno of Cologne, who retired with six companions about 1084, to Chartreuse (which see), in the mountains of Dauphiné. Their austere rules were formed by Basil VII., their general. They appeared in England about 1180, and a monastery was founded by sir William Manny, 1371, on the site of the present Charter-house, London; see Charter-house. The Carthusian powder of father Simon, at Chartreuse, was first compounded about 1715.

Cartoons, large chalk drawings preparatory to oil painting. Those of RAPHAEL (twenty-five in number) were designed (for tapestries) in the chambers of the Vatican under Julius II. and Leo. X. about 1510 to 1516. The seven preserved were purchased in Flanders by Rubens for Charles I. of England, for Hampton-court palace in 1629. They were removed to South Kensington 28 April, 1865.—The tapestries executed at Arras from these designs are at Rome. They were twice carried away by invaders, in 1526 and 1798, and were restored in 1815.—The Cartoons for the British Houses of Parliament were exhibited in July, 1848.

RAPHAEL'S CARTOONS.

1. The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.
2. The Charge to Peter.
3. Peter and John Healing the Lame at the Gate of the Temple.
4. The Death of Ananias.
5. Elymas the Sorcerer Struck with Blindness.
6. The Sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, at Lystra.
7. Paul Preaching at Athens.

Cashel (Tipperary, Ireland). Cormack Cuillinan, king and bishop of Cashel, was the reputed founder or restorer of the cathedral, 901. In 1152 bishop Donat O'Danergan was invested with the pall; see Pallium. Cashel was valued in the king's books, 29 Hen. VIII., at 66l. 13s. 4d. Irish money. By the Church Temporalities Act, 1833, it ceased to be archiepiscopal, and was joined to Waterford and Lismore.

Cashmere, in the valley of the Himalayas; was subdued by the Mahometans under Akbar, in 1586; by the Afghans in 1752; by the Sikhs, 1819; and by the treaty of Lahore, 9 March, 1846, ceded to the British, who gave it to the Maharajah Gholab Singh, as tributary sovereign. The true Cashmere shawls, first brought to England in 1666, are well imitated at Bradford and Huddersfield. Shawls of Thibetan wool, for the omrah, cost 150 rupees each, about 1650.

Cassano (N. Italy). Site of an indecisive conflict between prince Eugene of Savoy and the French, 16 Aug. 1705.

Cassation, COURT OF, the highest court of appeal in France, was established 10 Nov. 1790, by the national assembly.

Cassel, formerly the capital of Hesse-Cassel, Central Germany, acquired importance through becoming the refuge of French Protestants after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, 1685. It was the capital of Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, 1807-13, and Wilhelmshöhe, a neighboring castle, became the residence of Napoleon III. after his surrender to the king of Prussia, 2 Sept. 1870, arriving at 9.35 p.m. 5 Sept. He went to England in 1871.

Castel Fidardo, near Ancona, Central Italy. Near here gen. Lamoricière and the papal army of 11,000 men were totally defeated by the Sardinian general, Cialdini, 18 Sept. 1860. Lamoricière with a few horse-men fled to Ancona, then besieged. On 29 Sept. he and the garrison surrendered, but were shortly after set at liberty.

Castes, distinct sections of society in India. In the laws of Menu (see Menu), the Hindus are divided into the Brahmins, or sacerdotal class; the Kshatrya or Chut-tree, military class; the Vaisya, or commercial class; and the Sudras, or soulders, servile class.

Castiglione (N. Italy). Here the French, under Augereau, defeated the Austrians, commanded by Wurmser, with great loss, 5 Aug. 1796.

Castile (Central Spain). A Gothic government was established here about 800.—Roderick, count of Castile, 860; Ferdinand, a count, became king, 1035. Ferdinand, king of Aragon, married Isabella, queen of Castile, in 1474, and formed one monarchy, 1479; see Spain.

Castillejos (N. Africa). Here, on 1 Jan. 1860, was fought the first decisive action in the war between Spain and Morocco. Gen. Prim, after a vigorous resistance, repulsed the Moors under Muley Abbas, and advanced towards Tetuan.

Castillon, Guienne (S. France). Here the army of Henry VI. of England was defeated by that of Charles VII. of France, and an end put to the English dominion in France, Calais alone remaining, 17 or 23 July, 1453. Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, was killed.

Castlebar (Ireland). About 1100 French troops, under Humbert, landed at Killala, and, assisted by Irish insurgents here, compelled the king's troops under Lake to retreat, 27 Aug. 1798; but were compelled to surrender at Ballinamuck, 8 Sept.

Castlepollard (Ireland). At an affray at a fair here between some peasantry and a body of police, thirteen persons lost their lives, and many were wounded, 23 May, 1831.

Castles. The castle of the Anglo-Saxon was a tower keep, either round or square, and ascended by a flight of steps in front. William I. erected 48 strong castles. Several hundreds, built by permission of Stephen, between 1135 and 1154, were demolished by Henry II. 1154. Many were dismantled in the civil wars. Richborough, Studfall, and Burgh are existing specimens of Roman castles.

Cat. The generally received opinion that our domestic cat is derived from the European wild-cat is doubted by Mr. T. Bell (1827). Ruppell (died 1794) found a wild-cat in Nubia, whose conformation agreed with that of the Egyptian cat mummies. Cats fetched high prices in the middle ages, and were protected by law in Wales about 948. Great cat shows were held at the Crystal Palace, 13 July and 2 Dec. 1871; 26–29 Oct. 1872; and annually since (last, 13 Oct. 1880). A cat interrupted the debates in the commons, 9 July, 1874.

A discussion respecting the use of the "cat-o'-nine-tails" took place in the commons, and navy cats and others were inspected (see Flogging)..... 5 July, 1879

Cat Isle, see Salvador.

Catacombs. The early depositories of the dead. The first Christians at Rome met for worship in the catacombs; and here are said to have been the tombs of the apostles Peter and Paul. Belzoni in 1815–18 explored many Egyptian catacombs, built 3000 years ago. He brought to England the sarcophagus of Psammetichus, formed of oriental alabaster, exquisitely sculptured. In the Parisian catacombs (formerly stone quarries) human remains from the cemetery of the Innocents were deposited in 1785; and many of the victims of the revolution in 1792–4 are interred in them.—On 31 May, 1878, some laborers digging on the Via Salaria, two miles from Rome, discovered the celebrated catacombs of which an account, with engravings, was published by Antonio Bosio, in his "Roma Sotteranea" (1632), and by Aringhi (1659), and others. John Evelyn saw them in 1645. Elaborate accounts have been published recently by De' Rossi, an abstract of whose researches will be found in the "Roma Sotteranea" of the Rev. J. S. Northcote and W. R. Brownlow, 1869 and 1879.

Catalonia (N.E. Spain) was settled by the Goths and Alani about 409; conquered by the Saracens, 712; recovered by Pepin, and by Charlemagne, 788. It formed part of the Spanish marches and the territory of the count of Barcelona (whic see). The natives were able seamen; being frequently unruly, their peculiar privileges were abolished in 1714.

Catalytic Force. The discovery in 1819, by Thenard, of the decomposition of peroxide of hydrogen by platinum, and by Döbereiner in 1825 of its property to ignite a mixture of hydrogen and oxygen, formed the groundwork of the doctrine of catalytic force, also termed "action of contact or presence," put forth by Berzelius and Mitscherlich. Their view has not been adopted by Liebig and other chemists.

Catamarans (or carcasses), fire-machines for destroying ships; tried in vain by sir Sydney Smith, 2 Oct. 1804, on the Boulogne flotilla destined by Bonaparte to invade England.

Catania (the ancient Catana), a town near Etna, Sicily, was founded by a colony from Chalcis, about 753 B.C. Ceres had a temple here, open to none but women. Catania was almost totally overthrown by an eruption of Etna in 1669, and in 1693 was nearly swallowed up by an earthquake; in a moment more than 18,000 of its inhabitants were buried in the ruins. An earthquake did great damage, 22 Feb. 1817. In Aug. 1862, the town was held by Garibaldi and his volunteers, in opposition to the Italian government. He was captured on 29 Aug.

Cataphrygians, heretics in the second century, who followed the errors of Montanus. They are said to have baptized their dead, forbidden marriage, and mingled the bread and wine in the Lord's supper with the blood of young children.

Catapultæ, military engines of the crossbow kind, for throwing huge stones as well as darts and arrows; invented by Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, 399 B.C.

Catch Club, NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN's, formed in 1761, included eminent musicians of the time. Prizes were given occasionally; sometimes, since 1821, for a composition, a gold or silver cup.

Cateau Cambresis (N. France), where, on 2, 3 April, 1559, peace was concluded between Henry II. of France, Philip II. of Spain, and Elizabeth of England. France ceded Savoy, Corsica, and nearly 200 forts in Italy and the Low Countries to Philip.

Catechisms are said to have been compiled in the eighth or ninth century. Luther's were published 1520 and 1529. The catechism of the church of England in the first book of Edward VI., 7 March, 1549, contained merely the baptismal vow, the creed, the ten commandments, and the Lord's prayer, with explanations; but James I. ordered the bishops to add an explication of the sacraments, 1612. The catechism of the council of Trent was published in 1566; those of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, 1647 and 1648.

Cathari (from the Greek καθάρως, pure), a name given to the Novatians (about 251), Montanists, and other early Christian sects; see Puritans.

Cathay, an old name for China.

Cathedral, the chief church of a diocese, as containing the cathedra, or seat of the bishop, obtained the name in the tenth century.

A conference of the higher clergy to consider cathedral institutions held at Lambeth 1 March, 1872
The act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, for the regulation of cathedrals passed in 1840, amended and the endowment of canonries facilitated in 1873
A royal commission to inquire respecting cathedral churches appointed (abp. of Canterbury, lord Cranbrook, Mr. Beresford Hope, and others), July; met in Aug. 1879

Catherine. The order of knights of St. Catherine was instituted in Palestine, 1063. An order of ladies of the highest rank in Russia was founded by Peter the Great, 1714, in honor of the bravery of his empress Catherine. They were to be distinguished, as the name implied (from καθαρός, pure), for purity of life and manners; see Docks and Katharine.

Catholic Majesty. This title was given by pope Gregory III. to Alphonso I. of Spain, 739, and to Ferdinand V. and his queen in 1474 by Innocent VIII. on account of their zeal for religion and their establishment of the Inquisition.

Catholic Union of Great Britain; president, the duke of Norfolk; was constituted in 1871. A Catholic union in Dublin was formed Dec. 1873; see Roman Catholics.

Catholics, see Roman Catholics.

Catiline's Conspiracy. Lucius Sergius Catiline, a dissolute Roman noble, having been refused the consulship (65 B.C.), conspired to kill the senate, plunder the treasury, and set Rome on fire. This conspiracy was timely discovered and frustrated. A second plot (in 63) was detected by the consul Cicero, whom he had resolved to murder. Catiline's daring appearance in the senate-house, after his guilt was known, drew forth Cicero's celebrated invective, "Quousque tandem abutere, Catilina, patientia nostra?" on 8 Nov. On seeing five of his accomplices arrested, Catiline fled to Gaul, where his partisans were assembling an army. Cicero punished the conspirators at home, and Petreius routed their forces; Catiline being killed in the engagement, Jan. 62 B.C.

Cato, SUICIDE OR. Considering freedom as that which alone "sustains the dignity of man," and unable to survive the independence of his country, Cato stabbed himself at Utica, 46 B.C.

Cato-street Conspiracy. A gang of desperate men, headed by Arthur Thistlewood, assembled in Cato Street, Edgware Road, and proposed the assassination of the ministers of the crown at a cabinet dinner. They were betrayed and arrested, 23 Feb. 1820; and Thistlewood, Brunt, Davidson, Ings, and Tidd were executed as traitors on 1 May.

Catti, a German tribe, attacked but not subdued by the Romans A.D. 15 and 84; absorbed by the Franks, third century.

Cattle. Of horned cattle only the buffalo or bison is native of America, and this has never been domesticated. Columbus, in 1493, brought the first tame cattle to America, a bull and several cows. As the various parts of North and South America were settled by Europeans, cattle were introduced, and from these have descended all the vast herds which now roam over the pampas of Texas and South America. In 1611 and 1624, cattle were imported into Virginia and Massachusetts. In Great Britain and in the United States they have been vastly improved, both in the weight of carcass, the quality of the beef, and the abundance of the milk, by the extraordinary attention that has been given to the selection and crossing of the best breeds, according to the objects in view. This sort of improvement began about the middle of last century, or rather later. The export trade of the United States in neat cattle for the eight months ending 31 Aug. 1880 amounted to $12,462,837; for the year ending 30 June, 1881, the exports of live cattle were 185,707 head, valued at $14,304,108. The importation of horned cattle from Ireland and Scotland into England was prohibited by a law, 1663; but the export of cattle from Ireland became very extensive. In 1842 the importation of cattle into England from foreign countries was subjected to a moderate duty, and in 1846 they were made duty free; and since then the numbers imported have enormously increased.* Horned cattle imported into the United Kingdom 1849, 53,480; 1853, 125,523; 1855 (war), 97,527; 1860, 104,569; 1865, 283,271; 1866, 237,739; 1867, 177,948; 1868, 136,688; 1869, 220,190; 1870, 202,172; 1874, 193,862; 1876, 271,576; 1877, 201,193; 1879, 247,768; see Smithfield, Metropolitan Cattle-market, and Foreign Cattle-market.

Cattle Show, see Smithfield.

Caubul, see Cabul.

Caucasus, a lofty mountain, a continuation of the ridge of Mount Taurus, between the Euxine and Caspian seas. In mythology, Prometheus was said to have been tied on the top of Caucasus by Jupiter, and continually devoured by vultures (1548 B.C.). The passes near the mountain were called Caucasian Porter, and it is supposed that through them the Sarmatians or Huns invaded the provinces of Rome, A.D. 447; see Circassia.

Caucus. An American term applied to a private meeting of the leading politicians of a party to agree upon the plans to be pursued during an election or session of congress. The word is now applied to private meetings of all the members of congress, or of a legislature, belonging to one political party, for the purpose of determining in advance the course to be pursued by the party, and of compelling individual members to yield to the will of the majority of the caucus. The word is said to be derived from "ship"-caulkers' meetings. A "caucus club" is mentioned by John Adams, in 1763. —Bartlett. Similar meetings are occasionally held in London by conservatives and liberals; one was held by Mr. Gladstone respecting the ballot bill, 6 July, 1871. Jealousy respecting the system was aroused in 1878.

Caudine Forks, according to Livy, the Furcula Caudina (in Samnium, S. Italy), were two narrow defiles or gorges, united by a range of mountains on each side. The Romans went through the first pass, but found the second blocked up; on returning they found the first similarly obstructed. Being thus hemmed in by the Samnites, under the command of C. Pontus, they surrendered at discretion, 321 B.C. (after a fruitless contest, according to Cicero). The Roman senate broke the treaty.

Cauliflower, said to have been brought from Cyprus to England about 1603.

Caustic, IN PAINTING, a method of burning colors into wood or ivory, invented by Gausias of Sicily. He painted his mistress Glycère sitting on the ground making garlands with flowers; the picture was hence named Stephanoplocon. It was bought by Lucullus for two talents, 335 B.C.—Pliny.

Cautionary Towns (Holland), (the Briel, Flushing, Hammekins, and Walcheren), were given to queen Elizabeth in 1585 as security for their repaying her for assistance in their struggle with Spain. They were restored to the Dutch republic by James I. in 1616.

Cavalier. The appellation given to the supporters of the king during the civil war, from a number of gentlemen forming themselves into a body-guard for the king in 1641. They were opposed to the Roundheads, or parliamentarians.

Cavalry. Used by the Canaanites in war, 1450 B.C. (Josh. ix. 4). Attached to each Roman legion was a body of 300 horse, in ten turmae; the commander always a veteran.—The Persians had 10,000 horse at Marathon, 490 B.C.; and 10,000 Persian horse were slain at the battle of Issus, 333 B.C.—Plutarch. In the war with Napoleon I. the British cavalry reached to 31,000 men. Our cavalry force, in 1840, was 10,733. In 1867, horse guards, 1817; cavalry of the line, 10,023; in depots, 838; in India, 5421; total, 17,599; in 1890, total 17,245; see Horse Guards, etc.

Cavendish College, Cambridge (founded to give cheap university education to youths younger than those admitted at other colleges, and leaving earlier), was inaugurated by the duke of Devonshire, 26 Oct. 1876.

Cavendish Experiment. In 1796 the Hon. Henry Cavendish described his experiment for determining the mean density of the earth, by comparing the force of terrestrial attraction with that of the attraction of leaden spheres of known magnitude and density, by means of the torsion balance. — Brande. The Cavendish Society, for the publication of chemical works, which ceased with Gmelin's Chemistry (1848-67), was established 1846.

Caves are frequently mentioned in the Bible as dwellings, refuges, and burying-places. Mr. W. B. Dawkins's "Cave-hunting; Researches on the Evidence of Caves respecting the Early Inhabitants of Europe," was published 1874. The Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, which is the largest in the world, discovered 1809; Weyer's Cave, Virginia, 1804; Wyandotte Cave, Indiana; Oreston Cave, Devon, 1816; Kirkdale, Yorkshire, 1821; Kent's Hole, Torquay, 1825; Brixham Cave, 1858; Wookey Hole, Somerset, 1859; and many others, have been well explored.

Cawnpore, a town in India, on the Doab, a peninsula between the Ganges and Jumna. During the mutiny in June, 1857, it was garrisoned by native troops under sir Hugh Wheeler. These broke out into revolt. An adopted son of the old Peishwa Bajee Rao, Nana Sahib, who had long lived on friendly terms with the British, came apparently to their assistance, but joined the rebels. He took the place after three weeks' siege, 26 June; and, in spite of a treaty, massacred great numbers of the British, without respect to age or sex, in the most cruel manner. Gen. Havelock defeated Nana Sahib, 16 July, at Futtchepore, and retook Cawnpore, 17 July. Sir Colin Campbell defeated the rebels here on 6 Dec. following. A column was erected here, in memory of the sufferers, by their relatives of the 32d regiment. In Dec. 1860, Nana was said to be living at Thibet; and in Dec. 1851 was incorrectly said to have been captured at Kurrachee; see India, 1857.

Caxton Society, established for the publication of chronicles and literature of the middle ages, published sixteen volumes, 1844-54. Caxton Celebration, see under Printing, 1877.

Cayenne, French Guiana (South America), settled by the French, 1604-35. It afterwards came successively into the hands of the English (1654), French, and Dutch. The last were expelled by the French in 1677. Cayenne was taken by the British, 12 Jan. 1809, but was restored to the French in 1814. Here is produced the Capicum baccatum, or cayenne pepper. Many French political prisoners were sent here in 1848.

Cecilian Society, see Cecilian.

Cedar Creek AND Mountain (Virginia, U. S.). On 19 Oct. 1864, gen. Sheridan converted the defeat of the Federals by the Confederates under Longstreet into a complete victory. At CEDAR MOUNTAIN gen. Stonewall Jackson defeated Banks, 9 Aug. 1862.

Cedar-tree. The red cedar (Juniperus Virginiana) came from North America before 1664; the Bermudas cedar from Bermudas before 1683; the Cedar of Lebanon (Pinus Cedrus) from the Levant before 1683. In 1850 a grove of venerable cedars, about 40 feet high, remained on Lebanon. The cedar of Goa (Cupressus lusitanica) was brought to Europe by the Portuguese about 1688; see Cypress.

Celery is said to have been introduced into England by the French marshal, Talland, during his captivity in England, after his defeat at Blenheim by Marlborough, 2 Aug. 1704.

Celestial Globe, see Globes.

Celibacy (from calbe, unmarried) was preached by St. Anthony in Egypt about 305. His early converts lived in caves, etc., till monasteries were founded. The doctrine was rejected in the council of Nice, 325. Celibacy was enjoined on bishops only in 692. The decree was opposed in England, 968-978. The Romish clergy generally were enjoined a vow of celibacy by pope Gregory VII. in 1073-86, and its observance was established by the council of Placentia, held in 1095. Marriage was restored to the English clergy in 1547. The marriage of the clergy was proposed, but negated at the council of Trent (1563); also at a conference of the Old Catholics at Bonn, June, 1876. Sir Bartle Frere termed the Zulu army "a celibate man-slaying machine," 1878.

Cell Theory (propounded by Schwann in 1839) supposes that the ultimate particles of all animal and vegetable tissues are small cells. Some of the lowest forms of animal and vegetable life are said to be composed of merely a single cell, as the germinal vesicle in the egg and the red-snow plant.

Censors, Roman magistrates, to survey and rate the property, and correct the manners of the people. The two first censors were appointed, 443 B.C. Plebeian censors were first appointed, 131 B.C. The office, abolished by the emperors, was revived by Decius, A.D. 251; see Press.

Census. The Israelites were numbered by Moses, 1490 B.C.; and by David, 1017 B.C.; Demetrius Phalereus is said to have taken a census of Attica, 317 B.C. Servius Tullius enacted that a general estimate of every Roman's estate and personal effects should be delivered to the government upon oath every five years, 566 B.C. The proposal for a census in 1753 was opposed as profane. In the United Kingdom the census is now taken at decennial periods since 1801; 1811, 1821, 1831, 1841, 1851, 1861 (7 April), 1871 (3 April), 1881 (3 April); act passed 7 Sept. 1880; see Population. The first United States census was made in 1790. The constitution requires that a new census shall be made every ten years. The latest census year was 1880. For the latest census of other countries, see Table facing page 1.

Central America, see America. A large American steamer of this name was wrecked during a gale in the gulf of Mexico, 12 Sept. 1857. Of about 550 persons only 152 were saved; several of these after drifting on rafts above 600 miles. The loss of about 24 million dollars in specie aggravated the commercial panic in New York shortly after. The captain and crew behaved heroically.

Central Criminal Court, established in 1834. Commissions are issued to the fifteen judges of England (of whom three attend in rotation at the Old Bailey) for the periodical delivery of the jail of Newgate, and the trial of offences of greater degree, committed in Middlesex and parts of Essex, Kent, and Surrey; the new district is considered as one county.

"Cerbere," a French gun-brig, with a crew of 87 men, and seven guns, in the harbor of L'Orient, within pistol-shot of three batteries, was captured in a most daring manner by lieutenant Jeremiah Coghlan, in a cutter with 19 companions aided by two boats, one of which was commanded by midshipman Paddon. The prize was towed out under a heavy but ineffectual fire from the batteries, 26 July, 1800.—Nicolas.

Ceremonies, MASTER OF THE, an office instituted for the more honorable reception of ambassadors and persons of quality at court, 1 James I. 1603. The order maintained by the master of the ceremonies at Bath, "Beau Nash," the "King of Bath," led to the adoption of the office in ordinary assemblies; he died in his 88th year, 1761.—Ashle.

Ceres, a planet, 160 miles in diameter, was discovered by M. Piazzi, at Palermo, 1 Jan. 1801; he named it

* P. de La Chaise was the favorite and confessor of Louis XIV., who made him superior of a great establishment of the Jesuits on this spot, then named Mont Louisa. The house and grounds were bought for a national cemetery, which was laid out by M. Brongniart, and first used on 21 May, 1804.

Cerinthians, followers of Cerinthus, a Jew, who lived about A.D. 80, are said to have combined Judaism with pagan philosophy.

Cerium, a very rare metal, discovered by Klaproth and others in 1803.

Cerro Gordo, BATTLE OF. With about 8500 men, Gen. Scott, after capturing Vera Cruz (which see), marched towards the Mexican capital. At Cerro Gordo, a difficult mountain pass at the foot of the eastern chain of the Cordilleras, he found Santa Anna strongly posted and fortified, with 12,000 men. Scott attacked him 18 April, 1847, drove him from his position, and dispersed his army. Santa Anna narrowly escaped on the back of a mule. More than 1000 Mexicans were killed or wounded, and 3000 were made prisoners. The Americans lost in killed and wounded 431. Scott pushed on towards the Mexican capital. See Contreras, Cherubusco, El Molino del Rey, Chapultepec.

Ceuta (the ancient Septa), a town on N. coast of Africa, stands on the site of the ancient Abyla, the southern pillar of Hercules. It was taken from the Vandals by Belisarius for Justinian, 534; by the Goths, 618; by the Moors about 709, from whom it was taken by the Portuguese, 1415. With Portugal, it was annexed in 1580 to Spain, which power still retains it.

Ceylon (the ancient Taprobane), an island in the Indian Ocean, called by the natives the seat of paradise. It became a seat of Buddhism, 307 B.C., and was known to the Romans about A.D. 41. Population 1873, 2,323,760.

Chæronæa (Boeotia). Here Greece was ruined by Philip; 32,000 Macedonians defeating 30,000 Thebans, Athenians, etc., 6 or 7 Aug. 338 B.C. Here Archelaus, lieutenant of Mithridates, was defeated by Sylla, and 110,000 Cappadocians were slain, 86 B.C.; see Coronea.

Chain-bridges. The largest and oldest chain-bridge in the world is said to be that at Kingtung, in China, where it forms a perfect road from the top of one mountain to the top of another. Mr. Telford constructed the first chain-bridge on a grand scale in England, over the strait between Anglesey and the coast of Wales, 1818-25; see Menai Straits.

Chain-cables, PUMPS, AND SHOT. Iron chain-cables were in use by the Veneti, a people intimately connected with the Belgæ of Britain in the time of Cæsar, 57 B.C. These cables came into use, generally in the navy of England, in 1812. Acts for the proving and sale of chain-cables and anchors were passed in 1864, 1871, and 1874.—CHAIN-SHOT, to destroy the rigging of an enemy's ship, were invented by the Dutch admiral, De Witt, in 1666.—CHAIN-PUMPS were first used on board the Flora, British frigate, in 1787.

Chains, HANGING IN. By 25 Geo. II. 1752, it was enacted that the judge should direct the bodies of pirates and murderers to be dissected and anatomized, or hung in chains. The custom of hanging in chains was abolished in 1834.

Chalcedon, Asia Minor, opposite Byzantium, colonized by Megarians, about 684 B.C. It was taken by Darius, 505 B.C.; by the Romans, 74; plundered by the Goths, A.D. 259; taken by Chosroes, the Persian, 609; by Orchan, the Turk, 1338. Chalons-sur-Marne (N.E. France). Here the emperor Aurelian defeated Tetricus, the last of the pretenders to the throne, termed the Thirty Tyrants, 274; and here in 451 Aëtius defeated Attila the Hun, compelling him to retire into Pannonia.

Cham, see Charivari.

Chamberlain, early a high court officer in France, Germany, and England. The office of chamberlain of the exchequer was discontinued in 1834.

HEREDITARY LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAIN OF ENGLAND.—The sixth great officer of state, whose duties, among others, relate to coronations and public solemnities. The office was long held by the De Veres, earls of Oxford, granted by Henry I. in 1101. On the death of John De Vere, the sixteenth earl, Mary, his sole daughter, marrying Lord Willoughby De Eresby, the right was established in that nobleman's family by a judgment of the house of peers, 2 Charles I. 1625. On the death of his descendant, unmarried, in July 1779, the house of lords and twelve judges concurred that the office devolved to lady Willoughby De Eresby, and her sister lady Georgina Charlotte Bertie, as heirs to their brother Robert, duke of Ancaster, deceased; and that they had powers to appoint a deputy to act for them, not under the degree of a knight, who, if his majesty approved of him, might officiate accordingly.—Beaton. This dignity was for some time held jointly by the lord Willoughby De Eresby and the marquess of Cholmondeley, descendants of John De Vere, earl of Oxford. Lord Willoughby De Eresby died without issue, 27 Aug. 1870, and lord Aycland, his sister's son, was appointed to act.

LORD CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD.—An ancient office. The title is from the French Chambellan, in Latin Chamberarius. Sir William Stanley, knight, afterwards beheaded, was lord chamberlain, 1 Henry VII. 1483. A vice-chamberlain acts in the absence of the chief; the offices are coexistent.—Beaton. The chamberlain of London is an ancient office.

Chambers, see Commerce, Agriculture.

Chambers's Journal was first published at Edinburgh in Feb. 1832.

Chambre Ardente (fiery chamber), an extraordinary French tribunal so named from the punishment frequently awarded by it. Francis I. in 1535, and Henry II. in 1549, employed it for the extirpation of heresy, which led to the civil war with the Huguenots in 1560; and in 1679 Louis XIV. appointed one to investigate the poisoning cases which arose after the execution of the marchioness Brinvilliers.

Chambre Introuvable, a name given to the chamber of deputies elected in France in 1816, on account of its ignorance, incapacity, and bigoted reactionary spirit.

Champ de Mars, an open square in front of the military school at Paris, with artificial embankments on each side, extending nearly to the river Seine. The ancient assemblies of the Frankish people, the germ of parliaments, held annually in March, received this name. In 747 Pepin changed the month to May. Here was held, 14 July, 1790 (the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille), the "federation," or solemnity of swearing fidelity to the "patriot king" and new constitution: great rejoicings followed. On 14 July, 1791, a second great meeting was held here, directed by the Jacobin clubs, to sign petitions on the "altar of the country," praying for the abdication of Louis XVI. A commemoration meeting took place, 14 July, 1792. Another constitution was sworn to here, under the eye of Napoleon I., 1 May, 1815, at a ceremony called the Champ de Mai. The prince president (afterwards Napoleon III.) had a grand review in the Champ de Mars, and distributed eagles to the army, 10 May, 1852. Here also was held the International Exhibitions opened 1 April, 1867, and 1 May, 1878; see Paris.

Champagne, an ancient province, N.E. France, once part of the kingdom of Burgundy, was governed by counts from the 10th century till it was united to Navarre, count Thibaut becoming king in 1284. The countess Joanna married Philip IV. of France in 1284; and in 1361 Champagne was annexed by their descendant king John. The effervescing wine, termed Champagne, became popular in the latter part of the 18th century.

Champion of the King of England (most honorable), an ancient office, since 1377 has been attached to the manor of Scryvelshy, held by the Marmion family. Their descendant, sir Henry Dymoke, the seventeenth of his family who held the office, died 28 April, 1865; succeeded by his brother John; he died, and his son Henry Lionel succeeded, who died Dec. 1875. At the coronation of the English kings, the champion used to challenge any one that should deny their title.

Champlain, see Lake Champlain.

Chancellor of England, LORD HIGH, the first lay subject after the princes of the blood royal. Anciently the office was conferred upon some dignified ecclesiastic termed Cancellarius, or doorkeeper, who admitted suitors to the sovereign's presence. Arfastus or Herefast, chaplain to the king (William the Conqueror) and bishop of Elmham, was lord chancellor in 1067.—Hardy. Thomas à Becket was made chancellor in 1154. The first person qualified by education to decide causes upon his own judgment was sir Thomas More, appointed in 1529, before which time the officer was rather a state functionary than a judge. Sir Christopher Hatton, appointed lord chancellor in 1587, was very ignorant, on which account the first reference was made to a master in 1588. The great seal has been frequently put in commission; in 1813 the office of Vice-chancellor was established; see Keeper and Vice-chancellor.—Salary, 1875, 6000*l.*; as speaker of house of lords, 4000*l.*

Chancellor of Scotland, LORD. The laws of Malcolm II. (1004) say:—"The chancellor shall at all times assist the king in giving him counsell mair secretly nor the rest of the nobility. . . . The chancellor shall be ludgit neir unto the kingis grace, for keeping of his bodie, and the seill, and that he may be ready, baith day and night, at the kingis command."—Sir James Balfour. Evan was lord chancellor to Malcolm III. Canmore, 1057; and James, earl of Seafield, afterwards Findlater, was the last lord chancellor of Scotland, the office having been abolished in 1708; see Keeper.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, see Exchequer.

Chancellor's Augmentation Act, passed 1863, enabled the lord chancellor to sell the advowson of certain livings in his gift for augmenting poor benefices.

Chancellorsville, Virginia, U. S., a large brick hotel, once kept by a Mr. Chancellor, was the site of severe sanguinary conflicts between the American federal army of the Potomac under gen. Hooker, and the confederates under gen. Lee. On 29 April, 1863, the federal army crossed the Rappahannock; on 2 May, gen. "Stonewall" Jackson furiously attacked and routed the right wing, but was mortally wounded by his own party firing on him by mistake. Gen. Stuart took his command, and after a severe conflict on 3 and 4 May, with great loss to both parties, the federals were compelled to recross the Rappahannock. The struggle was compared to that at Hougomont during the battle of Waterloo. Jackson died 10 May. Hooker's loss was 17,000 men, of whom 5000 were made prisoners. Lee's loss was about 13,000, of whom 3000 were prisoners. The result of this battle has always been an enigma to military critics. Hooker's army, was composed of the best of material, was well equipped and full of spirit, and numbered 120,000, while Lee's force was 62,000. Hooker succeeded in turning Lee's position, and in forcing him out of his fortified camp into the open field, where a complete victory for the national forces seemed so easy of attainment as to be well-nigh certain. That it was not won, was due simply to bad management. For a careful criticism of the affair see "The Campaign of Chancellorsville" by lieutenant. Theodore Dodge, U. S. A., published 1881.

Chancery, COURT OF, is said to have been instituted either in 605, or by Alfred, 887; refounded by William I. 1067 (Stowe) or 1070. This court had its origin in the desire to render justice complete, and to moderate the rigor of other courts that are bound to the strict letter of the law. It gives relief to or against infants, notwithstanding their minority; and to or against married women, notwithstanding their coverture; and all frauds, deceits, breaches of trust and confidence, for which there is no redress at common-law, are relivable here.—Blackstone; see Chancellors of England. The delays in chancery proceedings having long given dissatisfaction, the subject was brought before parliament in 1825, and frequently since; which led to the passing of important acts in 1852, 1853, 1855, 1858, and 1867, to amend the practice in the court of chancery; see Accountant, County Courts, and Supreme Court.

The Chancery division of the high court of justice now consists of the lord chancellor and five judges.

Chandos Clause, see Counties.

Channel Steamers, see under Steam.

Channel Tunnel Company, registered, 15 Jan. 1872; see Tunnels.

Chanting the psalms was adopted by Ambrose from the pagan ceremonies of the Romans, about 350.—Langlet. About 602, Gregory the Great added tones to the Ambrosian chant, and established singing schools. Chanting was adopted by some dissenters about 1859.

John Marbeck's "Book of Common Prayer noted" (1559) is the first adaptation of the ancient Latin music to the Reformed Church; Clifford's "Common Tunes" for chanting, 1664.

Chantry Legacy, see Royal Academy.

Chantry, a chapel endowed with revenue for priests to sing mass for the souls of the donors; see Chanting. Chantries were abolished in England in 1545.

Chapel. There are free chapels, chapels of ease, the chapel royal, etc.—Corwell. The gentlemen pensioners (formerly poor knights of Windsor, who were instituted by the direction of Henry VIII. in his testament, 1546-7) were called knights of the chapel; see Poor Knights of Windsor.—The Private Chapels act passed 14 Aug. 1871. The place of conference among printers, and the conference itself, are by them called a chapel, it is said, because the first work printed in England by Caxton was executed in a ruined chapel in Westminster Abbey.

Chaplain, a clergyman who performs divine service in a chapel, for a prince or nobleman. About seventy chaplains are attached to the chapel royal. The chief personages invested with the privilege of retaining chaplains are the following, with the number that was originally allotted to each rank, by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1529):

Archbishop.	8	Knight of the Garter.	3
Duke.	6	Duchess.	2
Bishop.	6	Marchioness.	2
Marquess.	5	Countess.	2
Earl.	5	Baroness.	2
Viscount.	4	Master of the Rolls.	2
Baron.	3	Royal Almoner.	2
Chancellor.	3	Chief justice.	1

Chaplets, the string of beads used by the Roman Catholics in reciting the Lord's prayer, Ave Maria, etc.; see Beads.

Chapter. Anciently the bishop and clergy lived in the cathedral, the latter to assist the former in performing holy offices and governing the church, until the reign of Henry VIII. The chapter is now an assembly of the clergy of a collegiate church or cathedral.—Cowell. The chapter-house of Westminster Abbey was built in 1250. By consent of the abbot, the commons of England held their parliaments there from 1377 until 1547, when Edward VI. granted them the chapel of St. Stephen.

Chapultepec, BATTLE OF. Chapultepec is a lofty hill, strongly fortified, and the seat of the Military School of Mexico. It was the last place to be defended outside the city of Mexico towards the middle of Sept. 1847, the invading Americans, under Scott, having taken every other stronghold from Vera Cruz to Chapultepec. Scott brought four heavy batteries to bear upon it on the night of the 12th of Sept., and on the 13th commenced a heavy cannonade. On the 13th the Americans made a furious assault, routed the Mexicans, and unfurled the stars and stripes over the shattered castle of Chapultepec. On the following day Scott and his army entered the city of Mexico in triumph.

Char-Asiab, the heights before Cabul; held by Afghan mutineers, were gallantly carried by gen. Baker, with the 72d Highlanders and 5th Ghorkas, 6 Oct. 1879. The enemy was totally defeated with severe loss. Capt. Young, Dr. Duncan, and Lieut. Ferguson were killed, and about 70 of the British force killed and wounded. The British were falsely accused of cruelty after the victory.

Charcoal Air-filters were devised by Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., in 1853. About the end of the last century Lowitz, a German chemist, discovered that charcoal (carbon) possessed the property of deodorizing putrid substances, by absorbing and decomposing offensive gases. Air-filters, based on this property, have been successfully applied to public buildings, sewers, etc. Dr. Stenhouse also invented charcoal respirators; see Fireman's Respirators.

Charing Cross. At the village of Charing stood the last of the memorial crosses erected in memory of Eleanor, queen of Edward I., in conformity with her will. She died 28 Nov. 1290. The cross remained till 1647, when it was destroyed as a monument of popish superstition. The present cross was erected for the South-eastern Railway Company in 1865 by Mr. E. M. Barry. The houses at Charing-cross were built about 1678; alterations began in 1829. The first stone of Charing-cross hospital was laid by the duke of Sumner, 15 Sept. 1831. Hungerford-bridge (or Charing-cross bridge) was opened 1 May, 1845; taken down July, 1862, and the materials employed in erecting Clifton suspension bridge, beginning March, 1863; see Clifton.—CHARING-CROSS RAILWAY. The first train passed over it 2 Dec. 1863, and it was opened to the public on 11 Jan. 1864. The new railway bridge, built of iron with brick piers, was constructed by Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Hawkshaw. The foot-bridge was opened, toll free, 5 Oct. 1878.

Chariots. Chariot racing was a Greek exercise. The chariot of an Ethiopian officer is mentioned, Acts viii. 27. Caesar relates that Camivelaunus, after dismissing his other forces, retained no fewer than 4000 war-chariots about his person; see Carriages, etc.

Charitable Bequests, etc. Boards for their recovery were constituted in 1564 and 1800, and a board for Ireland (chiefly prelates of the established church) in 1825. The Roman Catholic Charitable Bequests act passed in 1844, and an act for the better administration of Charitable Trusts in 1853, when commissioners were appointed, who have from time to time published voluminous reports. Amendment acts were passed 1855 and 1871.

Charitable Brethren, an order founded by St.

John of God, and approved by pope Pius V. 1572; introduced into France, 1601; settled at Paris, 1602.—Hennrich.

Charitable Funds Investment Act passed, 1 Aug. 1870.

Charitable Relief, society for organizing, established 1869. There are 38 offices, where applications are received and inquiries made. Reported successful, 1881.

Charitable Trustees' Incorporation Act passed, 27 June, 1872.

Charitable Trusts Acts amended in 1869.

Charitable Uses, statute of, 43 Eliz. c. 4 (1601), passed "to redress the misemployment of lands, goods, and stocks of money, heretofore given to charitable uses." The law respecting the conveyance of land for charitable uses was amended in 1861.

Charities and Charity Schools, see Education. The Charity Commission reported to parliament that the endowed charities alone of Great Britain amounted to 1,500,000*l.* annually, in 1840. Charity schools were instituted in London to prevent the seduction of the infant poor into Roman Catholic seminaries, 3 James II., 1687-8. Mr. Low's "Charities of London" was published 1862. Newest edition, 1880.

First charity commission, originated by Mr. (afterwards Lord) Brougham, in 1816, appointed in 1818. Issued reports in 36 vols. (income of charities, 1,300,365*l.*) 1819-40. New commissioners appointed 1853, office, Gwydyr House, Whitehall, powers increased. 1860. Additional commissioners appointed through abolition of the Endowed School Commission. 1874. A meeting was held at the Mansion House, London, to consider objections to charity electioneering, without immediate result. 30 Oct. 1873. The Charity Voting Association held its first annual meeting. 18 Feb. 1875. The Metropolitan charities received about 3,198,181*l.*, 1874, 4,114,690*l.*. The Charity Commissioners' scheme for the Camden estates, Kensington, much opposed, confirmed by Chancery. 27 May, 1881.

Charity Children of London; meetings began at St. Andrew's, Holborn, 1704; held at other churches in following years; in 1801 and since at St. Paul's, with intermissions; no meeting in 1878, and since, the elections interfering with the ordinary services.

Charivari (French for "clattering of pots and pans," etc., noise made to annoy obnoxious persons), the name assumed by the French illustrated satirical journal, first published 1 Dec. 1832, edited by Louis Desnoyers, Altaroche, and Albert Clerc. Among the artists was "Cham," a name taken by the comte de Noe, who contributed from 1842 till his death, 6 Sept. 1879. See Punch, "the London Charivari."

Charleroi, in Belgium, fortified and named by the Spanish governor Rodrigo, 1666. Several great battles have been fought near this town, especially in 1690 and 1794; see Fleuras. Charleroi was besieged by the prince of Orange, 1672 and 1677; but he was soon obliged to retire. Near here, at Ligny, Napoleon attacked the Prussian line, making it fall back upon Wavres, 16 June, 1815.

Charles-st-Georges, a French vessel, professedly conveying free African emigrants (but really slaves), seized by the Portuguese, in Conducia bay, 29 Nov. 1857, sent to Lisbon, and condemned as a slave. The French government sent two ships of war to the Tagus, and the vessel was surrendered under protest; but the emperor of France gave up the free emigration scheme.

Charleston (South Carolina), founded by people from old Charlestown, 1680. The English fleet here was repulsed with great loss, 28 June, 1776. The place was besieged by the British troops at the latter end of March, 1780, and surrendered 12 May following, with 6000 prisoners; it was evacuated, 14 Dec. 1782. Great commotion arose here in Nov. 1860, through the election of Mr. Lincoln for the presidency, he being opposed to slavery. On 12, 13 April, 1861, the war began by the confederates bombarding Fort Sumter; see United States. In Dec. 1861, the federals sank a number of vessels laden with stone in order to choke up the entrance to Charleston harbor. The city was besieged from the sea-side throughout the war. The principal operations of this nature were those of gen. Gillmore and admirals Dupont and Dahlgren, 7 April-7 Sept. 1863, resulting in the occupation by the national troops of the whole of Morris Island. When gen. Sherman captured Columbia, Charleston became untenable, and the confederates retired, 17 Feb. 1865. The national standard was replaced upon Fort Sumter, 14 April, 1865. A great fire, the result of accident, occurred in Dec. 1861, destroying a large part of the city. The city was nearly destroyed by fire, 1 Feb. 1865, when the confederates evacuated it.

Charlestown (Massachusetts) was burned by the British forces under gen. Gage, 17 June, 1775. Charlestown was taken by the British, 7 May, 1779.

"Charte Constitutionnelle," the French political constitution acknowledged by Louis XVIII., 4-10 June, 1814. The infraction of this constitution led to the revolution of 1830. The amended "Charte" was promulgated by Louis Philippe, 14 Aug. 1830, and set aside by the Revolution of 1848.

Charter-house (a corruption of Chartreuse, which see), London, formerly a Carthusian monastery, founded in 1371 by sir Walter de Manny, one of the knights of Edward III., now an extensive charitable establishment. The last prior, John Houghton, was executed as a traitor, for denying the king's supremacy, in May, 1535. After the dissolution of monasteries in 1539, the Charter-house passed through various hands till 1 Nov. 1611, when it was sold by the earl of Suffolk to Thomas Sutton for 13,000*l.*, who obtained letters-patent directing that it should be called "the hospital of king James, founded in the Charter-house," and that "there should be for ever 16 governors," etc. On the foundation are 80 poor brothers and 44 poor scholars. Sutton died 12 Dec. 1611. The expenditure for 1853-4 was 22,396*l.*; the receipts, 28,908*l.* This school was affected by the Public Schools Act, 1868. In Sept. 1872, the school was opened in new buildings, at Godalming, Surrey. The old buildings, adapted for the Merchant Taylors' (day) School, were opened by the prince of Wales, 6 April, 1875. The buildings for the poor "brethren" were also modified, and in Nov. entirely new arrangements for them were proposed. The "Charter-House, Past and Present," by Dr. Wm. Haig Brown, head-master, published 1879.

Charter-party, a covenant between merchants and masters of ships relating to the ship and cargo, said to have been first used in England about 1243.

Charters, granted to corporate towns to protect their manufactures by Henry I. in 1132; modified by Charles II. in 1683; the ancient charters restored in 1698. Alterations were made by the Municipal Reform Act in 1835. See Magna Charta and Boroughs. Ancient Anglo-Saxon charters are printed in Kemble's "Codex Diplomaticus," 1829.

Chartists, the name assumed by large bodies of the lower classes, shortly after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, from their demanding the people's Charter,* the six points of which were Universal Suffrage, Vote by Ballot, Annual Parliaments, Payment of the Members, the Abolition of the Property Qualification (which was enacted, June, 1858), and Equal Electoral Districts. In 1838 the chartists assembled in various parts of the country, armed with guns, pikes, and other weapons, and carrying torches and flags. A proclamation was issued against them, 12 Dec. Their petition (agreed to at Birmingham, 6 Aug. 1838) was presented to parliament by Mr. T. Attwood, 14 June, 1839. They committed great outrages at Birmingham, 15 July, 1839, and at Newport (which see), 4 Nov. 1839. They held for some time a sort of parliament, called the "National Convention," the leading men being Feargus O'Connor, Henry Vincent, Mr. Stephens, etc. On 10 April, 1848, they proposed to hold a meeting of 200,000 men on Kennington Common, London, to march thence in procession to Westminster, and present a petition to parliament; but only about 20,000 came. The bank and other establishments were fortified by military, preventive measures adopted, and not less than 150,000 persons of all ranks (including Louis Napoleon, afterwards emperor) were voluntarily sworn to act as special constables. The chartists dispersed after slight encounters with the police, and the monster petition, in detached rolls, was sent in cabs to the house of commons. From this time the proceedings of the chartists became insignificant.

Chartreuse, LA GRANDE, chief of the monasteries of the Carthusian order, situated among the rugged mountains near Grenoble, in France, was founded by Bruno of Cologne, about 1084. At the revolution in 1792, the monks were expelled and their valuable library destroyed. They returned to the monastery after the restoration of 1815. In Nov. 1880, they declined to accept indulgence from the decrees for expelling the religious orders from France.

Charts and Maps. Anaximander of Miletus is said to have been the inventor of geographical and celestial charts, about 570 B.C. Modern sea-charts were brought to England by Bartholomew Columbus to illustrate his brother's theory respecting a western continent, 1489. The first tolerably accurate map of England was drawn by George Lilly, who died in 1559. Gerard Mercator published an atlas of maps in 1595; see Mercator. The daily papers published in their columns maps illustrating the wars of 1870-1, 1876-7, etc.

Chassepot Rifle, a modified needle-gun, and a breach-loader (named after its inventor, Alphonse Chassepot), adopted by the French government in 1866. In April, 1867, 10,000 had been issued to the troops. In his report on the battle of Mentana (which see), 3 Nov. 1867, gen. De Failly said, "the chassepot has done wonders." It was generally considered successful in the war, 1870-1. "The range of the chassepot being 1800 paces, and that of the needle-gun only between 600 and 700, the Germans in all their charges had to traverse 1200 paces before their arms could be used to purpose." Many Germans were armed with the chassepot after the surrender of the French army at Sedan, 2 Sept. 1870.

Chastity. The Roman laws justified homicide in defence of one's self or relatives; and our laws justify a woman for killing a man in defence of her chastity; and a husband or a father in taking the life of him who attempts to violate his wife or daughter. In 1000 years from Numa, 710 B.C., to Theodosius, A.D. 394, only eighteen Roman vestals had been condemned for incontinence. See Vestals, Acrra, and Coldingham.

Chat Moss (Lancashire), a peat bog, twelve miles square, in most places so soft as to be incapable of supporting a man or horse, over which George Stephenson, the railway engineer, carried the Liverpool and Manchester railway, after overcoming difficulties considered invincible. The road (literally a floating one) was completed by 1 Jan. 1830, when the first experimental train, drawn by the Rocket locomotive, passed over it; see Bugs.

Châteaudun, an old city, N. C. France, the residence of the heroic Dunois, who died 1468. Here were massacred, 20 July, 1183, about 7000 Brabançons, fanatic mercenaries who had been hired to exterminate the Albigenses by the cardinal Henry, abbot of Clairvaux, in 1181. They had become the scourge of the country, and the "Capuchons" were organized for their destruction. Châteaudun was captured by the Germans after a severe conflict of about nine hours, 18 Oct. 1870. Barricades had been erected in the town, and the Garde Mobile fought bravely. The town was reoccupied by the French, 6 Nov.

Chatham (Kent), a principal station of the royal navy; the dockyard, commenced by Queen Elizabeth, has been recently much extended (1872). The Chatham Chest, for the relief of the wounded and decayed seamen, originally established here by the queen and admirals Drake and Hawkins in 1588, was removed to Greenwich in 1803. On 10 June, 1667, the Dutch fleet, under admiral De Ruyter, sailed up to this town, and burned several men-of-war; but the entrance into the Medway is now defended by Sheerness and other forts, and additional fortifications were made at Chatham. On 8-11 Feb. 1861, a violent outbreak of the convicts was suppressed by the military, and many rioters flogged. About 1000*l.* worth of property was destroyed, and many persons were seriously hurt. New docks and a basin, said to be the largest and finest in the world, opened by Mr. Göschen, 21 June, 1871.

Chatham Administration,* succeeded the first Rockingham administration in Aug. 1766; after several changes, it terminated Dec. 1767; see Grafton.

Earl of Chatham, first minister and lord privy seal.
Duke of Grafton, first lord of the treasury.
Lord Camden, lord chancellor.
Charles Townshend, chancellor of the exchequer.
Earl of Northington, lord president.
Earl of Shelburne and general Conway, secretaries of state.
Sir Charles Sturders (succeeded by Sir Edward Hawke), admiralty.
Marquis of Granby, ordnance.
Lord Hillsborough, first lord of trade.
Viscount Barrington, secretary at war.
Lord North and sir George Cooke, joint paymasters.
Viscount Howe, treasurer of the navy.
Duke of Ancaster, lord de Despensers, etc.

Chatillon (on the Seine, France). Here a congress was held by the four great powers allied against France, at which Caulaincourt attended for Napoleon, 4 Feb. 1814: the negotiations for peace were broken off on 19 March following.

Chattanooga (Tennessee). Here generals Sherman, Thomas, and Hooker (under Grant) defeated the confederate general Bragg, capturing Lookout Mountain (24 Nov.), and storming Missionary Ridge, 25 Nov. 1863. Grant had engaged about 65,000 men; Bragg from 40,000 to 45,000. The national loss was 5616; the confederate about 10,000, of whom 6142 were prisoners.

Chaumont (on the Marne, France), TREATY OF, entered into between Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, 1 March, 1814. This treaty was succeeded by that of Paris, 11 April, by which Napoleon renounced his sovereignty; see Paris.

Chauvinism, a term said to be derived from Chauvin, the principal character in Scribe's "Soldat Laboureur," a veteran soldier of the first empire, filled with intense admiration for Napoleon and for all that belonged to him. Scribe was born 24 Dec. 1794, died 20 Feb. 1861.

Cheap Trains Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, 1844; see Railways.

Cheats were punishable by pillory, imprisonment, and fine, and a rigorous statute was enacted against them in 1542. Persons cheating at play, or winning at any time more than 10*l.* or any valuable thing, were deemed infamous, and were to suffer punishment as in cases of perjury, 9 Anne, 1711.—Blackstone.

Chee-foo Convention, see China, 1876.

Cheese is mentioned by Aristotle, about 350 B.C. It is supposed by Camden and others that the English learned cheese-making from the Romans about the Christian era. Wilts, Gloucester, and Cheshire make vast quantities; the last alone, annually, about 31,000 tons. In 1840 we imported from abroad about 10,000 tons; in 1855, 884,192 cwt.; in 1866, 872,342 cwt.; in 1870, 1,041,281 cwt.; in 1876, 1,531,204 cwt.; in 1879, 1,789,721 cwt. The duty on foreign cheese, producing annually about 50,000*l.*, was taken off in 1860. Large quantities are imported from the United States. The exports of cheese from the United States for 1879 amounted to $12,569,968.

Chelsea (Middlesex). A council held here 27 July, 816.—Nicolas. A theological college here founded by James I. in 1609 was converted by Charles II. in 1682 to an asylum for wounded and superannuated soldiers. The erection was carried on by James II., and completed by William III. in 1690. The projector was sir Stephen Fox, grandfather of the orator C. J. Fox; the architect was sir Christopher Wren; and the cost 150,000*l.* In 1850 there were 70,000 out- and 539 in-pensioners.—The body of the duke of Wellington lay here in state, 10-17 Nov. 1852.—The physic garden of sir Hans Sloane, at Chelsea, was given to the Apothecaries' Company, 1721.—The Chelsea water-works were incorporated 1722.—The first stone of the Military Asylum, Chelsea, was laid by Frederick, duke of York, 19 June, 1801.—The bridge, constructed by Mr. T. Page to connect Chelsea with Battersea Park, was opened March, 1858. The Albert bridge was opened 11 Dec. 1872; both freed from toll, 24 May, 1879. The parliamentary borough of Chelsea, created by the Reform act, 15 Aug. 1867, consists of Chelsea, Kensington, Fulham, and Hammersmith. The Chelsea embankment was opened by the duke and duchess of Edinburgh, 9 May, 1874; see Trials, July, 1870 and 1872. Cremorne public gardens closed, 1877.

Cheltenham (Gloucestershire). Its celebrated mineral spring was discovered in 1718. The King's well was sunk in 1778; and other wells by Mr. P. Thompson in 1806. Magnesian salt was first found in the waters in 1811. The theatre was erected in 1804. Grammar-school and almshouses, endowed by Richard Pates, 1574. Cheltenham was incorporated, 1876.

Chemical Societies. One formed in London in 1780, did not long continue. The present Chemical Society of London was established in 1841; that of Paris in 1857; that of Germany at Berlin, 1867. The Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain formed; professor Edward Frankland first president, 1877; first meeting, 1 Feb. 1878. Chemical Industry Society founded 4 April, 1881.

Chemical Works. Royal commission appointed to inquire into the management of chemical works, to ascertain the effect of gases and vapors given off, and the means of prevention. The commissioners are lord Aberdare, earl Percy, professors Abel, A. Williamson, Roscoe, and others, 18 July, 1876. In their report, issued Aug. 1878, they recommend increased inspection, and more stringent regulations; see Alkalies.

Chemistry was introduced into Spain by the Moors, about 1150. The Egyptians and Chinese claim an early acquaintance with chemistry. The first chemists were the Alchemists (see Alchemy); but chemistry was not a science till the seventeenth century; during which its study was promoted by Bacon, Hooke, Mayow, and Boyle. In the early part of the eighteenth century, Dr. Stephen Hales laid the foundation of Pneumatic Chemistry, and his contemporary Boerhaave combined the study of chemistry with medicine. These were succeeded by Bergman, Stahl, Black, etc. In 1772, Priestley published his researches on air, having discovered the gases oxygen, ammonia, etc.; and thus commenced a new chemical era. He was ably seconded by Cavendish, Scheele, Lavoisier, Chaptal, and others. The nineteenth century opened with the brilliant discoveries of Davy, continued by Dalton, Faraday, Thomson, etc. Organic Chemistry

* William Pitt, earl of Chatham (the "great commoner"), born 15 Nov. 1708, entered parliament in 1735; became secretary of state (virtually the premier) in the Devonshire administration, Nov. 1756; secretary in the Newcastle administration, Jan. 1757. In 1766 he became premier, lord privy seal, and afterwards earl of Chatham, which lord Chesterfield called a full upstairs. He opposed the taxation of the American colonies, but protested against the recognition of their independence, 7 April, 1778, and died 11 May following.

has been very greatly advanced by Berzelius, Liebig, Dumas, Laurent, Hofmann, Cahours, Frankland,* and others, since 1830; see Pharmacy, Electricity, Galvanism. For the analytical processes termed "Spectrum analysis," invented by Kirchhoff and Bunsen (1861), and "Dialysis" (1861), and "Atmolysis" (1863), invented by Mr. T. Graham, see those articles.—The Royal College of Chemistry, Oxford Street, London, was established in 1845 (now at South Kensington)—Henry Watts's great "Dictionary of Chemistry," begun 1863, has supplements. M. Ad. Wurtz's equally great "Dictionnaire de Chimie," 1868.

Cheque Bank, opened in Pall Mall East, 23 July, 1873. It issued cheques for fixed sums (down to 1*l.*) available for paying and transmitting small sums, and is suited for persons not having a banker. The plan, due to Mr. James Hertz, a director, has been modified. He died 23 Feb. 1880.

Cherbourg, the great naval fortress and arsenal of France on the coast of Brittany, about 60 or 70 miles equidistant from Portsmouth and Plymouth. It was captured by our Henry V. in 1418, and lost in 1450. Under the direction of Louis XIV., some works were erected here by the great Vauban, which, with some shipping, etc., were destroyed by the British, 6, 7 Aug. 1758. The works, resumed by Louis XVI., were interrupted by the revolution. The breakwater, commenced in 1783, resumed by Napoleon I. about 1803, and completed in 1813, forms a secure harbor, affording anchorage for nearly the whole navy of France, and protected by strong fortifications. On 4, 5 Aug. 1858, the railway and the Grand Napoleon docks were opened, the latter in the presence of the queen of England and court. The British fleet visited Cherbourg, 15–17 Aug. 1865, receiving much hospitality. Presidents Grévy, Léon Say, and Gambetta visit Cherbourg; launch of a man-of-war, etc., 8–11 Aug. 1880.

Cheriton Down (Hants). Here sir Wm. Waller defeated the royalists under lord Hopton, 29 March, 1644.

Cherry, the Prunus Cerasus (from Cerasus, a city of Pontus, whence the tree was brought by Lucullus to Rome, about 70 B.C.), first planted in Britain, it is said, about 100. Fine kinds were brought from Flanders, in 1540, and planted in Kent.

Cherubusco, BATTLE OF. Cherubusco was a strongly fortified place near the city of Mexico. Towards this the Americans advanced after the battle at Contreras; see Contreras. Santa Anna, who commanded 12,000 men near the walls of the city of Mexico, now advanced, and the whole region became a battle-field. This was on 21 Aug. 1847. Cherubusco was taken, and Santa Anna abandoned the field and fled towards the city. He immediately sent a flag asking for an armistice of three days, preparatory for negotiations for peace. It was granted, but the treacherous Mexican violated the agreement, and hostilities were reopened; see El Molino del Rey and Chapultepec.

Chesapeake. At the mouth of this bay a contest took place between the British admiral Graves and the French admiral De Grasse, aiding the revolted states of America; the former was obliged to retire, 5 Sept. 1781. The Chesapeake and Delaware were blockaded by the British fleet in the American war of 1812, and the bay was, at that period, the scene of great hostilities of various results.

* In 1824 Wöhler produced artificially urea, a body hitherto known only as a product of the animal organism. Since then, acetic acid, alcohol, grape-sugar, various essential oils, similar to those of the pineapple, pear, garlic, etc., have been formed by combinations of the gases oxygen, hydrogen, and carbonic acid. The barrier formed by chemists between organic and inorganic bodies is thus broken down. Indigo artificially formed by Bayer, 1878.

"CHESAPEAKE," an American frigate, commanded by capt. Lawrence (50 guns, 376 men), struck to the Saannon, British frigate (38 guns, 330 men), commanded by capt. Philip Vere Broke, after a severe action of eleven minutes, 1 June, 1813. Eleven minutes elapsed between the firing of the first gun and the boarding, and in four minutes more the Chesapeake was the Saannon's prize. Capt. Lawrence died of his wounds.

Cheshunt College, Herts, founded by Selina, countess of Huntingdon, for the education of ministers of her "connection," Calvinistic Methodists. The college was first opened at Trevecca House, Talgarth, near Brecon, by the countess and George Whitfield, 1768. It was removed to Cheshunt in 1792. The countess died 17 June, 1791.

Chester (England, N. W.), the British Caerleon and the Roman Deva, the station of the twentieth legion, Valeria Victrix, quitted by them about 406. The city wall was first built by Edelfleda, about 908; and Hugh Lupus, the earl, nephew of William I., rebuilt the Saxon castle in 1084, and the abbey of St. Werburgh. Chester was incorporated by Henry III. and made a distinct county. The palatine jurisdiction was abolished by parliament, 23 July, 1830. The SEE, anciently part of Lichfield, one of whose bishops, Peter, removing the seat hither in 1075, occasioned his successors to be styled bishops of Chester; but it was not made a distinct bishopric until Henry VIII. in 1541 raised it to this dignity, and allotted the church of the abbey of St. Werburgh for the cathedral. After extensive repairs, the cathedral was reopened, 25 Jan. 1872. This see is valued in the king's books at 42*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* per annum. Present income 4500*l.*

Chicago, Illinois, United States, a flourishing city settled in 1831; incorporated 1837; population, 1867, about 200,000; in 1880, 503,304.

Chicago was nearly destroyed by fire, occasioned by the upsetting of a paraffine lamp. 8, 9, 10, 11 Oct. 1871
About 250 perished, and 98,500 were rendered destitute.
The loss was reckoned at 290,000,000 dollars. Large sums were collected for relief of the sufferers in London (10,000, in a few hours) and other British cities, as well as in North America. The area of the fire was computed at from three to five miles square, and about 25,000 buildings were destroyed. The heart of the city was composed of old wooden buildings. The city was rebuilt most energetically. 1872-3
Another great fire; many rendered homeless. . . . 14 July, 1874

Chichester (Sussex), built by Cissa, about 540. The cathedral was completed about 1108, burned with the city in 1114, and rebuilt by bishop Seffrid about 1187. The present cathedral was erected during the thirteenth century. The spire fell 20 Feb. 1861; the foundation of a new one was laid 2 May, 1865; completed June, 1866. The cathedral reopened after repairs, 14 Nov. 1867. The bishopric originated thus: Wilfrid, archbishop of York, compelled to flee by Egfrid, king of Northumberland, preached the gospel in this country, and built a church in the Isle of Selsey, about 673. In 681 Selsey became a bishopric, and so continued until it was removed to Chichester; then called Cissan-Cæster, from its builder, Cissa; by Stigand, about 1082. This see has yielded to the church two saints, and to the nation three lord chancellors. It is valued in the king's books at 677*l*. 1*s*. 3*d*. per annum. Present income, 4200*l*.

Chickahominy Battles, see Fairoaks, and United States, June, 1862.

Chickamauga Creek, BATTLE OF, fought 19 and 20 Sept. 1863. Bragg (Confederate) crossed Chickamauga Creek on the 18th, and the next day the two armies came into collision by detachments. At night the road, for the possession of which the two armies had fought all day, was held by the National troops. On the 20th, Longstreet and Hood (Confederates) broke through Rosecranz's (National) right, creating utter confusion in that part of the field and compelling Rosecranz to retire to Chattanooga. Thomas, in command of the National left, held his ground, however, and, forming a new line, succeeded in repulsing the Confederate assaults during the rest of the day. At night the National forces retired to Rossville, and on the 21st to Chattanooga.

Chicory, the wild endive, or Cichorium Intybus of Linnaeus, grows wild in calcareous soils. It was for many years so largely mixed with coffee in England that it became a matter of serious complaint, the loss of revenue being estimated at 100,000*l*. a year. An excise order was issued interdicting the mixture of chicory with coffee, 3 Aug. 1852. The admixture, however, has since been permitted, provided the word "chicory" be plainly printed on each parcel sold. In 1860 a duty of 3*s*. per cwt. was put upon English-grown chicory until April, 1861; after that date to be 5*s*. 6*d*. per cwt.

Children. Many ancient nations exposed their infants—the Egyptians on the banks of rivers, and the Greeks on highways—when they could not support or educate them; in such cases, they were protected by the state. The old custom of English parents selling their children to the Irish for slaves was prohibited by Canute, about 1017; see Foundling, Factory Acts, and Infanticide.

Chili (South America), discovered by Diego de Almagro, one of the conquerors of Peru, 1535. When Almagro crossed the Cordilleras, the natives, regarding the Spaniards on their first visit as allied to the Divinity, collected for them gold and silver amounting to 290,000 ducats, a present which led to the subsequent cruelties and rapacity of the invaders. Chili was subdued, but not wholly, in 1546. Population in 1865, 1,068,447; in 1875, 2,068,447; 1878, 2,136,724.

Chillianwallah, BATTLE OF, India, between the Sikh forces in considerable strength and the British commanded by lord (afterwards viscount) Gough, fought 13 Jan. 1849. The Sikhs were completely routed, but the loss of the British was very severe: 26 officers were killed and 66 wounded, and 731 rank and file killed, and 1446 wounded. The Sikh loss was 3000 killed and 4000 wounded.* On 21 Feb. lord Gough attacked the Sikh army, under Shere Singh, in its position at Goojerat, with complete success; and the whole of the enemy's camp fell into the hands of the British.

Chiltern Hundreds (viz. Burnham, Desborough, and Stoke), an estate of the crown on the chain of chalk hills that pass from east to west through the middle of Buckinghamshire. The stewardship is a nominal office, with a salary of 25s., conferred on members of parliament when they wish to vacate their seats. The strict legality of the practice is questioned.

Chimborazo, highest point in the Andes, South America (altitude 21,068 feet), was ascended by Humboldt, 23 June, 1802; by Boussingault and Hall, 16 Dec. 1831; by Edward Whymper, 3 July, 1880; see Andes.

Chimney-tax, see Hearth.

Chimneys. Chafing-dishes were in use previous to the invention of chimneys, which were first introduced into these countries in 1200, when they were confined to the kitchen and large hall. The family sat round a stove, the funnel of which passed through the ceiling, in 1300. Chimneys were general in domestic architecture in 1310. At the chemical works, Glasgow, is a chimney (there termed a stalk) 420 feet in height; the height of the monument in London being 202 feet; of St. Paul's, 404 feet.

Act to regulate chimney-sweeping, 28 Geo. III. 1789
 The chimney-sweeping machine was invented by Smart, 1805
 A statute regulating the trade, the apprenticeship of children, the construction of flues, preventing calling "sweep" in the streets, etc., passed, 1834
 By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 85 (1840), it is not lawful for master-sweepers to take apprentices under sixteen years of age; and no individual under twenty-one to ascend a chimney after, 1 July, 1842
 Enforcement of this law made more stringent, 1864
 New chimney sweepers' act passed, 11 Aug. 1875
 Joseph Glass, inventor of the sweeping-machine now in general use, not patented, died, 29 Jan. 1868

China (T'ING), the "Celestial Empire," in Eastern Asia, for which the Chinese annals claim an antiquity of from 80,000 to 100,000 years B.C., is said to have commenced about 2500 B.C.; by others to have been founded by Fohi, supposed to be the Noah of the Bible, 2240 B.C. We are told that the Chinese were acute astronomers in the reign of Yao, 2357 B.C. Towards the close of the seventh century B.C., the history of China becomes more distinct. Twenty-two dynasties have reigned, including the present. The population of the empire of China was estimated at 190,348,228 in 1757, at 414,607,000 in 1860, and at 434,600,000 in 1877.

† The emperor Taou-Kwang, who died 25 Feb. 1850, during the latter part of his reign became liberal in his views, and favored the introduction of European arts; but his son, the late emperor, a rash and narrow-minded prince, quickly departed from his father's wise policy, and adopted reactionary measures, particularly against English influence. An insurrection broke out in consequence, Aug. 1850, and quickly became of alarming importance. The insurgents at first proposed only to expel the Tartars; but in March, 1851, a pretender was announced among them, first by the name of Tien-tai (Celestial Virtue), but afterwards assuming other names. He is stated to have been a native of Quang-si, of obscure origin, but to have obtained some literary knowledge at Canton about 1835, and to have become acquainted at that time with the principles of Christianity from a Chinese Christian named Leang-afa, and also from the missionary Roberts in 1844. He announced himself as the restorer of the worship of the true God, Shang-ti, and derived much of his dogmas from the Bible. He declared himself the monarch of all beneath the sky, the true lord of China (and thus of all the world), the brother of Jesus, and the second son of God, and demanded universal submission. He made overtures for alliance to lord Elgin in Nov. 1850. His followers are termed Taiping, "princes of peace," a title utterly belied by their atrocious deeds. The rebellion was virtually terminated, 18 July, 1864, by the capture of Nankin, the suicide of Tien-tai, and the execution of the military leaders.

‡ It was boarded by the Chinese officers, 12 men out of the crew of 14 being carried off and the national ensign taken down. Sir J. Bowring, governor of Hong-Kong, being compelled to resort to hostilities, applied to India and Ceylon for troops. On 3 March, 1857, the house of commons, by a majority of 19, censured sir John for the "violent measures" he had pursued. The ministry (who took his part) dissolved the parliament, but obtained a large majority in the new one.

§ He died peacefully at Calcutta, 9 April, 1859. He is said to have ordered the beheading of about 100,000 rebels.

Chivalry arose out of the feudal system in the latter part of the eighth century (chevalier, or knight, being derived from the caballarius, the equipped feudal tenant on horseback). From the twelfth to the fifteenth century it tended to refine manners. The knight swore to accomplish the duties of his profession, as the champion of God and the ladies, to speak the truth, to maintain the right, to protect the distressed, to practise courtesy, to fulfil obligations, and to vindicate in every perilous adventure his honor and character. Chivalry expired with the feudal system; see Knighthood and Tournaments. By letters-patent of James I., the earl-marshal of England had "the like jurisdiction in the courts of chivalry, when the office of lord high constable was vacant, as this latter and the marshal did jointly exercise," 1623.

Chloral Hydrate, a combination of chlorine and alcohol, discovered by Liebig, which produces deep sleep, but not insensibility to pain. This property was discovered by Oscar Liebreich, and reported to the French Academy of Sciences, 16 Aug. 1869. In Oct. 1874 it was said to be sometimes deleterious.

Chloralum, or chloride of alumina, a compound of chlorine and alumina, a new antiseptic disinfectant, invented by Dr. Gamgee about 1870. It is said to be safe and efficacious, and useful in medicine for gargles, washing wounds, etc.

Chlorine (Greek χλωρός, pale green), a gas first obtained by Scheele in 1774, by treating manganese with muriatic (hydrochloric) acid. Sir H. Davy, in 1810, stated this gas to be an element, and named it chlorine. Combined with sodium it forms common salt (chloride of sodium), and combined with lime it forms the bleaching powder and disinfectant, chloride of lime; see Bleaching. In 1823 Faraday condensed chlorine into a liquid.

The supposed dissociation of oxygen from chlorine by heat, by V. and H. Meyer of Zurich, was announced Aug. 1879. Afterwards chlorine was proved to exist in two similar states at high temperatures.

Chloroform (the ter-chloride of the hypothetical radical formyl) is a compound of carbon, hydrogen, and chlorine, and was made from alcohol, water, and bleaching powder. It was discovered by Mr. Samuel Guthrie of Sackett's Harbor, New York, in 1831, and independently by Liebig in 1832. Its composition was determined by Dumas in 1834. A committee of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society reported that the rate of mortality had been in no degree increased by the use of anæsthetics, July, 1864.

Chlorozone, a new disinfectant, introduced 1873.

Chobham Common, in Surrey. A military camp was formed here on 14 June, 1853, by a force between 8000 and 10,000 strong. Only one serious case of misconduct was reported during all the time.

Chocolate, made of the cocoa berry, introduced into Europe (from Mexico and the Brazils) about 1520, was sold in the London coffee-houses soon after their establishment, 1650.

Choczim (Bessarabia, S. Russia). Here the Turks were totally defeated by John Sobieski, king of Poland, 11 Nov. 1673; and by the Russians, 30 April and 13 July, 1769.

Choir. This was separated from the nave of the church in the time of Constantine. The choral service was first used in England at Canterbury, 677; see Chanting.

Cholera Morbus (Asiatic cholera) was described by Garcia del Huerto, a physician of Goa, about 1560. It appeared in India in 1774, and at other times, and became endemic in Lower Bengal in 1817, whence it gradually spread, till it reached Russia in 1830, and Germany in 1831, carrying off more than 900,000 persons in 1829-30. In England and Wales in 1848-9, 53,293 persons died of cholera, and in 1854, 20,097.

Christ's Hospital (the Blue-coat school) was established by Edward VI. 1553, on the site of the Gray Friars' monastery. A mathematical ward was founded by Charles II. 1672. The Times ward was founded in 1841. Large portions of the edifice having fallen into decay, it was rebuilt: in 1822 a new infirmary was completed, and in 1825 (25 April) the duke of York laid the first stone of the magnificent new hall. On 24 Sept. 1854, the master, Dr. Jacob, in a sermon in the church of the hospital, censured the system of education and the general administration of the establishment, and many improvements have since been made. Rev. G. C. Bell successor of Dr. Jacob, 12 Aug. 1868-76. The subordinate school at Hertford, for 416 younger boys and 80 girls, was founded in 1863.—Annual income (1870) about 70,000*l*. 800 boys in London; 200 boys and 20 girls at Hertford. The removal of the school to the country negatived by the governors, 26 April, 1870. The proposal that the buildings and ground should be purchased by the Mid-London Railway Company for 600,000*l*. was not carried out. The Charity Commissioners' draft scheme for the reformed administration of the hospital was issued Aug. 1880.

Christmas Day, 25 Dec. (from Christ, and the Saxon mæsse, signifying the mass and a feast), a festival in commemoration of the nativity of Christ, said to have been first kept 98; and ordered to be held as a solemn feast, by pope Telesphorus, about 137.† In the eastern church, Christmas and the Epiphany, 6 Jan. (which see), are deemed but one and the same feast. The holy and mistletoe used at Christmas are said to be the remains of the religious observances of the Druids; see Anno Domini.

Christmas Island, in the Pacific Ocean, so named by capt. Cook, who landed here on Christmas day, 1777. He had passed Christmas day at Christmas Sound, 1774. On the shore of Christmas Harbor, visited by him in 1776, a man found a piece of parchment inscribed: "Ludorico XV. Galliarum rege, et d. Boynes regi u secretis ad res maritimas, annis 1772 et 1773." On the other side capt. Cook wrote: "Naves Resolution et Discovery de rege Magnæ Britannia, Dec. 1776," and placed it in a bottle.

Christopher's, St. (or St. Kitt's), a West India island, discovered in 1493 by Columbus, who gave it his own name. Settled by the English and French, 1623 or 1626. Ceded to England by the peace of Utrecht, 1713. Taken by the French in 1782, but restored the next year. The town of Basseterre suffered from fires, 3 Sept. 1776; also 3 and 4 July, 1867, when the cathedral and nearly all the town were destroyed. About 200 lives lost by inundations, 11, 12 Jan. 1880; hurricane, violent rains, etc.

Chromium (Greek, χρῶμα, color), a rare metal, discovered by Vauquelin in 1797. It is found combined with iron and lead, and forms the coloring matter of the emerald.

Chromo-Lithography, see Printing in Colors.

Chronicles. The earliest are those of the Jews, Chinese, and Hindoos. In Scripture there are two "Books of Chronicles"; see Bible. Collections of the British chronicles have been published by Camden, Gale, etc., since 1602; in the present century by the English Historical Society, etc. In 1858, the publication of "Chronicles and Memorials of Great Britain and Ireland during the Middle Ages," commenced under the direction of the Master of the Rolls (still going on, 1881); in 1845 Macray's "Manual of the British Historians" was published.

Chronology (the science of time) has for its object the arrangement and exhibition of the various events of the history of the world in the order of their succession, and the ascertaining the intervals between them; see Eras and Epochs. Valuable works on the subject are L'Art de Vérifier les Dates, compiled by the Benedictines (1783-1820). Playfair's Chronology, 1784; Blair's Chronology, 1753 (new editions by sir H. Ellis in 1844, and by Mr. Rosse in 1856). The Oxford Chronological Tables, 1838. Sir Harris Nicholas's Chronology of History, 1833; new edition, 1852. Hales's Chronology, 2d edition, 1830; Woodward and Cates's Encyclopedia of Chronology, 1872; Mr. H. Fynes-Clinton's Fasti Hellenici and Fasti Romani (1824-50).

Chronometer, see Clocks and Harrison.

Chronoscope, an apparatus invented by professor Wheatstone in 1840, to measure small intervals of time. It has been applied to the velocity of projectiles and of the electric current. A chronoscope was invented by Pouillet, in 1844, and by others since. Capt. Andrew Noble (engaged by sir William Armstrong) invented an apparatus for determining the velocity of a projectile in a gun; a second of time is divided into millionths, and the electric spark is employed in recording the rate of the passage. The apparatus was exhibited at Newcastle-on-Tyne in Aug. 1869, and in London in April, 1870.

Chrysanthemums were introduced into England from China, about 1790; and many varieties since.

Chrysopolis, or SCUTARI.

Chunar, or CHUNARGHUR (N.W. India), taken by the British, 1763, and ceded to them, 1768. Here was concluded a treaty between the nabob of Oude and governor Hastings, by which the nabob was relieved of his debts to the East India Company, on condition of his seizing the property of the begums, his mother and grandmother, and delivering it up to the English, 19

* It is, traditionally, said that Gregory the Great, shortly before his elevation to the papal chair, passing through the slave-market at Rome, and perceiving some beautiful children set up for sale, inquired about their country, and finding they were English pagans, he is said to have cried out, "Non Angli sed Angeli ferrent, si essent Christiani;" that is, "They would not be English, but angels, if they were Christians." From that time he ardently desired to convert the nation, and ordered a monk named Austin, or Augustin, and others, to undertake the mission to Britain in the year 596.

† Diocletian, the Roman emperor, keeping his court at Nicomedia, being informed that the Christians were assembled on this day in great multitudes to celebrate Christ's nativity, ordered the doors to be shut, and the church to be set on fire, and 600 perished in the burning pile. This was the commencement of the tenth persecution, which lasted ten years, 303.

Sept. 1781. This treaty enabled the nabob to take the lands of Fyzoola Khan, a Rohilla chief, who had settled at Rampoor, under guarantee of the English. The nabob presented to Mr. Hastings 100,000*l.*; see Hastings.

Church (probably derived from the Greek κυριακός, pertaining to the Lord, Kýpoc) signifies both a collected body of Christians and the place where they meet. In the New Testament, it signifies "congregation," in the original ἐκκλησία. Christian architecture commenced with Constantine, who erected at Rome churches called basilicas (from the Greek βασιλείς, a king); St. Peter's about 330. His successors erected others, and adopted the heathen temples as places of worship. Several very ancient churches exist in Britain and Ireland. See Architecture; Choir and Chanting; Rome, Modern; Popes.

Church and Stage Guild was formed in 1880 to promote morality and temperance by the agency of theatrical performances.

Church Association, formed to counteract popery and ritualism, 1865.

Church Building. The society for promoting the enlargement, building, and repairing of churches and chapels, was established 1818, and incorporated 1828. A commission for building churches in populous places, appointed in 1820, was incorporated with the ecclesiastical commission about 1856.

Church Congresses meet annually since 1861. See under Church of England.

Church Defence Institution, founded in 1859; the archbishop of Canterbury president. It does not meddle with doctrines.

Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), passed 7 Aug. 1840, enables bishops to issue commissions of inquiry, and, on conviction, to inhibit clergymen from performing service, etc.

Church of England.* The following are leading facts in her history: for details, refer to separate articles; see Clergy and Free Church. In Sept. 1880, the archbishop of Canterbury said that he was in communion with 162 bishops.

 Warm discussion upon the revision of the liturgy. May, 1875

Church of North America was established in Nov. 1784, when bishop Seabury, chosen by the churches in Connecticut, was consecrated in Scotland. The first convention was held at Philadelphia in 1785. On 4 Feb. 1787, two more American bishops were consecrated at Lambeth. In 1851 there were 37 bishops; see Pan-Anglican Synod.

After much discussion, for several years, the church convention passed a stringent canon against ritualism, 27 Oct. 1874.

Church of Scotland, see Bishops in Scotland. On the abolition of Episcopacy, in 1638, Presbyterianism became the established religion. Its formulary of faith, said to have been compiled by John Knox, in 1560, was approved by the parliament and ratified in 1567, finally settled by an act of the Scottish senate in 1696, and secured by the treaty of union with England in 1707; see Discipline, Patronage, and Bishops. The church is regulated by four courts—the general assembly, the synod, the presbytery, and kirk sessions; see Presbyterians. For important secessions, see Burghers (1732), and Free Church (1843).

The first general assembly of the church was held 20 Dec. 1560.

The general assembly constitutes the highest ecclesiastical court in the kingdom; it meets annually in Edinburgh in May, and sits about ten days. It consists of a grand commissioner, appointed by the sovereign, and delegates from presbyteries, royal boroughs, and universities, some being laymen. To this court all appeals from the inferior ecclesiastical courts lie, and its decision is final.

Patronage was abolished after 1 Jan. 1875, by act passed 7 Aug. 1874.

Church Services were ordered by pope Vitellianus to be read in Latin, 663; by queen Elizabeth, in 1558, to be read in English.

Churching of Women is the act of returning thanks in the church by women after childbirth. It began about 214.—Wheatley. See Purification.

Church-rates. The maintaining the church in repair belongs to the parishioners, who have the sole power of taxing themselves for the expense when assembled in vestry. The enforcement of payment, which is continually disputed by dissenters and others, belonged to the ecclesiastical courts. Many attempts were made to abolish church-rates before Mr. Gladstone's "Compulsory Church-rate Abolition" bill passed, 31 July, 1868.

Church-rate Abolition for Scotland repealed in the Commons (204-143). 11 July, 1877

Church-wardens, officers of the church, appointed by the first canon of the synod of London in 1127. Overseers in every parish were also appointed by the same body, and they continue now nearly as then constituted. —Johnson's Canons. Church-wardens, by the canons of 1603, are to be chosen annually.

Ciborium, in early Christian times, was a protection to the altar-table, first a tabernacle, and afterwards a baldachin over the altar, and also a canopy used at solemn processions. Ciborium also means the vessel in which the eucharist is reserved.

Cider (Zider, German), when first made in England, was called wine, about 1284. The earl of Manchester, when ambassador in France, is said to have passed off cider for wine. It was subjected to the excise in 1763 et seq. The duty was taken off in 1830. Many orchards were planted in Herefordshire by lord Scudamore, ambassador from Charles I. to France. John Philips published his poem "Cider" in 1706. The Newark cider, made at Newark, New Jersey, U. S., is of very superior quality, and much of it is sold as champagne.

Cilicia, in Asia Minor, partook of the fortunes of that country. It became a Roman province about 64 B.C., and was conquered by the Turks A.D. 1387.

Cimbri, a Teutonic race from Jutland, invaded the Roman empire about 120 B.C. They defeated the Romans, under Cneius Papirius Carbo, 113 B.C.; under the consul Marcus Silanus, 109 B.C., and under Cæpio Manlius, at Arausio, on the banks of the Rhine, where 80,000 Romans were slain, 105 B.C. Their allies, the Teutones, were defeated by Marius in two battles at Aquæ Sextiæ (Aix) in Gaul; 200,000 were killed, and 70,000 made prisoners, 102 B.C. The Cimbri were defeated by Marius and Catulus, at Campus Raudius, when about to enter Italy; 120,000 were killed, and 60,000 taken prisoners, 101 B.C. They were afterwards absorbed into the Teutones or Saxons.

Cimento (Italian, experiment). The "Accademia del Cimento," at Florence, held its first meeting for making scientific experiments, 18 June, 1657. It was patronized by Ferdinand, grand-duke of Tuscany. The Royal Society of London was founded in 1660, and the Academy of Sciences at Paris in 1666. The Nuovo Cimento, a scientific periodical, published at Pisa, began in 1855.

Cinchona, or CHINCHONA, see Jesuit's bark.

Cincinnati, an organization formed in 1783 by the officers of the American army. The first general meeting after the organization was held at Philadelphia, in May, 1784, when amendments to the constitution were submitted to the state societies and ratified by them. At the second general meeting, 1787, Washington was chosen president-general, and he was re-elected every three years while he lived. The society was bitterly opposed, as tending to the establishment of an hereditary military aristocracy, and the state societies of Connecticut, Delaware, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Virginia, and Georgia were dissolved about 1804. The parent society and six of the state organizations still exist.

Cinnamon, a species of laurel, is mentioned among the perfumes of the sanctuary (Exod. xxx. 23), 1491 B.C. It was found in the American forests by don Ulloa, 1736; was cultivated in Jamaica and Dominica, 1788; and is now grown in Ceylon.

Cinque Ports, on the south coast of England, were originally six (hence the name)—Dover, Hastings, Hythe, Romney, and Sandwich; Winchelsea and Rye were afterwards added.—Jeake. Their jurisdiction was vested in barons, called wardens, for the better security of the coast, these ports being nearest to France, and considered the keys of the kingdom; said to have been instituted by William I. in 1078.—Rapin. The latest lord-wardens: the duke of Wellington, 1828-52; the marquis of Dalhousie, 1852-60; lord Palmerston, 1861-65; earl Granville, appointed Dec. 1865. Their peculiar jurisdiction was abolished in 1855.

Cinque-cento (five hundred); ter cento, etc.; see note to article Italy.

Cintra (Portugal). Here was signed an agreement on 22 Aug. 1808, between the French and English the day after the battle of Vimeira. As it contained the bases of the convention signed on 30 Aug. following, it has been termed the convention of Cintra. By it Junot and his army were permitted to evacuate Portugal free, in British ships. The convention was publicly condemned, and a court of inquiry was held at Chelsea, which exonerated the British commanders. Both Wellington and Napoleon justified sir Hew Dalrymple.

Cipher, a secret manner of writing. Julius Cæsar and Augustus when writing secret despatches are said to have employed the second or third letter instead of the first, and the same sequence with regard to the others. This cipher was in use till the reign of Sixtus IV. (1471-84), when the secret was divulged by Leon Battista Alberti, and a new sort of cipher sprang up. The father of Venetian cipher was Zuan Soro, who flourished about 1516.—Rusdon Brown. See Cryptograph.

Cipher Despatches. The result of the presidential election of 1876 in the United States depended upon the electoral votes of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida, and for a considerable time the votes of these states were in dispute. Mr. Hayes could be elected only with the votes of all three of the states named, while the vote of any one of them was sufficient for the election of Mr. Tilden. Pending the result, a number of despatches in cipher passed between Mr. Tilden's nearest friends and certain persons in the South. When these were translated and published in the New York Tribune, 1877, they pointed so directly to attempted bribery on the part of Mr. Tilden's friends, that a great scandal arose, and Mr. Tilden publicly disclaimed all knowledge of the despatches.

Circassia (Asia, on N. side of the Caucasus). The Circassians, said to be descended from the Albanians, were unsubdued, even by Timour. In the sixteenth century they acknowledged the authority of the czar Ivan II. of Russia, and about 1745 the princes of Kabarda took oaths of fealty. Many Circassians became Mahometans in the eighteenth century.

Circensian Games were combats in the Roman circus (at first in honor of Consus, the god of councils, but afterwards of Jupiter, Neptune, Juno, and Minerva), said to have been instituted by Evander, and established at Rome, 732 B.C. by Romulus. Tarquin named them Circensian; their celebration continued from 4 to 12 Sept.

Circle. The quadrature, or ratio of the diameter of the circle to its circumference, has exercised the ingenuity of mathematicians of all ages. Archimedes, about 221 B.C., gave it as 7 to 22; Abraham Sharp (1717) as 1 to 3 and 72 decimals; and Lagny (1719) as 1 to 8 and 122 decimals.

Circles OF GERMANY (formed by Maximilian I. about 1500, to distinguish the members of the diet of the empire) were, in 1512, Franconia, Bavaria, Upper Rhine, Suabia, Westphalia, and Lower Saxony; in 1789, Austria, Burgundy, Lower Rhine, the Palatinate, Upper Saxony, and Brandenburg were added. In 1804 these divisions were annulled by the establishment of the Confederation of the Rhine, in 1806 (which see).

Circuits IN ENGLAND were divided into three, and three justices were appointed to each, 1176. They were afterwards divided into four, with five justices to each division, 1180.—Rapin. They have been frequently altered. England and Wales were formerly divided into eight—each travelled in spring and summer for the trial of civil and criminal cases; the larger towns are visited in winter for trials of criminals only; this is called "going the circuit." The circuits were settled by order in council, 5 Feb. 1876. There are monthly sessions for the city of London and county of Middlesex.

Circular Iron-clads. The design is attributed to the Russian admiral Popoff; one of these, named after himself, was launched at the port of Nicolaiëff, 7 Oct. 1875. The admiral stated that he derived the idea from the works and views of Mr. E. J. Reed, late constructor of the British navy, who has expressed his approbation of the admiral's works.

Circulating Library. Stationers lent books on hire in the middle ages. The public circulating library in England, opened by Samuel Fancourt, a dissenting minister of Salisbury, about 1740, failed; but similar institutions at Bath and in London succeeded, and others were established throughout the kingdom. There was a circulating library at Crane court, London, in 1748, of which a catalogue in two vols. was published.—No books can be taken from the British Museum except for judicial purposes, but the libraries of the Royal Society and the principal scientific societies, except that of the Royal Institution, London, are circulating.—The London Library (circulating), which was founded 24 June, 1840, is of great value to literary men.—Of the subscription libraries belonging to individuals, that founded by Mr. C. E. Mudie, in New Oxford street, is the most remarkable for the large quantity and good quality of the books: several hundreds, sometimes thousands, of copies of a new work being in circulation. It began in 1842, and grew into celebrity in Dec. 1848, when the first two volumes of Macaulay's "History of England" were published, for which there was an unprecedented demand, supplied by this library. The hall, having the walls covered with shelves filled with new books, was opened in Dec. 1860. The "Circulating Library Company" was founded in Jan. 1862, and other companies since. The Boston Public Library, the largest collection of books in the United States, except that of the Congressional Library, was organized in 1852, and its building was delivered to the trustees 1 Jan. 1858. It is an absolutely free, circulating library.

Circulation of the Blood, see Blood.

Circumcision (instituted 1897 B.C.) was the seal of the covenant made by God with Abraham. It was practised by the ancient Egyptians, and is still by the Copts and some Oriental nations. The Festival of the Circumcision (of Christ), originally the octave of Christmas, is mentioned about 487. It was introduced into the liturgy in 1550.

Circumnavigators. Among the most daring human enterprises at the period when it was first attempted, was the circumnavigation of the earth, in 1519–22.

Circus (Greek, kirkoc). There were eight (some say ten) buildings of this kind at Rome; the largest, the Circus Maximus, was built by the elder Tarquin, 605 B.C. It was an oval figure: length, three stadia and a half, or more than three English furlongs; breadth, 960 Roman feet. It was enlarged by Julius Cæsar so as to seat 150,000 persons, and was rebuilt by Augustus. Julius Cæsar introduced into it large canals of water, which could be quickly covered with vessels, and represent a sea fight.—Pliny. See Amphitheatres and Factions.

French in May, 1797, from the Cispadane and Transpadane republics, acknowledged by the emperor of Germany by the treaty of Campo Formio (which see), 17 Oct. following. It received a new constitution in Sept. 1798; was remodelled, and named the Italian republic, with Napoleon Bonaparte president, 1802; and merged into the kingdom of Italy in March, 1805; see Italy.

Cispadane Republic, with the Transpadane republic, merged into the Cisalpine republic, Oct. 1797.

Cistercians (the order of Cîteaux), a powerful order of monks founded about 1098 by Robert, a Benedictine, abbot of Molesme, named from Cîteaux, in France, the site of the first convent, near the end of the eleventh century. The monks observed silence, abstained from flesh, lay on straw, and wore neither shoes nor shirts. They were reformed by St. Bernard; see Bernardines.

Citate. The Russian general Gortschakoff, intending to storm Kalafat, threw up redoubts at Citate, close to the Danube, which were stormed by the Turks under Omer Pacha, 6 Jan. 1854. The fighting continued on the 7th, 8th, and 9th, when the Russians were compelled to retire to their former position at Krajowa, having lost 1500 killed and 2000 wounded. The loss of the Turks was estimated at 338 killed and 700 wounded.

Citizen. It was not lawful to scourge a citizen of Rome.—Livy. In England a citizen is a person who is free of a city, or who doth carry on a trade therein.—Camden. Various privileges have been conferred on citizens as freemen in several reigns.—The wives of citizens of London (not being aldermen's wives, nor gentlewomen by descent) were obliged to wear miniver caps, being white woollen knit three-cornered, with the peaks projecting three or four inches beyond their foreheads; aldermen's wives made them of velvet, 1 Eliz. 1558.—Stow. On 10 Oct. 1792, the convention decreed that "citoyen" and "citoyenne" should be the only titles in France.

In the United States all male persons over the age of 21, except foreigners not naturalized, are citizens. Before the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth articles of amendment to the constitution, proclaimed 20 July, 1868, and 30 March, 1869, citizenship was restricted to white men. Every citizen of the United States is endowed with the suffrage, unless disfranchised for crime.

City (Latin, civitas; French, cité; Italian, città). The word has been used in England only since the Conquest, when London was called Londonburgh. Cities were first incorporated 1079. A town corporate is called a city when made the seat of a bishop and having a cathedral church.—Camden. Truro and St. Albans were made cities in 1877, having become bishoprics.

City of London School, established by parliament in 1834 (based on an endowment by John Carpenter in 1442), was opened first in Honey lane. The foundation of the new buildings on the Victoria Embankment was laid 14 Oct. 1880.

City Road, from London to Islington, was projected by Mr. Dingley, and cut out about 1780.

Ciudad Rodrigo, a strong fortified town in Spain invested by the French, 11 June, 1810, and surrendered to them 10 July. It remained in their possession until it was stormed by the British, under Wellington, 19 Jan. 1812.

Civil Club (now meeting at the New Corn Exchange Tavern, Mark lane), was established 19 Nov. 1669, for the purpose of promoting fellowship, mutual assistance, and the revival of trade after the interruption to business in consequence of the fire, Sept. 1666.

Only one person of the same trade or profession can be a member of this club, and the members pledge themselves to give "preference to each other in their respective callings." The club meets monthly, and the members dine together four times a year. Its officials are a treasurer, stewards, auditors, a secretary (all merchants of London), and a chaplain.

Civil Law, see Codes. Civil law was restored in Italy, Germany, etc., 1127.—Blair. It was introduced into England by Theobald, a Norman abbot, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, in 1138. It is now used in the spiritual courts only, and in maritime affairs; see Doctors' Commons and Laws.

Civil List. This now comprehends the revenue awarded to the kings of England in lieu of their ancient hereditary income. The entire revenue of Elizabeth was not more than 600,000*l.*, and that of Charles I. was about 800,000*l.* After the revolution, a civil-list revenue was settled on the new king and queen of 700,000*l.* (in 1660), the parliament taking into its own hands the support of the forces both maritime and military. The civil list of George II. was increased to 800,000*l.*; and that of George III., in the 55th year of his reign, was 1,000,000*l.*

In 1831, the civil list of the sovereign was fixed at 810,000*l.*, and in Dec. 1837, the civil list of the queen was fixed at 385,000*l.*

Prince Albert obtained an exclusive sum from parliament of 30,000*l.* per annum. . . . 7 Feb. 1840

Sir H. Parnell's motion for inquiry into the civil list led to the resignation of the Wellington administration. . . . 15 Nov. 1830

A select committee was appointed by the house of commons for the purpose. . . . 2 Feb. 1830

Civil Procedure Act, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, passed 15 Aug. 1879. It abolishes outlawry in civil proceedings, etc.

Civil Service. Nearly 17,000 persons were employed in this service under the direction of the treasury, and the home, foreign, colonial, post, and revenue offices, etc. In 1855, a commission reported most unfavorably on the existing system of appointments, and on 21 May commissioners were appointed to examine into the qualifications of the candidates, who report annually. By an order of council, 4 June, 1870, the system of competitive examination was made general after 1 Oct. 1870. The civil service superannuation act passed in April, 1859. Civil service for the year (ending 31 March) 1855 cost 7,735,515*l.*; 1865, 10,205,413*l.*; 1867, 10,523,019*l.*; 1871, 13,176,659*l.*; 1877 (estimate), 15,779,779*l.*; 1880, 15,155,522*l.*; 1881, 15,432,442*l.* A select committee to inquire into this expenditure voted 16 Feb. 1878; issued its report June, 1874. Important changes made, by order in council, 12 Feb. 1875.

Civil Service Reform in the United States. The years 1866-71 witnessed in the United States the climax of the patronage system. For example, during that period, there were 1578 removals in the New York custom-house, or more than one removal for each secular day. These and other concomitant abuses forced president Grant to ask congress, in 1873, to aid him in reforming the civil service. The consequence was the law of 3 March, 1873, under which the president appointed a civil service commission; and the competitive examinations for entrance into, and for promotion in certain branches of the service were first instituted by the commission 1 Jan. 1872. In March, 1871, however, col. Silas W. Burt, then deputy naval officer, had, on his own responsibility, made the first trial of the competitive examination system in the civil service of the United States, for the purpose of reorganizing the naval office. That trial was eminently successful. The competitive examinations were greatly opposed by politicians, and in two years from their institution congress refused to appropriate the $25,000 needed for carrying them on. President Grant repeatedly urged that appropriations for the examinations should be voted, and in April, 1874, he sent a special message to the same effect, but in vain. 31 Aug. 1874, president Grant issued Executive Order No. 4, as follows: "It appearing to me, from their trial at Washington and at the city of New York, that the further extension of the civil-service rules will promote the efficiency of the public service, it is ordered that such rules be and they are hereby extended to the several Federal offices at the city and in the custom-house district of Boston, and that the proper measures be taken for carrying this order into effect." The rules were, however, not very stringently carried out, and patronage had great force. In 1877 president Hayes appointed the Jay commission, consisting of the hon. John Jay (chairman), Mr. Lawrence Tumure, of New York, and Mr. J. H. Robinson, of the Department of Justice, Washington. This commission made an elaborate report which caused the removal of collector Arthur and naval officer Cornell. On 6 March, 1879, the executive order was issued making competitive examinations the means of entrance to the clerical offices of the New York custom-house. Since that date the order has been enforced.

Clan Na Gael (brotherhood of Gaels), an Irish secret society to replace the Fenians, said to have been formed in 1861.

Clans are said to have arisen in Scotland, in the reign of king Malcolm II., about 1006. The legal power of the chiefs and other remains of heritable jurisdiction were abolished in Scotland, and liberty was granted to clansmen in 1747, in consequence of the rebellion of 1745. The following is a list of all the known clans of Scotland, with the badge of distinction anciently worn by each. The chief of each clan wears two eagle's feathers in his bonnet, in addition to the badge.—Chambers. A history of the clans by Wm. Buchanan was published in 1776.

Clapham Sect, a name given to the evangelical party in the Church of England, first by the rev. Sydney Smith, in the latter part of the eighteenth century. The rev. Henry Venn was vicar of Clapham, and several of its eminent members lived there. The sect included Wm. Willerforce, Zachary Macaulay (father of the historian), and the rev. W. Romaine.

Memoirs of some appear in sir James Stephen's "Ecclesiastical Biography," 1849.

Clare was the first place in Ireland since 1689 that elected a Roman Catholic M.P.; see Roman Catholics. At the election, held at Ennis, the county town, Mr. Daniel O'Connell was returned, 5 July, 1828. He did not sit till after the passing of the Catholic Emancipation Act in 1829, being re-elected 30 July, 1829.

CLARE AND CLARENCE (Suffolk). Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester, is said to have seated here a monastery of the order of Friars Eremites, the first of this kind of mendicants who came to England, 1248.—Tanner. Lionel, third son of Edward III., becoming possessed of the honor of Clare by marriage, was created duke of Clarence. The title has ever since belonged to a branch of the royal family.

DUKES OF CLARENCE

1362. Lionel, born 1333, died 1369; see York.

1411. Thomas (second son of Henry IV.), born 1389, killed at Baugé, 1421.

1461. George (brother of Edward IV.), murdered, 1478.

1789. William (third son of George III.), afterwards king William IV.

CLARE, NUNS OF ST., a sisterhood, called Minoresses, founded in Italy by St. Clare and St. Francis d'Assisi, about 1212. They were also called Urbanists, their rule having been modified by pope Urban IV., who died 1264. This order settled in France about 1260, and in England, in the Minories without Aldgate, London, about 1293, by Blanche, queen of Navarre, wife of Edmund, earl of Lancaster, brother of Edward I. At the suppression, the site was granted to the bishopric of Bath and Wells, 1589.—Tanner.

Claremont (Surrey), the residence of the princess Charlotte (daughter of the prince-regent, afterwards George IV., married to prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, 2 May, 1816): here she died in childbirth, 6 Nov. 1817. The house was built by sir John Vanbrugh, and was the seat successively of the earl of Clare, of lord Clive, lord Galloway, and the earl of Tyrconnel. It was purchased of Mr. Ellis by government for 65,000*l.* for the prince and princess of Saxe-Coburg; and the former, the late king of Belgium, assigned it to prince Albert in 1840. The exiled royal family of France took up their residence at Claremont, 4 March, 1848; and the king, Louis Philippe, died there, 29 Aug. 1850.

Clarenceux, the second king-at-arms, said to have been nominated by Thomas, son of Henry IV., created duke of Clarence, 1411. His duty was to arrange the funerals of all the lower nobility, as baronets, knights, esquires, and gentlemen, on the south side of the Trent, from whence he is also called sur-roy, or south-roy.

Clarendon, CONSTITUTIONS OF, were enacted at a council held 25 Jan. 1164, at Clarendon, in Wiltshire, to retrench the power of the clergy. They led to Becket's quarrel with Henry II., were annulled by the pope, and abandoned by the king, April, 1174.

I. All suits concerning advowsons to be determined in civil courts.

II. The clergy accused of any crime to be tried by civil judges.

III. No person of any rank whatever to be permitted to leave the realm without the royal license.

IV. Laics not to be accused in spiritual courts, except by legal and reputable promoters and witnesses.

V. No chief tenant of the crown to be excommunicated, nor his lands put under interdict.

VI. Revenues of vacant sees to belong to the king.

VII. Goods forfeited to the crown not to be protected in churches.

VIII. Sons of villeins not to be ordained clerks without the consent of their lord.

IX. Bishops to be regarded as barons, and be subjected to the burdens belonging to that rank.

X. Churches belonging to the king's see not to be granted in perpetuity against his will.

XI. Excommunicated persons not to be bound to give security for continuing in their abode.

XII. No inhabitant in demesne to be excommunicated for non-appearance in a spiritual court.

XIII. If any tenant in capite should refuse subinfeudation to spiritual courts, the case to be referred to the king.

XIV. The clergy no longer to pretend to the right of enforcing debts contracted by oath or promise.

XV. Causes between laymen and ecclesiastics to be determined by a jury.

XVI. Appeals to be ultimately carried to the king, and no further without his consent.

Clarendon Press, OXFORD. The building was erected by sir John Vanbrugh, in 1711-13, the expense being defrayed out of the profits of lord Clarendon's "History of the Rebellion," the copyright of which was given to the university by his son. The original building was converted into a museum, lecture-rooms, etc., and a new printing-office erected by Blome and Robertson, 1825-30.

Clarion, said by Spanish writers to have been invented by the Moors in Spain, about 800, was at first a trumpet, serving as a treble to trumpets sounding tenor and bass.—Ashe.

Clarionet, or CLARINET, a wind-instrument of the reed kind, said to have been invented by Johann Christoph Denner, in Nuremberg, about 1690.

Classici. The name was first used by Tullius Servius (the sixth king of ancient Rome), in making divisions of the Roman people, 573 B.C. The first of the six classes were called classici, by way of eminence, and hence authors of the first rank (especially Greek and Latin) came to be called classici.

Clearing-house. In 1775 a building in Lombard street was set apart for the use of bankers, in which they might exchange drafts, bills, and securities, and thereby save labor and curtail the amount of floating cash requisite to meet the settlement of the different houses, if effected singly. By means of transfer tickets, transactions to the amount of millions daily are settled without the intervention of a bank-note. In 1861 the clearing-house was used by 117 companies; and in May, 1864, it was joined by the Bank of England. In the year ending 30 April, 1868, 3,257,411,000*l.* passed through the clearing-house; 30 April, 1873, 6,003,385,000*l.*; 1877-8, 5,066,533,000*l.*; 1880-1, 5,909,989,000*l.* Amount in the week ending 27 Sept. 1875, about 105,867,000*l.*; 27 Sept. 1876, about 73,135,000*l.* Sir John Lubbock is now hon. secretary, 1881. The Railway clearing-house in Seymour street, near Euston square, established in 1842, is regulated by an act passed in 1850. In 1868 it regulated 13,000 miles of railways. The New York clearing-house was established 1 Oct. 1853. It was the first clearing-house in the United States.

Clementines, apocryphal pieces, attributed to Clement Romanus, a contemporary of St. Paul, and said to have succeeded St. Peter as bishop of Rome. He died 102.—Nicéron. Also the decretals of pope Clement V., who died 1314, published by his successor.—Bowyer. Also Augustine monks, each of whom having been a superior nine years, then merged into a common monk.—CLEMENTINES were the adherents of Robert, son of the count of Geneva, who took the title of Clement VII. on the death of Gregory XI., 1378; and URBANISTS, those of pope Urban VI. Christendom was divided by their claims: France, Castile, Scotland, etc., adhering to Clement; Rome, Italy, and England, to Urban. The schism ended in 1409, when Alexander V. was elected pope, and his rivals resigned; see Anti-popes.

Clergy (from the Greek κληρος, a lot or inheritance) in the first century were termed presbyters, elders, or bishops and deacons. The bishops (ἐπίσκοποι or overseers), elected from the presbyters, in the second century assumed higher functions (about 330), and, under Constantine, obtained the recognition and protection of the secular power. Under the Lombard and Norman-French kings in the seventh and eighth centuries, the clergy began to possess temporal power as owners of lands; and after the establishment of monachism a distinction was made between the regular clergy, who lived apart from the world, in accordance with a regula, or rule, and the secular (worldly) or beneficed clergy. The English clergy write clerk after their names in legal documents; see Church of England (note) and Bishops.

The clergy were first styled clerks, owing to the judges being chosen, after the Norman custom, from the sacred order, and the officers being clergy: this gave them that denomination, which they keep to this day.—Blackstone.

As the Druids kept the keys of their religion and of letters, so did the priests keep both these to themselves; they alone make profession of letters, and a man of letters was called a clerk, and hence learning went by the name of clerkship.—Pasquier.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY, Privilegium Clericale, arose in the regard paid by Christian princes to the church, and consisted of: 1st, an exemption of places consecrated to religious duties from criminal arrests, which was the foundation of sanctuaries; 2d, exemption of the persons of clergymen from criminal process before the secular judge, in particular cases, which was the original meaning of the privilegium clericale. The benefit of clergy was afterwards extended to every one who could read; and it was enacted that there should be a prerogative allowed to the clergy, that if any man who could read were to be condemned to death, the bishop of the diocese might, if he would, claim him as a clerk, and dispose of him in some places of the clergy as he might deem meet. The ordinary gave the prisoner at the bar a Latin book, in a black Gothic character, from which to read a verse or two; and if the ordinary said, "Legit ut clericus" ("He reads like a clerk"), the offender was only burned in the hand; otherwise he suffered death (3 Edw. I. 1274).

The privilege was restricted by Henry VII. in 1489, and abolished, with respect to murderers and other great criminals, by Henry VIII., 1512.—Stow.

The reading was discontinued by 5 Anne, c. 6 (1706).

Benefit of Clergy was wholly repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28 (1827).

CLERGY CHARITIES

William Asheton, an eminent theological writer, was the first proposer of a plan to provide for the families of deceased clergy. He died Sept. 1711.—Watts's Life of Asheton.

Festival of the "Sons of the Clergy," held annually at St. Paul's cathedral, instituted about 1655; from it sprang the charity called the "Sons of the Clergy" (Clergy Orphan and Widow Corporation), incorporated 1 July, 1678.

Clergy Orphan Corporation, 1749.

Friend of the Clergy Corporation, 1849.

St. John's Foundation School for Sons of Poor Clergy, 1852.

Poor Clergy Relief Corporation, established 1856; incorporated 1867.

There are several other charities for relatives of the clergy; see Bromley College.

The clergy prevented from being members of parliament by 41 Geo. III. c. 63 (1801).

A bill to repeal this act was lost in the commons (110-101), 11 May, 1881.

Clerical Disabilities. An act passed 9 Aug. 1870, relieves persons who have been admitted priests or deacons of certain clerical disabilities upon their resigning their ecclesiastical offices and preferments, and declares them incapable of officiating henceforward. Up to 31 Dec. 1873, fifty had resigned.

Clerical Subscription Act, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, passed 5 July, 1865, simplified and modified the oaths to be taken by the clergy when ordained.

Clerk, see Clergy.

Clerkenwell, a parish, N.E. London, so called from a well (fons clericorum) in Ray street, where the parish clerks occasionally acted mystery-plays: once before Richard II. in 1390. Hunt's political meetings in 1817 were held in Spa-fields in this parish. In St. John's parish are the remains of the priory of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Clerkenwell prison was built in 1615, in lieu of the noted prison called the Cage, which was taken down in 1614, the then Bridewell having been found insufficient. The prison called the House of Detention, erected in 1775, was rebuilt in 1818; again 1844. For the explosion here, see Fenians, Dec. 1867. At Clerkenwell-close formerly stood the house of Oliver Cromwell, where some suppose the death-warrant of Charles I. was signed, Jan. 1649.

Clermont (France). Here was held the council under pope Urban II. in 1095, in which the first crusade against the infidels was determined upon, and Godfrey of Bouillon appointed to command it. In this council the name of pope is said to have been first given to the head of the Roman Catholic church, exclusively of the bishops who used previously to assume the title. Philip I. of France was (a second time) excommunicated by this assembly.—Hénauld.

Cleves (N.E. Germany). Rutger, count of Cleves, lived at the beginning of the eleventh century. Adolphus, count of Mark, was made duke of Cleves by the emperor Sigismund, 1417. John William, duke of Cleves, Berg, Juliers, etc., died without issue, 25 March, 1609, which led to a war of succession. Eventually Cleves was assigned to the elector of Brandenburg in 1666; seized by the French in 1757; restored at the peace in 1763, and now forms part of the Prussian dominions.

Clifton Suspension-bridge, over the Avon, connecting Gloucestershire and Somersetshire, constructed of the removed Hungerford bridge, was completed in Oct. and opened 8 Dec. 1864. It is said to have the largest span (702 feet) of any chain bridge in the world. In 1753 alderman Vick of Bristol bequeathed 1000*l.* to accumulate for the erection of a bridge over the Avon. In 1831 Brunel began one, which was abandoned after the expenditure of 45,000*l.*

Climacteric, the term applied to certain periods of time in a man's life (multiples of 7 or 9), in which it is affirmed notable alterations in the health and constitution of a person happen, and expose him to imminent dangers. Cotgrave says, "Every 7th or 9th or 63d year of a man's life, all very dangerous, but the last most." The grand climacteric is 63. Hippocrates is said to have referred to these periods, 383 B.C.

Cloaca Maxima, the chief of the celebrated sewers at Rome, the construction of which is attributed to king Tarquinius Priscus (588 B.C.) and his successors.

Clock. The clepsydra, or water-clock, was introduced at Rome about 158 B.C. by Scipio Nasica. Toothed wheels were applied to them by Ctesibius, about 140 B.C. Clocks said to have been found by Cæsar on invading Britain, 55 B.C. The only clock supposed to be then in the world was sent by pope Paul I. to Pepin, king of France, A.D. 760. Pacificus, archdeacon of Genoa, invented one in the ninth century. Originally the wheels were three feet in diameter. The earliest complete clock of which there is any certain record was made by a Saracen mechanic in the thirteenth century. Alfred is said to have measured time by wax tapers, and to have used lanterns to defend them from the wind, about 887.

Clogher (Ireland). St. Macartin, a disciple of St. Patrick, fixed a bishopric at Clogher, where he also built an abbey "in the street before the royal seat of the kings of Ergal." He died in 506. Clogher takes its name from a golden stone, from which, in times of paganism, the devil used to pronounce juggling answers, like the oracles of Apollo Pythius.—Sir James Ware. In 1041 the cathedral was built anew, and dedicated to its founder. Clogher merged, on the death of its last prelate (Dr. Tottenham), into the archiepiscopal see of Armagh, by the act of 1833.

Clonfert (Ireland). St. Brendan founded an abbey at Clonfert in 558; his life is extant in jingling monkish metre in the Cottonian library at Westminster. In his time the cathedral, famous in ancient days for its seven altars, was erected; and Colgan makes St. Brendan its founder and the first bishop; but it is said in the "Ulster Annals," under the year 571, "Mena, bishop of Clonfert-Brenain, went to rest." Clonfert, in Irish, signifies a wonderful den, or retirement. In 1839 the see merged into that of Killaloe; see Bishops.

Clontarf (near Dublin), the site of a battle fought on Good-Friday, 23 April, 1014, between the Irish and Danes, the former headed by Bryan Boroiuhe, monarch of Ireland, who defeated the invaders, after a long and bloody engagement, was wounded, and soon afterwards died. His son Murchard also fell, with many of the nobility; 13,000 Danes are said to have perished in the battle.

Closterseven (Hanover), CONVENTION OF, was entered into 8 Sept. 1757, between the duke of Cumberland, third son of George II., hardly pressed, and the duke of Richelieu, commander of the French. By it 38,000 Hanoverians laid down their arms, and were dispersed. The treaty was disavowed by the king; the duke resigned all his commands, and the convention was soon broken.

Cloud, Str., a palace near Paris, named from prince Clodoald, or Cloud, who became a monk there in 533, after the murder of his brothers, and died in 560. The palace was built in the sixteenth century, and in it Henry II. was assassinated by Clement, 2 Aug. 1589. This palace, long the property of the dukes of Orleans, was bought by Marie Antoinette in 1785. It was a favorite residence of the empress Josephine, of Charles X. and his family, and of the emperor Napoleon III. It was burned during the siege of Paris, having been fired upon by the French themselves, 13 Oct. 1870.

Clouds consist of minute particles of water, often in a frozen state, floating in the air. In 1803, Mr. Luke Howard published his classification of clouds, now generally adopted, consisting of three primary forms—cirrus, cumulus, and stratus; three compounds of these forms; and the nimbus, or black rain-clouds (cumulo-cirro-stratus). A new edition of Howard's "Essay on the Clouds" appeared in 1865.

Cloveshoo (now Cliff), Kent. Here was held an important council of nobility and clergy concerning the government and discipline of the church, Sept. 747; and others were held here, 800, 803, 822, 824.

Cloyne (S. Ireland), a bishopric, founded in the sixth century by St. Coleman, was in 1431 united to that of Cork, and so continued for 200 years. It was united with that of Cork and Ross, 1834; see Bishops.

Clubmen, associations founded in the southern and western counties of England to restrain the excesses of the armies during the civil wars, 1642-9. They professed neutrality, but inclined towards the king, and were considered enemies by his opponents.

Clubs originally consisted of a small number of persons of kindred tastes and pursuits, who met together at stated times for social intercourse. The club at the Mermaid tavern, established about the end of the sixteenth century, consisted of Raleigh, Shakespeare, and others. Ben Jonson set up a club at the Devil tavern. Addison, Steele, and others frequently met at Button's coffee-house, as described in the Spectator. The present London clubs, some comprising 500, others about 1500 members, possess handsome, luxuriously furnished edifices in or near Pall Mall. The members obtain choice viands and wines at moderate charges, and many clubs possess excellent libraries, particularly the Athenæum (which see). The annual payment varies from 6*l*. to 11*l*. 11*s*.; the entrance-fee from 9*l*. 9*s*. to 31*l*. 11*s*. The following are the principal clubs; several are described in separate articles:

Clubs, FRENCH. The first arose about 1782. They were essentially political, and greatly concerned in the Revolution. The Club Breton became the celebrated Club des Jacobins, and the Club des Cordeliers comprised among its members Danton and Camille Desmoulins. From these two came the Mountain party, which overthrew the Girondists in 1793, and fell, in its turn, in 1794. The clubs disappeared with the Directory in 1799. They were revived in 1848 in considerable numbers, but did not attain to their former eminence, and were suppressed by decrees, 22 June, 1849, and 6 June, 1850.—Bouillet.

Club-foot, a deformity due to the shortening of one or more of the muscles, although attempted to be relieved by Lorenz in 1784, by cutting the tendo Achillis was not effectually cured till 1831, when Stromeyer, of Erlangen, cured Dr. Little by dividing the tendons of the contracted muscles with a very thin knife.

Clugny, or CLUNY, ABBEY OF, in France, formerly most magnificent, founded by Benedictines, under the abbot Bern, about 910, and sustained afterwards by William, duke of Berry and Aquitaine. English foundations for Cluniac monks were instituted soon after.

Clyde and Forth Wall was built by Agricola, 84.—The Forth and Clyde CANAL was commenced by Mr. Smeaton, 10 July, 1768, and was opened 28 July, 1790. It forms a communication between the seas on the eastern and western coasts of Scotland.

Cnidus, in Caria, Asia Minor: near here, Conon the Athenian defeated the Lacedæmonian fleet under Peisander, 394 B.C.

Coach (from coche, Spanish). Beckmann states that Charles of Anjou's queen entered Naples in a caretta (about 1282). Under Francis I. there were but two in Paris, one belonging to the queen, the other to Diana, the natural daughter of Henry II. There were but three in Paris in 1550; and Henry IV. had one without straps or springs. John de Laval de Bois-Dauphin set up a coach on account of his enormous bulk. The first coach seen in England was about 1553. Coaches were introduced by Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel, in 1580.—Stow. A bill was brought into parliament to prevent the effeminacy of men riding in coaches, 48 Eliz. 1601.—Carte. Repealed 1625. The coach of the duke of Buckingham had six horses, that of the earl of Northumberland eight, 1619. The coach-tax commenced in 1747. Horace Walpole says that the present royal state-coach (first used 16 Nov. 1762) cost 752*l*. The lord mayor's old state-coach was not used 9 Nov. 1867; see Cur, Carriages, Chariots, Hackney-coaches, Mail-coaches, etc. G. Thrupp's "History of Coaches" published 1877.

Coal.* It is contended, with much seeming truth, that coal, although not mentioned by the Romans in their notices of Britain, was yet in use by the ancient Britons.—Brandt. Henry III. is said to have granted a license to dig coals near Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1234; some say earlier, and others in 1239. Sea-coal was prohibited from being used in and near London, as being "prejudicial to human health;" and even smiths were obliged to burn wood, 1273.—Stow. In 1806 the gentry petitioned against its use. Coal was first made an article of trade from Newcastle to London, 4 Rich. II. 1381.—Rymer's Fædera. Notwithstanding the many previous complaints against coal as a public nuisance, it was at length generally burned in London in 1400; but it was not in common use in England until the reign of Charles I. 1625. Coal was brought to Dublin from Newry in 1742. Anthracite coal, which is produced chiefly in Pennsylvania, U. S., was first used as fuel by two Connecticut blacksmiths, named Gore, in 1768-9; first used as domestic fuel by judge Jesse Fell, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., in 1808. Except the diamond, anthracite coal is the purest form of carbon known.

United States, 41,752,609 tons obtained in..... 1872

Mr. Sopwith, in 1855, computed the annual product of the coal-mines of Durham and Northumberland at 14 million tons: 6 millions for London, 2½ millions exported, 2½ millions for coke, 1 million for colliery engines, etc., and 2 millions for local consumption.

By a stipulation in the commercial treaty of 1860, in consequence of the French government greatly reducing the duty on imported coal, the British government (it is thought by many imprudently) engaged to lay no duty on exported coal for ten years. In 1859 about 7,000,000 tons of British coals were exported, of which 1,391,009 tons went to France.

A commission (consisting of the duke of Argyll, sir R. I. Murchison, Dr. John Percy, professor Ramsay, and others) appointed to investigate into the probable quantity Coast Guard. In 1856, the raising and governing of this body was transferred to the admiralty. A coast brigade of artillery was established in Nov. 1859.—COAST VOLUNTEERS, see under Navy of England.

Coast Survey of the United States. The project of a complete survey, conducted upon a uniform system, and extending over the whole coast, was first proposed by the late professor Patterson in 1806. It combined three objects—the astronomical determination of prominent points, a triangulation to connect these points, and a hydrographic survey based upon this triangulation. Mr. Gallatin, then secretary of the treasury, encouraged the project, and obtained in writing the opinions of learned men as to the best mode of executing it. He selected the plan of operations recommended by Mr. Hauser, the first superintendent of the Coast Survey. The work was begun in 1817, and some small results were attained. It is only, however, since the year 1832 that the survey of the coast has been in steady and active operation. During this long interval of neglect on the part of the government, the coasting trade and foreign commerce of the country have been chiefly indebted to the indefatigable labors of those distinguished hydrographers the Messrs. Blunt, of New York (both father and son), for the means of safe navigation. In 1844, the first year of Dr. Bach's superintendence, nine states on the Atlantic seaboard shared in the benefits conferred by the coast survey; in 1845, thirteen states; in 1846, fifteen; and in 1847, eighteen states. Since that time the work has been extended to the Pacific coast, and to Alaska and through the Great Lakes, under the superintendence of prof. Benjamin Peirce. He was succeeded by capt. Carlisle P. Patterson, by whom the work was carried into the interior. It is now being extended across the continent. The present superintendent is prof. J. E. Hilgard, long connected with the service as general manager. Capt. Patterson died in 1882.

Coca, a powerful medicinal agent existing in the Erythroxylon coca, a South American plant; men taking a little of this are enabled to endure hard labor without any food for six or seven days and nights. Dr. Mantegazza's prize essay in German was published at Vienna in 1849.

Coccolana, a small sect founded by John Cocceius, of Bremen, in the seventeenth century. He held, among other opinions, that of a visible reign of Christ in this world, after a general conversion of the Jews and all other people to the Christian faith. He died in 1668.

Cocheral (near Evreux, N.W. France). Here Bertrand du Guesclin defeated the king of Navarre, and took prisoner the capital de Buch, 16 May, 1364.

Cochin (India), held by the Portuguese, 1503; by the Dutch, 1663; by Hyder Ali, 1776; taken by the British, 1795, ceded to them, 1814.—COCHIN CHINA, see ANNAM.

Cochineal Insect (Coccus cacti), deriving its color from feeding on the cactus, became known to the Spaniards soon after their conquest of Mexico in 1519. Cochineal was brought to Europe about 1523, but was not known in Italy in 1548, although the art of dyeing then flourished there. In 1858 it was cultivated successfully in Tezcuicte, the vines having failed through disease.

200,000 lbs. of cochineal were imported into England in 1880; 1,061,776 lbs. in 1845; 2,860,000 lbs. in 1830; 3,064,976 lbs. in 1859; 47,790 cwt. in 1870; and 82,094 cwt. in 1877; 27,962 cwt. in 1879. Duty repealed 1846.

Cooker's Arithmetic. Edward Cocker, an eminent penman, born 1631, died 1677, compiled a book which first appeared in 1677, edited by John Hawkins.

Cock-fighting, practised by the Greeks, was brought by the Romans into England. William Fitz-Stephen, in the reign of Henry II., describes cock-fighting as the sport of schoolboys on Shrove-Tuesday. It was prohibited by Edward III. 1365; by Henry VIII. and by Cromwell, 1653, and latterly in 1849. Part of the site of Drury-lane theatre was a cockpit in the reign of James I.; and the cockpit at Whitehall was erected by Charles II. Formerly there was a Cockpit Royal in St. James's Park; but the governors of Christ's Hospital would not renew the lease for the building.* Cock-fighting is now forbidden by law. On 22 April, 1865, 34 persons were fined at Marlborough-street police-office for being present at a cock-fight. It was popular in New York, 1873.

Cock-lane Ghost, an imposition practised by William Parsons, his wife, and daughter, by means of a female ventriloquist, during 1760 and 1761, at No. 33 Cock-lane, London, was at length detected, and the parents were condemned to the pillory and imprisonment, 10 July, 1762.

Cocoa, or CACAO, the kernel or seed of Theobroma cacao (Linn.), was introduced into this country shortly after the discovery of Mexico, where it is an article of diet. From cocoa is produced chocolate. The cocoa imported into the United Kingdom, chiefly from the British West Indies and Guiana, was, in 1849, 1,969,477 lbs.; in 1855, 7,343,456 lbs.; in 1861, 9,060,288 lbs.; in 1866, 10,308,298 lbs.; in 1870, 14,738,950 lbs.; in 1876, 20,443,591 lbs.; in 1877, 17,056,964 lbs.; in 1879, 26,156,788 lbs., about half retained for home consumption.

Cocoa-nut Tree (Cocos sacifera, Linn.) supplies the Indians with almost all they need, as bread, water, wine, vinegar, brandy, milk, oil, honey, sugar, needles, clothes, thread, cups, spoons, basins, baskets, paper, masts for ships, sails, cordage, nails, covering for their houses, etc.—RAY. In Sept. 1829, Mr. Soames patented his mode of procuring stearine and elaine from cocoa-nut oil. It is said that 32 tons of candles have been made in a month from these materials at the Belmont works, Lambeth.

Codes, see LAWS. Alfrenus Varus, the civilian, first collected the Roman laws about 66 a.c.; and Servius Sulpicius, the civilian, embodied them about 58 a.c. The Gregorian and Hermogenian codes were published A.D. 290; the Theodosian code commenced by order of Theodosius II. in 429; and published for the Eastern empire in 438. In 447 he transmitted to Valentinian his new constitutions, promulgated as the law of the West in 448. The celebrated code of the emperor Justinian in 529—a digest from this last made in 533; see Basiliens. Alfred's code, a selection from existing laws, is the foundation of the common-law of England, 887.—THE CODE NAPOLÉON, the civil code of France, was promulgated from 1803 to 1810. The emperor considered it his most enduring monument. It was prepared under his supervision by the most eminent jurists, from the 400 systems previously existing, and has been adopted by other countries.

* Mr. Ardross, a gentleman of large fortune and great hospitality, who was almost unrivalled in the splendor of his equipages, had a favorite cock upon which he had won many profitable matches. The last wager he laid upon this cock he lost, which so enraged him that, in a fit of passion, he thrust the bird into the fire. A delirious fever, the result of his rage and intemperance, in three days put an end to his life. He died at Tottenham, near London, 4 April, 1768.

Cod-liver Oil was recommended as a remedy for chronic rheumatism by Dr. Percival in 1782, and for diseases of the lungs about 1833. De Jongh's treatise on cod-liver oil was published in Latin, 1844; in English, 1849.

Coercion Bill, see Ireland, 1881.

Cœur de Lion, or THE LION-HEARTED, a surname given to Richard I. of England, on account of his courage, about 1192; and also to Louis VIII. of France, who signalized himself in the crusades, and in his wars against England, about 1223.

Coffee. The tree was conveyed from Mocha, in Arabia, to Holland about 1616, and carried to the West Indies in 1726. First cultivated at Surinam by the Dutch, 1718. The culture was encouraged in the plantations about 1732, and the British and French colonies now grow coffee abundantly. Its use as a beverage is traced to the Persians. It came into great repute in Arabia Felix, about 1454; and passed thence into Egypt and Syria, and thence (in 1511) to Constantinople, where a coffee-house was opened in 1551. M. Thevenot, the traveller, first brought it to France, 1662.—Chambers. See Cafeine.

Cofferer of the Household, formerly an officer of state, and a member of the privy council, who had special charge of the other officers of the household. Sir Henry Cocks was cofferer to queen Elizabeth. In 1782 the office was suppressed.

Coffins. Athenian heroes were buried in coffins of cedar, owing to its aromatic and incorruptible qualities.—Thucydides. Coffins of marble and stone were used by the Romans. Alexander is said to have been buried in one of gold; and glass coffins have been found in England.—Gough. The earliest record of wooden coffins among us is that of the burial of king Arthur in an entire trunk of oak hollowed, 542.—Asser. Patent coffins were invented in 1796; air-tight metallic coffins advertised at Birmingham in 1861.

Cohort. A division of the Roman army consisting of about 420 men, with 300 cavalry, divided into centuries. It was the sixth part of a legion.

Coif. The sergeant's coif was originally an iron skull-cap, worn by knights under their helmets. The coif was introduced before 1259, and was used to hide the tonsure of such renegade clergymen as chose to remain advocates in the secular courts, notwithstanding their prohibition by canon.—Blackstone. The coif was at first a thin linen cover gathered together in the form of a skull or helmet, the material being afterwards changed into white silk, and the form eventually into the black patch at the top of the forensic wig, which is now the distinguishing mark of the degree of sergeant-at-law.—Foss's Lives of the Judges.

Coimbra was made the capital of Portugal by Alfonso, the first king, 1139. The only Portuguese university was transferred from Lisbon to Coimbra in 1308; finally settled in 1527. In a convent here, Alfonso IV. caused Inez de Castro, at first mistress and afterwards wife of his son Pedro, to be cruelly murdered in 1355.

Coin. Homer speaks of brass money, 1184 B.C. The invention of coin is ascribed to the Lydians, whose money was of gold and silver. Both were coined by Pheidon, tyrant of Argos, about 862 B.C. Money was coined at Rome under Servius Tullius, about 573 B.C. The most ancient known coins are Macedonian, of the fifth century B.C. Brass money only was in use at Rome previously to 269 B.C. (when Fabius Pictor coined silver). Gold was coined 206 B.C. Iron money was used in Sparta, and iron and tin in Britain.—Dufresnoy. In the earlier days of Rome the heads were those of deities, or of those who had received divine honors. Julius Caesar first obtained permission of the senate to place his portrait on the coins, and the example was soon followed. The Britons and Saxons coined silver.—Rev. Roger Ruding's "Annals of the Coinage of Great Britain," published 1817-40.—The gold and silver coinage in the world is about 250,000,000L silver and 150,000,000L gold.—Times, 25 June, 1852. See Gold, Silver, Copper, and Guinea, and other coins under names. An international conference relative to a universal system of coinage met at Paris in 1867; and a royal commission was appointed in London, Feb. 1868.

The first coinage was at Camalodunum, or Colchester. Coin was made sterling in 1216, before which time rents were mostly paid in kind, and money was found only in the coffers of the barons.—Stow.

Coinage in the UNITED STATES. The earliest coinage for America was made in 1612 for the Virginia Company. Massachusetts made the first colonial coinage in 1652. Vermont and Connecticut coined copper in 1785, and New Jersey and Massachusetts followed suit in 1786. In 1785 congress adopted Jefferson's plan for a decimal coinage, and in 1786 the following coins were decided upon—(Gold: eagle (£10) and half-eagle; Silver: dollar, half-dollar, quarter-dollar, dime, and half-dime; Copper: cent, half-cent.

The total coinage of the United States for the fiscal year ending 30 June, 1881, was: gold, $78,733,984; silver, $27,649,966.75.

The total coinage of the United States from 1793 to 1881 has been: gold, $1,211,837,136; silver, $319,983,403.65; base metals, $13,638,277.

Coining. Originally the metal was placed between two steel dies, and struck by a hammer. In 1553, a mill, invented by Antoine Brucher, introduced into England, 1562. An engine invented by Balancier, 1617. Great improvements effected by Boulton and Watt, at Soho, 1788. The erection of the Mint machinery, London, began 1811. The machinery was reorganized in 1869.

Colchester (Essex), Camelodunum, a Roman station, obtained its first charter from Richard I., 1189. Its sixteen churches and all its buildings sustained great damage at the ten weeks' siege, June-Aug. 1648. Two of its defenders, sir George Lisle and sir Charles Lucas, were tried and shot after surrendering. The baize manufacture was established here, 1660.—Anderson. The railway to London was opened in 1843.

Cold. The extremes of heat and cold are found to produce the same perceptions on the skin; and when mercury is frozen at forty degrees below zero, the sensation is the same as touching red-hot iron. During the hard frost in 1740, a palace of ice was built at St. Petersburg.—Greig. Quicksilver was frozen hard at Moscow, 13 Jan. 1810. On 25 Dec. 1796, the thermometer was 16° below zero. On 3 Jan. 1854, the thermometer marked 4° below zero, Fahrenheit; on 25 Dec. 1860, it fell in some places to 18° and in others to 15° below zero; at Torquay, Devon, 20° below zero. From 23 to 30 Dec. the cold was excessive. On 4 Jan. 1867, the thermometer stood at 3° below zero at Hammersmith and Hornsey, near London; on 7 Jan., at 55° above; see Frosts, Ice, Congelation, Regelation.

Very cold, Nov. 1878-May, 1879, and Nov. 1879-Feb. 1880. The Dec. of 1879 said to be the coldest since 1796. Severe frost, 13 Jan.-26 Jan. 1881 (many deaths of exposed persons).

Temperature said to have been on 19 Jan. 13° Fahr. at Stepney, London; 5 degrees below zero (Fahr.) at Newcastle and Perth on Jan. 1881.

Coldingham, near Berwick, is celebrated for the heroism of its nuns, who, on the attack of the Danes, in order to preserve their chastity, cut off their noses and lips. The Danes burned them all, with the abbess Ebba, in their monastery, 870.

Coldstream Guards. General Monk, before marching from Scotland into England to restore Charles II., raised this regiment at Coldstream, at the confluence of the Leet and Tweed, 1660. For its services in suppressing Venner's insurrection in 1661, it was not disbanded, but constituted the 2d regiment of foot-guards.

Colenso Controversy, see Church of England, 1862-8.

Collin, see Kolin.

Coliseum, or COLOSSEUM, at Rome, an elliptical amphitheatre, of which the external diameter is 1641 Italian feet, supposed to have been able to contain 80,000 spectators of the fights with wild beasts, and other sports, in the arena. It was erected between 75 (some say 77) and 80, by the emperors Vespasian and Titus, at an expense sufficient to have built a metropolis. Its remains are very imposing. Excavations are proceeding, 1874-81.

Collar, a very ancient ornament. The Roman hero Titus Manlius slew a gigantic Gaul in single combat, and put his torques (twisted chain or collar) on his own neck, and was hence surnamed Torquatus, 361 B.C. A collar is part of the ensigns of the order of knighthood. That of the order of the Garter is described, and its wearing enjoined, in the statutes of Henry VIII., 24 April, 1522; but a collar had been previously worn.—Ashmole.

The collar of SS. was adopted by Henry IV., and became a Lancastrian badge; some consider the letters stand for "sovereign," in reference to his claim to the crown. Some writers consider SS. to be in honor of St. Simplicius, a martyr. The order of the Collar or Necklace (or Annonciada) was instituted by Amadeus VI. of Savoy, about 1360.

Collects, short prayers, very ancient, introduced into the Roman service by pope Gelasius, about 493, and into the English liturgy in 1548. The king of England, coming into Normandy, appointed a collect for the relief of the Holy Land, 1166.—Rupin.

Colleges. University education preceded the erection of colleges, which were munificent foundations to relieve the students from the expense of living at lodging-houses and at inns. Collegiate or academic degrees are said to have been first conferred at the university of Paris, 1140; but some authorities say not before 1215. In England, it is contended that the date is much higher, and some hold that Bede obtained a degree formally at Cambridge, and John de Beverley at Oxford, and that they were the first doctors of these universities; see Cambridge, Oxford, Aberdeen, Queen's Colleges, Heralds, Working-men's Colleges, etc.

Colleges in the United States. The first established was at Cambridge, Mass., in 1638, endowed by John Harvard, and bearing his name. It is now the most liberally endowed institution of learning in the United States. The second was William and Mary, at Williamsburg, in Virginia, in 1693. The third was Yale, at New Haven, in 1700. Fourth, College of New Jersey, at Princeton, N. J., in 1746. King's (now Columbia), New York, 1754; University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, 1785; Brown University, Providence, 1764; Dartmouth, at Hanover, N. H., 1769; Rutgers, New Brunswick, N. J., 1770. The first medical school was established at Philadelphia in 1764. These institutions were all founded previous to the Revolution in 1775. In the report of the United States commissioner of education for 1879 the total number of colleges and universities in the United States was given as 890. In addition to those named above, the most important, with the dates of their founding, are as follows:

Wesleyan, Middletown, Conn.	1830
Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, Md.	1876
Amherst, Amherst, Mass.	1821
Williams, Williamstown, Mass.	1783
University of Michigan, Ann Arbor	1841

Colliery Accidents, see under Coal.

Collodion, a film obtained from the solution of gun-cotton in ether. The iodized collodion, extensively employed in photography, was invented by Mr. F. Scott Archer, and announced in the Chemist, in March, 1851. On the premature death of himself and wife, a pension of 50*l.* per annum was granted by government to his three orphan children.

Collyridians, Arab heretics who offered collyrides, little cakes, to the Virgin Mary as a goddess in the fourth century.

Colmar, W. Germany; an imperial city, thirteenth century; taken by the Swedes, 1632; by Louis XIV. of France, who destroyed the fortifications, 1673; ceded to France, 1697; with Alsace, restored to Germany, 1871.

Colney Hatch, Middlesex. County lunatic asylum here erected, 1851.

Cologne (Colonia Agrippina), on the Rhine, the site of a colony founded by the empress Agrippina, about 50; an imperial town, 957; a member of the Hanseatic League, 1260. Many ecclesiastical councils held here, 782-1536. The Jews were expelled from it in 1485, and the Protestants in 1618, and it then fell into decay. Cologne was taken by the French under Jourdan, Oct. 1794. The archbishopric secularized, 1801, assigned to Prussia, 1814.

The cathedral, termed Dom (containing many supposed relics, such as the heads of the magi, or three kings, bones of the 11,000 virgins, etc.), founded by archbishop Conrad von Hochstade or Hochstettin; architect Gerhard von Riehl or Rile. 15 Aug. 1348 Building intermittent; suspended. 1509 Great collections made for resuming it by Prussia, 1814 et seq.

Repairs completed; new buildings founded. 4 Sept. 1842 The body of the cathedral opened in the presence of the king, 600th anniversary of the foundation. 15 Aug. 1848 International industrial exhibition opened by the crown-prince. 2 June, 1865 Dispute between the king and the chapter respecting the electing an archbishop, settled; the pope appoints Melchers. Jan. 1866 Congress of Old Catholics met (which see). 20, 22 Sept. 1872 Archbishop Melchers arrested by government, 30 March, 1874

A colossal statue of Frederick William III., 22 feet high, with pedestrian figures at the base (Blucher, Humboldt, and others), the work of Blaser and Calendrelli, subscribed for by Rhinelanders; unveiled by the emperor William I. 26 Sept. 1878 The cathedral reported finished, 14 Aug.; solemnly opened by the emperor and other German sovereigns, 15 Oct. 1880

Colombia, a republic of South America, formed of states which declared their independence, Dec. 1819; civil war ensued and the union was dissolved.

Union of New Granada and Venezuela	17 Dec. 1819
The royalists defeated at Carabobo	24 June, 1821

Venezuela separates from Granada	Nov. 1829
Bolívar resigns, 4 April; dies	17 Dec. 1830
Santander dies	26 May, 1840
The republic now named Colombia instead of New Granada; president, Gen. E. Salgar	1871
Manuel Murillo Toro, president for two years	1 April, 1872
Santiago Perez, president	1 April, 1874
Aquileo Parra, president	1 April, 1876
Gen. Trujillo, president, proclaimed	1 April, 1878
Gen. R. Núñez, president, proclaimed	1 April, 1880
Population, 1864, 2,794,473; 1870, 2,910,329; 1880, about 3,000,000.

(See New Granada and Venezuela.)

Colombo (Ceylon), fortified in 1638 by the Portuguese, who were expelled by the Dutch in 1666; the latter surrendered it to the British, 15 Feb. 1796; see Ceylon, 1803, 1845.

Colon (:). The colon and period were adopted by Thrasymachus about 373 B.C. (Suidas), and known to Aristotle. The colon and semicolon (;) first used in British literature in the sixteenth century.

Colonel (from Italian colonna, a column), the highest regimental military officer. The term had become common in England in the sixteenth century.

Colonial, see under Colonies.

Colonies. The Phœnician and Greek colonies, frequently founded by political exiles, soon became independent of the mother country. The Roman colonies, on the contrary, continued in close connection with Rome itself; being governed almost entirely by military law. —The COLONIES OF GREAT BRITAIN partake of both these characters. The N. American colonies revolted in consequence of the attempt at taxation without their consent in 1764. The loyal condition of the present colonies now is due to the gradual relaxation of the pressure of the home government. The population of the British colonies in all parts of the world was estimated, in 1861, at 142,952,243; in 1877, 204,254,406. The revenue of the colonies was estimated in 1865 to be 51,492,000*l.*; the expenditure, 59,353,000*l.* The act for the abolition of slavery in the British colonies, and for compensation to the owners of slaves (20,000,000*l.* sterling), was passed in 1833. All the slaves throughout the British colonies were emancipated on 1 Aug. 1834; see Bishops (Colonial), Secretaries, and separate articles. E. J. Payne's "History of European Colonies" was published 1877.

Colonial Branch Army Act passed..... 1866

Colonial Clergy Act, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 77, passed 7 Aug. 1874, removes certain disabilities of persons not ordained by bishops of the united church of England and Ireland.

Colonial and Continental Church Society (formerly "Colonial Church Society") took its name 1 May, 1861. It deals with colonial dioceses and British residents on the continent.

COLONIAL DEFENCES COMMISSION (including the earl of Carnarvon, Mr. Childers, and others), appointed about 12 Sept. 1879

Colonial Society, established to promote the interests of the colonies, lord Bury, president, held its first meeting 26 June, 1868, and first annual meeting 28 June, 1869, when it assumed the title "Royal." On 7 March, 1870, it became "The Royal Colonial Institute." The "Proceedings" have been published.

The formation of a National and Colonial League was resolved on at a meeting held at Cannon street, London, 5 Jan. 1870

Color is to light what pitch is to sound, according to the undulatory theory of Huyghens (about 1678), established by Dr. T. Young, and others. The shade varies according to the number of vibrations. 458 millions of millions of vibrations in a second attributed to the red end of the spectrum; to the violet, 727; see Spectrum.*

Colorado, a state of the United States of North America, was organized as a territory 2 March, 1861; admitted to the union as a state, Aug. 1876; capital, Denver City. Pop. 1880, 194,649.

Gold found here, 1858; yield up to 1878 nearly 80 tons pure gold, 770 tons silver, and much copper and lead.

Colorado Beetle (so named from its supposed native country), was at first described by Thomas Say, and named Doryphora decemlineata, in 1824, when he found it near the Upper Missouri. It soon took to feeding on potatoes, as they were planted, and gradually proceeded eastward through Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Ohio, etc., to the New England states, destroying the crops, 1859 et seq. In 1873 it reached New York, and the Atlantic seaboard in 1874, swarming there in 1876, and attacking Canada. The fear of its invading Britain led to an order in council respecting its destruction, etc., 14 Aug. 1877. Very few specimens arrived.

Colosseum, see Coliseum. The building in Regent's Park, London, was planned by Mr. Hornor, a land-surveyor, and commenced in 1824, by Peto and Gristell, from designs by Decimus Burton. The chief portion is a polygon of 16 faces, 126 feet in diameter externally: the walls were three feet thick at the ground; the height to the glazed dome 112 feet. On the canvas walls of the dome was painted the panoramic view of London, completed in 1829 from sketches by Mr. Hornor taken from the summit of St. Paul's cathedral in 1821-2. The picture covered above 46,000 square feet, more than an acre of canvas. The different parts were combined by Mr. E. T. Parris, who in 1845 repainted the whole. In 1848 a panorama of Paris was exhibited; succeeded, in 1850, by the lake of Thun in Switzerland; in 1851 the panorama of London was reproduced. In 1848 the theatre, with the panorama of Lisbon, was added. In 1831, when Mr. Hornor failed, the establishment was sold for 40,000*l.* to Messrs. Braham and Yates. In 1843 it was bought by Mr. D. Montague for 23,000 guineas.—Timbs. After having been long closed, the building was opened to the public at Christmas, 1856, at one shilling. Under the charge of Dr. Bachhoffner, it continued open till the spring of 1864, when it was again closed. The sale of the site was announced 1870. It was announced in Dec. 1871 that a company was about to transform the building and grounds into club-chambers, baths, a winter garden, etc. In 1874 it was sold; large mansions to be erected on the site.

* Some persons (about 65 out of 1154) cannot distinguish between colors, and are termed Color-blind. The defect said to have been first described by Priestley.—Phil. Trans. 1777. In 1859, professor J. Clerk Maxwell invented spectacles to remedy this defect, which is also called "Daltonism," after John Dalton, the chemist, to whom scarlet appeared drab-color. Dr. George Wilson, "Researches on Color-blindness," 1847; Dr. Joy Jeffries, "Color-blindness," 1879.

Colossus of Rhodes, a brass statue of Apollo, seventy cubits high, esteemed one of the wonders of the world, was erected at the port of Rhodes in honor of the sun, by Chares of Lindus, disciple of Lysippus, 290 or 288 B.C. It was thrown down by an earthquake about 224 B.C. The figure is said traditionally to have stood upon two moles, a leg being extended on each side of the harbor, so that a vessel in full sail could enter between. The statue was in ruins for nearly nine centuries, and had never been repaired; when the Saracens, taking Rhodes, pulled it to pieces, and sold the metal, weighing 720,900 lbs., to a Jew, who is said to have loaded 900 camels in transporting it to Alexandria about 653.—Dufresnoy.

Colston Day, Nov. 13, see Bristol.

Columbia, a federal district round the city of Washington in Maryland; established 1800. Slavery was abolished in 1862; see British Columbia.

Columbia Market, Bethnal Green, E. London; erected by Mr. Darbishire, architect, in the pointed Gothic style, and inaugurated by Miss (now lady) Burdett-Coutts, the proprietor, 28 April, 1869. It cost her 200,000*l.* It was opened as a wholesale fish-market, 21 Feb. 1870, but was not successful. On 3 Nov. 1871, lady Burdett-Coutts presented the market to the corporation of London, and on 18 July, 1872, she received publicly the freedom of that city.

The market did not succeed, and the buildings were restored to the donor. . . . 4 Dec. 1874
Again opened on liberal terms under superintendence of Great Eastern, Great Northern, and Midland Railway companies. . . . 15 Dec. 1875
Reported failure; proposed use as a co-operative store, April, 1878

Columbium, a metal discovered by C. Hatchett, in a mineral named columbite, in 1801. It is identical with niobium, and not with tantalum, as supposed by some chemists.—Watts.

Combat, SINGLE. Trial by this commenced by the Lombards, 659.—Baronius. It was introduced into England for accusations of treason, if neither the accuser nor the accused could produce good evidence; see High Constable and Appeal of Battle.

A battle by single combat was fought before the king, William II., and the peers, between Geoffrey Baynard and William, earl of Eu, who was accused by Baynard of high-treason; and, Baynard having conquered, Eu was deemed convicted, and blinded and mutilated, 1096.

A combat proposed between Henry of Bolingbroke, duke of Hereford (afterwards Henry IV.), and Thomas, duke of Norfolk, was forbidden by Richard II. Sept. 1398.

A trial was appointed between the prior of Kilmainham and the earl of Ormond, the former having impeached the latter of high-treason; quarrel taken up by the king, decided without fighting, 1446.

A combat was proposed between lord Reay and Mr. David Ramsey in 1631, but the king prevented it.

In a combat in Dublin castle, before the lords justices and council, between Connor Mac'ormack O'Connor and Teig Mac-Gilpatrick O'Connor, the former had his head cut off, and presented to the lords, 1553.

Combination. Laws were enacted from the time of Edward I. downwards, regulating the price of labor and the relations between masters and workmen, and prohibiting the latter from combining for their own protection. All these laws were repealed, 6 Geo. IV. c. 129, in 1825, due protection being given to both parties. The act was amended in 1859 by 22 Vict. c. 34, when the subject was much discussed, in consequence of the strike in the building trades; see Sheffield and Strikes.

Combs, found in Pompeii; Combmakers' company incorporated, 1636 or 1650.

Combustion, see Spontaneous.

Comédie Française, Paris, established 1680.

At the death of Molière, in 1673, his company of actors, at the Palais Royal, separated into two bodies. The fusion of these formed the French National Theatre, founded by Louis XIV. by a decree 18 Aug., first performance 25 Aug. 1680; the actors, 15 men and 12 women, being the best of the time. The theatre was much depressed in the king's last years, revived under Louis XV.; ceased to exist in 1799; and was restored in 1803.

The company visited London in 1879; first appearance at the Gaiety, 2 June, 1879; eminent actors, Madame Sarah Bernhardt, MM. Got, Delaunay, and Coquelin, and Mlles. Brohan and Favart.

The 200th anniversary of the establishment celebrated 21 Oct. et seq. 1880.

Comedy. Thalia is the muse of comedy and lyric poetry. Susarion and Dolon, the inventors of theatrical exhibitions, 562 B.C., performed the first comedy at Athens, on a wagon or movable stage, on four wheels, for which they were rewarded with a basket of figs and a cask of wine; see Arundelian Marbles and Drama.

Comedy, for libel, prohibited at Athens, 440 B.C.

Aristophanes called the prince of ancient comedy, 434 B.C., and Menander that of the new, 320 B.C.

Of Plautus, 20 comedies are extant; he flourished 220 B.C.

Statius Cæcilius wrote upwards of 30 comedies; flourished at Rome 180 B.C.

Comedies of Lælius and Terence first acted 154 B.C.

First regular comedy performed in England about A.D. 1551.

It was said of Sheridan that he wrote the best comedy (The "School for Scandal"), the best opera (The "Duenna"), and the best afterpiece (The "Critic"), in the English language (1775-9).

Comets (Greek κόμη, a hair). It is recorded that more than 600 have been seen. Mr. Hind, in his little work on comets, gives a chronological list. The first discovered and described accurately was by Nicæphorus, 1337. There are said to be 17,500,000 in the solar system. Amédée Guillemin's "World of Comets," by J. Glaisher, published 1877.

At the birth of the great Mithridates two large comets appeared, which were seen for seventy-two days together, whose splendor eclipsed that of the mid-day sun, and occupied the fourth part of the heavens, about 135 B.C.—Justin.

A grand comet seen, 1264. Its tail is said to have extended 100°. It is considered to have reappeared in 1556, with diminished splendor; and was expected to appear again about Aug. 1858 or Aug. 1860.—Hind.

A remarkable one seen in England, June, 1337.—Stow.

Tycho Brahe demonstrated that comets are extraneous to our atmosphere, about 1577.

A comet which terrified the people from its near approach to the earth was visible from 3 Nov. 1679 to 9 March, 1680. It enabled Newton to demonstrate that comets, as well as planets, are subject to the law of gravitation, and most probably move in elliptic orbits, 1704.

A most brilliant comet appeared in 1769, which passed within two millions of miles of the earth. This beautiful comet, moving with immense swiftness, was seen in London; its tail stretched across the heavens like a prodigious luminous arch, 36,000,000 miles in length.

The computed length of that which appeared in 1811, and which was so remarkably conspicuous, was, on 15 Oct. according to the late Dr. Herschel, upwards of 100,000,000 miles, and its apparent greatest breadth, at the same time, 15,000,000 miles. It was visible all the autumn to the naked eye.—Philos. Trans. Royal Soc. for 1812. Another comet, Dec. 1823.

HALLEY'S COMET, 1682. Named after one of the greatest astronomers of England. He first proved that many of the appearances of comets were but the periodical returns of the same bodies, and he demonstrated that the comet of 1682 was the same with the comet of 1456, 1531, and 1607, deducing this fact from a minute observation of the first-mentioned comet, and being struck by its wonderful resemblance to the comets described as having appeared in those years: Halley, therefore, first fixed the identity of comets, and predicted their periodical returns.—Vince's Astronomy. The revolution of Halley's comet is performed in about 75 years; it appeared (as he had predicted) in 1759, and came to its perihelion on 13 March; its last appearance was 1835; its next will be 1910.

ENCKE'S COMET. First discovered by M. Pons, 26 Nov. 1818, but justly named by astronomers after prof. Encke, for his success in detecting its orbit, motions, and perturbations; it is, like the preceding, one of the three comets which have appeared according to prediction, and its revolutions are made in 3 years and 15 weeks. Thirteenth return observed at Copenhagen by M. d'Arrest, 20 July, 1853; observed in England, 14 Oct. 1871; seen 13 April, 1875; in New South Wales, 3 Aug. 1878.

BIELA'S COMET has been an object of fear to many on account of the nearness with which it has approached, not the earth, but a point of the earth's path; it was first discovered by M. Biela, an Austrian officer, 28 Feb. 1826. It is one of the three comets whose reappearance was predicted, its revolution being performed in 6 years and 38 weeks. Its second appearance was in 1832, when the time of its perihelion passage was 27 Nov.; its third was in 1839; its fourth in 1845; and its fifth in 1852; it has since vanished.

DONATI'S COMET, so called from its having been first observed by Dr. Donati, of Florence, 2 June, 1858, being then calculated to be 228,000,000 miles from our earth. It was very brilliant in England in the end of September and October following, when the tail was said to be 40,000,000 miles long. On 10 Oct. it was nearest to the earth; on the 18th it was near coming into collision with Venus. Opinions varied as to this comet's brilliancy compared with that of 1811.

THE GREAT COMET of 1861 was first seen by Mr. Tebbutt at Sydney, in Australia, 13 May; by M. Goldschmidt and others in France and England on 29, 30 June. The nucleus was about 400 miles in diameter, with a long bush-like tail, travelling at the rate of 10,000,000 miles in 24 hours. On 30 June it was suggested that we were in the tail—there being "a phosphorescent auroral glare."

A tailless comet was discovered in the constellation Cassiopeia, by M. Seeling, at Athens, on 2 July, and by M. Tempel, at Marseilles, 2 and 3 July, 1862.

A comet detected at Harvard by Mr. Tuttle, 18 July, and by Rosa, at Rome, on 25 July, 1862. It was visible by the naked eye in August and September.

Six telescopic comets were observed in 1863, and several in 1864.

A fine comet appeared in the southern hemisphere, and was visible in South America and Australia, in Jan.-Feb. 1865.

M. Babinet considered that comets had so little density that the earth might pass through the tail of one without our being aware of it. 4 May, 1857.

Schiaparelli, of Milan, discovered that the August meteors move round the sun in an orbit almost identical with the second comet of 1862-1866.

One discovered at Carlsruhe by Dr. Winnecke, 13 June, 1868; a bright one by Paul Henry, 23 Aug. 1873.

Several small comets discovered by various astronomers, 1873-81.

A bright comet appeared in the southern hemisphere, large nucleus, fan-shaped tail; visible in the southern hemisphere, May; in London, 22 June et seq. 1881.

COGHI'S COMET, discovered by him at Marseilles, 18 April, became visible (near Polar star) in London about 4 July; gradually increased in brightness, and passed out of sight in a few weeks, in Europe; and appeared brilliant at Melbourne, 1 Aug. 1874.

No less than seven comets were observed during 1881, as follows:

A. Discovered by Lewis Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., 1 May.

B. Discovered by Dr. Gould, of Buenos Ayres, 1 June; became visible in the United States, 23 June.

C. Discovered by Schaberlo, of Ann Arbor, Mich., 18 July; making two comets simultaneously visible with the naked eye.

D. Encke's comet.

E. Discovered by Burnard, of Nashville, Tenn., 21 Sept.

F. Discovered by Denning, of Bristol, England, 4 Oct.

G. Discovered by Lewis Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., 17 Nov.

The most important scientific result obtained by observation of these comets was due to successful photographing by Prof. Henry Draper, of New York.

The spectra show the presence of carbon, and it has been demonstrated that at least in one case the greater part of a comet's light is reflected.

Commander-in-chief. On 15 June, 1775, the continental congress made George Washington commander-in-chief of all "armies raised or to be raised" for the defence of the colonies. When the national government was formed a clause was inserted in the constitution making the president of the United States commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia whenever called into the service of the United States; but the president does not directly command. His authority is delegated. The office of lieutenant-general was created for Washington in 1798, and was conferred by brevet upon Winfield Scott in 1848. This was the highest rank in the United States army until 1866, when the rank of general was created for gen. Grant, commissioned 25 July, 1866. He was succeeded in that rank by gen. Sherman in 1869. The office of commander-in-chief in the British army is frequently vacant. When the duke of Wellington resigned the office, on becoming prime-minister, in 1828, his successor, lord Hill, became commander of the forces, or general commanding in chief.

Commendam, "a benefice or church living which, being void, is commended to the charge of some sufficient clerk, to be supplied until it may be conveniently supplied with a pastor."—Blount. By 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 77 (1836), future bishops were prohibited from holding in commendam the livings they held when consecrated.

Commerce early flourished in Arabia, Egypt, and among the Phœnicians; see the description of Tyre, 588 B.C., Ezek. xxvii. In later times it was spread over Europe by a confederacy of maritime cities, 1241 (see Hanse Towns), by the discoveries of Columbus, and by the enterprises of the Dutch and Portuguese; see Exports, Imports, and articles connected with this subject.

The first treaty of commerce made by England with any foreign nation was entered into with the Flemings, 1 Edw. I. 1272. The second was with Portugal and Spain, 2 Edw. II. 1308.—Anderson. (See Treaties.) Heriot's Collection, in 12 vols. 8vo, published 1827-50, has a copious index.

An important commercial treaty was concluded with France (see French Treaty).

Chambers of Commerce originated at Marseilles in the fourteenth century, and similar chambers were instituted in all the chief cities in France, about 1700

These chambers suppressed in 1791; restored by decrees 3 Sept. 1851

The chamber of commerce at Glasgow was established 1783; at Edinburgh, 1785; Manchester, 1820; Hull, 1837

Associated (twenty-seven) chambers of commerce (not including Liverpool, Manchester, and Glasgow) met at Westminster for interchange of opinions on various questions 21 Feb. 1865

Annual meetings held since; 46 met 18 Feb. 1873; 21st 1 Feb. 1881

Meeting at Paris, 6 May, 1873; at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 22 Sept. 1874; at Leeds, 5 Sept. 1875; at Bristol, 12, 13 Sept. 1876; at Hull, 11 Sept. 1877; at Hawick, etc., 24 Sept. 1880

Commissionnaires, street messengers in Paris. Those in London were originally pensioned soldiers wounded either in the Crimea or India, first employed in the West End. They were appointed by a society, founded in Feb. 1859 by capt. Edward Walter, which is now under the patronage of the queen and the commander-in-chief. The charges are regulated by a tariff. In Jan. 1861 the society commenced the gratuitous issue of a Monthly Advertising Circular. In March, 1864, there were 250 commissionnaires in London; in Nov. 1866, about 340; in June, 1868, 377; in Oct. 1872, 500. On 17 June, 1865, capt. Walter resigned, and a permanent system of administration was formed. In 1865 commissionnaires were first engaged as private night-watchmen.

Common Council of London. Its organization began about 1208. The charter of Henry I. mentions the folk-mote, a Saxon appellation for a court or assembly of the people. The general place of meeting of the folk-mote was in the open air at St. Paul's-cross, St. Paul's churchyard. It was not discontinued till after Henry III.'s reign; when certain representatives were chosen out of each ward, who, being added to the lord mayor and aldermen, constituted the court of common council. At first only two were returned for each ward; but the number was enlarged in 1347, and since. This council, which meets every Thursday, is elected annually 21 Dec., St. Thomas's Day. A Common Hall is held occasionally. The common council supported the prince of Orange in 1688, and queen Caroline in 1820.

Common Pleas, COURT OF, in ENGLAND, in ancient times followed the king's person, and is distinct from that of the King's Bench; but on the grant of Magna Charta by king John, in 1215, it was fixed at Westminster, where it still continues. In 1833 the mode of procedure in all the superior courts was made uniform. In England, no barrister under the degree of sergeant could plead in the Court of Common Pleas, but in 1846 the privilege was extended to barristers practising in the superior courts at Westminster. Sat last, July, 1875. The Common Pleas division of the high court of justice now consists of the chief-justice and four judges; see Supreme Court.

Common Prayer, BOOK OF, was ordered by parliament to be printed in the English language on 1 April, 1548. It was voted out of doors by parliament, and the Directory (which see) set up in its room in 1644, and a proclamation was issued against it in 1647. With a few changes, the English Common Prayer-book is used by the episcopal churches in Scotland, Ireland, and North America.

Common-law OF ENGLAND, an ancient collection of unwritten maxims and customs (leges non scriptæ), of British, Saxon, and Danish origin, which has subsisted immemorially in this kingdom; and, although somewhat impaired by the rude shock of the Norman conquest, has weathered the violence of the times. At the parliament of Merton, 1236, “all the earls and barons,” says the parliament roll, “with one voice answered that they would not change the laws of England, which have hitherto been used and approved;” eminently the law of the land; see Bastard. The process, practice, and mode of pleading in the superior courts of common-law were amended in 1852 and 1854.

Commons, HOUSE OF, originated with Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, who, by the Provisions of Oxford, ordered returns to be made of two knights from every shire, and deputies from certain boroughs, to meet such of the barons and clergy as were his friends, with a view thereby to strengthen his own power in opposition to that of his sovereign Henry III., 1258.—See Stow. In 1859 Mr. Newmarch estimated the constituency of England and Wales at 984,000. It was largely increased by the reform act of 1867. Registered parliamentary electors, 1872: England and Wales, boroughs, 1,250,019; counties, 801,109. Scotland, burghs, 49,025; counties, 79,919. Ireland, boroughs, 171,912; counties, 175,439. Commons. In 1685, of the 37,000,000 acres of land in England, about 18,000,000 were moorland, forest, and fen. In 1727 about 3,000,000 acres more had been brought into cultivation; and from that time to 1844, by means of 4000 private acts of parliament, about 7,000,000 acres more were enclosed. Since the Inclosure Act of 1845, which established commissioners, another 1,000,000 acres have been enclosed.

Commonwealth of England, the term applied to the interregnum between the death of Charles I. and the restoration of Charles II. A republic was established at the execution of Charles I., 30 Jan. 1649—a new oath, called the "Engagement," was framed, which all officials were obliged to take.†—Salmon. Oliver Cromwell was made protector 16 Dec. 1653; succeeded by his son Richard, 3 Sept. 1658. Monarchy was restored 8 May, and Charles II. entered London, 29 May, 1660.

Communalists, or COMMUNISTS, propose to divide France into about a thousand small thoroughly independent states, with councils elected by all the population, Paris to be the ruling head. They declare that capital and its holders must be adapted to nobler uses, or cease to exist. Their creed is stated to be atheism and materialism. They are intimately connected with the International Society of workmen (see Workmen), and with the communists or socialists (1871-3). §

* In 1844 Sudbury, and in 1852 St. Alban's, were disfranchised for bribery and corruption, each having previously returned two members; the aggregate number of the house then became 654. In 1861 the forfeited seats were thus distributed by act of parliament—two additional to the West Riding of York, one additional to South Lancashire, and one to a newly created borough, Birkenhead.

† Disfranchised and replaced, 1867: Lancaster, Yarmouth, Totnes, and Reigate.—Disfranchised, 1870: Beverley and Bridgwater, each two members; Cashel and Sligo, each one member: 652 members, 1878; 12 members short, through void elections, Aug. 1880.

‡ By this oath they swore to be true and faithful to the Commonwealth, without king or house of lords. The statues of Charles were next day demolished, particularly that at the Royal Exchange, and one at the west end of St. Paul's; and in their room the following inscription was conspicuously set up: "Exit Tyrannus Regum ultimus, Anno Libertatis Anglia Restituta Primo. Anno Dom. 1648, Jan. 30."

§ M. Dufaure, in opposing the amnesty, 17 May, 1876, asserted that the outbreak was organized by about 7000 communists

Communes, in France, are territorial divisions under a mayor. In the eleventh century the name was given to combinations of citizens, favored by the crown, against the exactions of the nobles. In 1356 Stephen Marcel, during the English invasion, vainly endeavored to establish a confederation of sovereign cities, having Paris as the governing head; and for six months it was really governed by a commune in 1588. After the insurrection of July, 1789, the revolutionary committee, which replaced the city council, took the name of "Commune of Paris," Pétion being mayor. It met at the Hôtel de Ville, and was definitively constituted 21 May, 1791. It had great power under Robespierre, and fell with him 17 July, 1794, being replaced by twelve municipalities. The commune of Paris was proclaimed 28 March, 1871, during the insurrection, which began 18 March, and ended with the capture of the city by the government troops, 28 May following. 2245 communists were paroled by decree issued 17 Jan. 1879; and many others afterwards. A number re-entered Paris 4 Sept. following. For the events of the communal rule in Paris, see France 1871.

Communion, a name given to the ordinance of the Lord's supper (1 Cor. x. 16). Communicating under the form of bread alone is said to have had its rise, in the west, under pope Urban II., 1096. The cup was first denied to the laity by the council of Constance, 1414-18. The fourth Lateran council (1215) decreed that every believer should receive the communion at least at Easter. The communion service of the church of England was set forth in 1549.

Companies. || Among the earliest commercial companies in England may be named the Steel-yard Society, established 1232. The second company was the Merchants of St. Thomas à Becket, in 1248.—Stow. The third was the Merchant Adventurers, incorporated by Elizabeth, 1564. The following are the city companies of London; the first twelve are the chief, and are styled "the Honorable." Several companies are extinct, and many dates are doubtful. An inquiry into their affairs was resisted by them in 1835. In 1869 the gross income of the endowed charities of the city companies was stated to be above 99,000*l.* A motion in the commons for inand 1500 foreigners; 40,000 persons were incupulated, 10,000 tried, 25,000 dismissed; see France.

|| Bubble companies have been formed, commonly by designing persons. Law's Bubble, in 1720-1, was perhaps the most extraordinary of its kind, and the South Sea Bubble, in the same year, was scarcely less memorable for its ruin of thousands of families. Many companies were established in these countries in 1824 and 1825, and turned out to be bubbles. Immense losses were incurred by individuals, and the families of thousands of speculators were totally ruined. Many railway enterprises (1844-5) were termed bubbles. See Law's Bubble; South Sea; Railways; Joint-stock Companies.

quity into the revenues and other affairs of eighty-nine companies, by Mr. W. H. James, withdrawn, 23 May, 1876. A commission of inquiry was appointed (the earl of Derby, duke of Bedford, lords Coleridge and Sherbrooke, sir R. A. Cross, etc.) July, 1880.

Companies' Act, passed 1862, was amended and continued, 20 Aug. 1867; both amended by acts, 2 July, 1877, and 15 Aug. 1879.

By the last act, unlimited banking companies were regulated in regard to their issue of notes, audit of accounts, etc. The acts of 1862, 1867, 1877, and 1879, were amended by 43 Vict. c. 19 (1880).

Compass, Mariner's, said to have been early known to the Chinese, 1115 B.C., and brought to Europe by Marco Polo, a Venetian, A.D. 1260. Flavio Gioja, of Amalfi, a navigator of Naples,* is said to have introduced the suspension of the needle, 1302. The compass is also said to have been known to the Swedes in the time of king Jarl Birger, 1250. Its variation was discovered first by Columbus, 1492; afterwards by Sebastian Cabot, 1540. The compass-box and hanging-compass used by navigators were invented by William Barlowe, an English divine and natural philosopher, in 1608; see Magnetism. The measuring compass was invented by Jost Bing, of Hesse, in 1602.

Competitive Examinations, see Civil Service.

Compiègne, a French city north of Paris, the residence of the Carolingian kings. During the siege, Joan of Arc was captured by the Burgundians, 25 May, 1430, and given up to the English for money. The emperor Napoleon III. and the king of Prussia met here on 6 Oct. 1861.

Complutensian Bible, see Polyglot.

* The statement that the flour-de-lis was made the ornament of the northern point of the compass in compliment to Charles, the king of Naples at the time of the discovery, has been contradicted.

Composing-machines, see Printing and Times.

Composite Order, a mixture of the Corinthian and Ionic, and also called the Roman order, is of uncertain date.

Composite Portraits. By means of photography, in 1877-8, Mr. Francis Galton combined from two to nine separate portraits; the result was generally an improvement on the features of the components.

Compound Householders (in regard to the payment of rates) were constituted by the Small Tenements act of 1851. Their position, with regard to the suffrage, caused much discussion during the passing of the Reform act in 1867; and their claims were rejected.

Compound Radical, in organic chemistry, is a substance which, although containing two or more elements, in ordinary circumstances performs the part of an element. The Radical or Binary theory was propounded by Berzelius, 1833, and by Liebig, 1838; and modified in the nucleus theory of Aug. Laurent, 1836. The first compound radical isolated was cyanogen (which see), by Gay-Lussac, in 1815; see Amyl, Ethyl, and Methyl, as other examples.

Compromise, see Breda.

Comte Philosophy, see Positive Philosophy.

Conception, IMMACULATE. A festival (on 8 Dec.) appointed in 1389, observed in the Roman Catholic Church in honor of the Virgin Mary's having been conceived and born immaculate, or without original sin. Opposition to this doctrine was forbidden by decree of pope Paul V. in 1617, confirmed by Gregory XV. and Alexander VII.—Hénault. On 8 Dec. 1854, pope Pius IX. promulgated a bull, declaring this dogma to be an article of faith, and charging with heresy those who should doubt it or speak against it.—The CONCEPTIONISTS were an order of nuns in Italy, established in 1488; see Santiago.

Concertina, a musical instrument invented by professor, afterwards sir Charles, Wheatstone, about 1825, and improved by Mr. G. Case. The sounds are produced by free vibrating metal springs.

Concerts. The Filarmonia gave concerts at Vicenza in the sixteenth century. The first public subscription concert was performed at Oxford in 1665; the first in London is said to have been in 1672, by John Banister, afterwards by Thomas Britton till his death, 1714. The Academy of Ancient Music, which introduced concerts in London, began in 1710; the Concerts of Ancient Music in 1766; and the present Philharmonic Society in 1813; see others, under Music, Cryptal Palace, and Handel. Colossal peace concerts were held at Boston, U. S., 15 June, etc., 1869; 17 June to 4 July, 1872; see Boston.

Concerts Spirituels at Paris, organized by Anne Dannican Philidor, began in Passion week, 14 March, 1725; closed in 1791; re-established, 1805; replaced by the Concerts du Conservatoire, begun 9 March, 1828; still continued, 1881.

Jullien's Popular Concerts, with monster quadrilles, began at Drury Lane Theatre, 8 June, 1840; a farewell series, 1859. He greatly promoted the taste for classical music.

Promenade Concerts revived at Covent Garden Theatre, autumn, 1880.

Conchology, the science of shells, is mentioned by Aristotle and Pliny. It was first reduced to a system by John Daniel Major, of Kiel, who published his classification of the Testacea in 1675. Lister's system was published in 1685; and that of Largius in 1722. Johnson's Introduction (1850) and Sowerby's Manual of Conchology (1842), are useful. Forbes and Hanley's "British Mollusca and their Shells" (1848-53) is a magnificent work.

Conciliation Councils, see Councils.

Conclave. A range of small cells in the hall of the Vatican, or palace of the pope of Rome, where the cardinals usually meet to elect a pope, and also the assembly of the cardinals shut up for the purpose. Clement IV. having died at Viterbo in 1268, the cardinals were nearly three years unable to agree in the choice of a successor, and were on the point of breaking up, when the magistrates, by the advice of St. Bonaventura, shut the gates of their city, and locked up the cardinals till they agreed, 1271.

Concord (Massachusetts, N. America). Near here was fought the battle of Lexington (which see), 19 April, 1775.

Concordance. An index or alphabetical catalogue of all the words, and also a chronological account of all the transactions, in the Bible. The first concordance was made under the direction of Hugo de St. Caro, who employed as many as 500 monks upon it, 1247.—Abbe Lenglet. It was based on one compiled by Anthony of Padua. Thomas Gibson's "Concordance of the New Testament," published 1535. John Marbeck's "Concordance" (for the whole Bible), 1550. Two Concordances (with royal privileges), by Rob. F. Herrey, appeared in 1578. Cruden's Concordance was published in London in 1737. Dr. Robert Young's valuable "Analytical Concordance to the Bible," 1879. The Index to the Bible, published by the Queen's printers, prepared by B. Vincent, editor of this volume, was completed in May, 1848.

Verbal indexes accompany good editions of the ancient classics. An index to Shakespeare, by Ayscough, appeared in 1790; another by Twiss in 1805; and Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's (late Mary Novello) concordance to Shakespeare's Plays (on which she spent sixteen years' labor) in 1847. Mrs. Horacio Furness's concordance to Shakespeare's Poems, 1874. Todd's verbal index to Milton, 1809. Cleveland's concordance to Milton, 1867. Brightwell's concordance to Tennyson, 1839. Abbott's concordance to Pope, 1875.

Concordat. An instrument of agreement between a prince and the pope, usually concerning benefices. The concordat between the emperor Henry V. of Germany and pope Calixtus II., in 1122, has been regarded as the fundamental law of the church in Germany. The concordat between Napoleon Bonaparte and Pius VII., signed at Paris, 15 July, 1801, re-established the Catholic church and the papal authority in France. Napoleon was made in effect the head of the Gallican church, as bishops were to have their appointments from him, and their investiture from the pope. Another concordat between the same persons was signed at Fontainebleau, 25 Jan. 1813. These were almost nullified by another, 22 Nov. 1817. A concordat, signed 18 Aug. 1855, between Austria and Rome, by which a great deal of the liberty of the Austrian church was given up to the papacy, caused much dissatisfaction. In 1868 it was virtually abolished by the legislatures of Hungary and Austria.

Concubines were tolerated among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans, but strictly forbidden to Christians (Mark x., 1 Cor. vii. 2). They are mentioned as having been allowed to the priests, 1132; see Morganatic Marriages.

Condensation, see Gas, Beer, Milk.

Condottieri, conductors or leaders of mercenaries, termed free companies or lances, which became so troublesome in Italy that the cities formed a league to suppress them in 1342. Many ravaged France after the peace of Bretigny, in 1360.

Conduits. Two remarkable conduits, among a number of others in London, existed early in Cheapside. The "great conduit" was the first cistern of lead erected in the city, and was built in 1285. At the procession of Anna Boleyn, on the occasion of her marriage, it ran with white and claret wine all the afternoon, 1 June, 1533.—Stow.

Confederate States of North America. The efforts of the Southern States for the extension of slavery, and the zeal of the Northern States for its abolition, with the consequent political dissensions, led to the great secession of 1860-1. On 4 Nov. 1860, Abraham Lincoln, the Republican candidate, was elected president of the United States. Hitherto, a president in the interest of the South had been elected. On 20

Dec., South Carolina seceded from the Union; and soon after Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Arkansas, Tennessee, and North Carolina also. These states organized a government under the name of the Confederate States of North America. Jefferson Davis was inaugurated president of the Southern Confederacy, at Montgomery in Alabama, 18 Feb. 1861. For the events of the war which ensued, and the restoration of the Southern States to the Union, see United States, 1861-5. Jefferson Davis's "Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," 2 vols., published June, 1881.

Confederation, ARTICLES OF, adopted by the Congress of the United States, 15 Nov. 1777. These articles, thirteen in number, constituted the organic law of the United States, until superseded by the Constitution in 1789.

Confederation AT PARIS, 14 July, 1790; see Champ de Mars and Bastille.

Confederation OF THE RHINE, the League of the Germanic States, formed by Napoleon Bonaparte, 12 July, 1806, when he abolished the Holy Roman Empire, and the emperor of Germany became emperor of Austria. In Dec. it consisted of France, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Saxony, and Westphalia; seven grand duchies; six duchies; and twenty principalities. The princes collectively engaged to raise 258,000 troops to serve in case of war, and established a diet at Frankfort. This league terminated with the career of Bonaparte in 1814; and in 1815 it was replaced by the Germanic Confederation (which see, and Germany).

Conferences, ECCLESIASTICAL. One was held at Hampton Court palace, between the prelates of the church of England and the Puritan ministers, in order to effect a general union, at the instance of the king, James I., 14, 16, 18 Jan. 1604. It led to the new translation of the Bible, now in general use in England; executed in 1607-11. Some alterations in the church liturgy were agreed upon; but, these not satisfying the dissenters, nothing more was done.—Another conference of the bishops and Presbyterian ministers, with the same view, was held in the Savoy, 15 April to 25 July, 1661. The dissenters' objections were generally disallowed, but some alterations were recommended in the Prayer-book. In the United States the Methodist Episcopal church has adopted the term conference for its ecclesiastical bodies. The General Conference, meeting once in four years, is the supreme legislative body of that church. Annual conferences, representing fixed territorial divisions, and quarterly conferences, representing presiding elders' districts, are subsidiary bodies; see Wesleyans and Conferences.

Confessional, see Auricular Confession.

Confessions OF FAITH, or CREEDS; see Apostles', Nicene (325), and Athanasian (about 434) Creeds. J. R. Lumby's "History of the Creeds," published 1874.

The confession of faith of the Greek church was presented to Mahomet II. in 1453. This gave way in 1643 to one composed by Mogila, metropolitan of Kiev, which is the present standard of the Russo-Greek church.
The creed of Pius VI., composed of the Nicene creed, with additional articles which embody all the peculiar dogmas of the Roman Catholic church, published by the council of Trent..... 1564
The church of England retains the Apostles', Nicene, and Athanasian creeds, with articles—42 in 1552; reduced to 39..... 1563
The confession of Augsburg (that of the Lutherans) was drawn up principally by Melancthon in 1530, and has since undergone modifications, the last of which is called the "Form of Concord"..... 1579
The Westminster confession was agreed to in 1643; and adopted by the Presbyterian church of Scotland; see Westminster..... 1647
The Congregational dissenters published a declaration of faith..... 1833

Confirmation, or LAYING ON HANDS, was practised by the apostles in 34 and 56 (Acts viii. 17; xix. 6), and was general, according to some church authorities, in 190. In the church of England it is the public profession of the Christian religion by an adult person, who has been baptized in infancy. It is made a sacrament by the church of Rome.

Confians (near Paris), Treaty of, between Louis XI. of France and the dukes of Bourbon, Brittany, and Burgundy, 5 Oct. 1465. By its provisions Normandy was ceded to the duke of Berry, and an end was put to the "War of the Public Good." It was confirmed by the Treaty of Peronne, 1468.

Congé d'Élire (permission to elect), the license given by the sovereign, as head of the church, to chapters and other bodies, to elect dignitaries, particularly bishops; the right asserted by Henry VIII. 1535. After the interdict of the pope upon England had been removed in 1514, king John made an arrangement with the clergy for the election of bishops.

Congelation, the act of freezing. Ice was produced in summer by means of chemical mixtures, by Mr. Walker, in 1783. Quicksilver was frozen without snow or ice in 1787. In 1810 Leslie froze water in an air-pump by placing a vessel of sulphuric acid under it. Numerous freezing mixtures have been discovered since. Intense cold is produced by the汽ification of liquefied carbonic-acid gas. In 1857 Mr. Harrison patented a machine for manufacturing ice for commercial purposes, by means of ether and salt water, and made large blocks. In 1860, M. Carre devised a method of freezing to 60° below zero by making water in a close vessel absorb and give off the gas ammonia. Steele's ice-making machine, exhibited at the International Exhibition of 1862, excited much admiration.

In R. Reece's ice-making machine (made known Dec. 1868), liquefied ammonia is vaporized in a close vessel surrounded by water to be frozen. Mr. Harrison's method of freezing was applied to preservation of meat in Australia, a cargo of carcases was shipped from Norfolk, Australia, 13 July, 1873. Not successful. (See Ice, Provisions.)

Congo River (SW Africa). The natives on its bank and on the creeks having rifled the Gerulding, and committed other acts of piracy, were chastised by an expedition under commodore sir Wm. Hewitt, 3-11 Sept. 1875. Several villages and chiefs' houses were destroyed.

Congregation of the Lord, a name taken by the Scotch reformers, headed by John Knox, about 1546. Their leaders (the earls of Glencairn, Argyll, Morton, and others), called "lords of the congregation," signed the first bond or covenant which united the Protestants under one association, 3 Dec. 1557. Tytler.

Congregationalists, see Independents.

Congress. An assembly of princes or ministers for the settlement of the affairs of nations or of a people. The following are the most remarkable congresses of Europe.

Münster	1643-4
Nimeguen	1678-8
Ryswick	1697
Utrecht	1713
Solissons	1729
Antwerp	8 April, 1793

(See Alliances, Church, Conventions, etc.)

There was a colonial congress at Albany, N. Y. in the summer of 1754, when an attempt was made to confederate the British American colonies. Another was held at New York in 1765, to consider the adoption of measures in opposition to the Stamp Act. The congress of the United States held their sessions at the following places:

In Philadelphia, from 5 Sept. 1774, until Dec. 1776.
In Baltimore, from 20 Dec. 1776, until March, 1777.
In Philadelphia, from 4 March 1777, until Sept. 1777.
In Lancaster, Pa. from 27-30 Sept. 1777.
In York, Pa. from 30 Sept. 1777, until July, 1778.
In Philadelphia, from 2 July 1778, until 30 June, 1780.
In Princeton, N. J. 30 June 1783.
In Annapolis, Md., 26 Nov. 1783.
In Trenton, N. J., 30 Nov. 1784.

In New York, 11 Jun. 1785. The congress met there until 1790, when Philadelphia was made the Federal capital for 10 years. Washington (City D. C., has been the capital since the session of 1800.

The first general congress of the United States of America, preparatory to their declaration of independence when strong resolutions were passed also a petition to the king, and an address to the people of England, was held 4 Sept. 1774. The second was held 10 May, 1776, the third, in 1776, when the independence was declared. 1776

The first federal American congress, under the constitution, was held at New York, George Washington, president. 1789

The first congress of the seceding southern states was held at Montgomery, Alabama, 4 Feb., it elected Jefferson Davis president of the confederate states on 9 Feb. For political reasons it adjourned on 24 May to meet at Richmond in Virginia, on 20 July, 1863

In 1864 the emperor Napoleon invited the sovereigns of Europe to a congress, which was declined by England 25 Nov., and only conditionally acceded to by other powers. He proposed a congress on the affairs of Italy and Rome in Nov. 1867, without effect.

Congreve Rockets, see Rockets.

Conic Sections. Their properties were probably known to the Greeks, four or five centuries before the Christian era, and their study was cultivated in the time of Plato, 390 B.C. The earliest treatise on them was written by Aristotle, about 330 B.C. Apollonius's eight books were written about 240 B.C. The parabola was applied to projectiles by Galileo, the ellipse to the orbit of planets by Kepler, and to comets by Newton.

Conjuration, see Witchcraft.

Connaissance des Temps, the French nautical almanac, continuing Hecker's Ephemerides, was first published by Picard, 1679.

Connaught (W. Ireland); long a nominal kingdom, divided into counties. 1690. Prince Arthur was created duke of Connaught, 23 May, 1874; being the first royal prince whose leading title was Irish.

The Duke of Connaught's Establishment Act, passed 8 Aug. 1878, made the same provision for the duke as for his brother Alfred, see Edinburgh. The duke was married to the princess Louise Margaret of Prussia, 13 March, 1879.

Connecticut granted to Lord Say and Broke, 1630. First settled, 1633. Connecticut was one of the original states, and the fifth to adopt the Federal constitution, 1788; see America and United States.

Connor (Ireland). The bishopric was united to that of Down, 412. The first prelate, Eugen Macneilus, died 507. The united sees were added to Downmore on the death of its last bishop, 1842, in accordance with the Irish Church Temporalities act 1838.

Conquest, the era in British history when William duke of Normandy overcame Harold II at the battle of Hastings, 14 Oct. 1066, and obtained the crown which he asserted had been bequeathed to him by Edward the Confessor (Edgar being the rightful heir). William has been erroneously styled the Conqueror for he succeeded to the crown of England by compact. He defeated Harold, who was himself a usurper, but a large portion of the kingdom afterwards held out against him and he, unlike a conqueror, took an oath to observe the laws and customs of the realm, in order to induce the submission of the people. Formerly our judges were accustomed to reprehend any gentleman at the bar who said casually William the Conqueror, instead of William I.—Setden. MacLise exhibited forty-two drawings on the events of the Norman conquest, in May, 1857. E. A. Freeman's "History of the Norman Conquest," 6 vols., 1870-9, is highly esteemed.

Conscience Clause, see Education.

Conscience, Courts of, or of Requests for recovery of small debts, constituted by a stat. of Hen. VII. 1493, and reorganized by stat. 9 Hen. VIII. 1517. These courts were improved and amended by various acts; their jurisdiction in London reached to 5*l*. and (until superseded by county courts) to 40*s*. in other towns. The practice was by summons, and, if the party did not appear, the commissioners had power to apprehend and commit; see County Courts.

Conscience, LIBERTY OF, a principle of genuine Christianity (1 Cor. x. 29); repudiated by Romanism, proclaimed by James II. for political purposes, 1687.

Conscience Money. In the year ending 31 March, 1873, 9847*l*. were sent to the chancellor of the exchequer for unpaid income-tax; 1874, 8588*l*.; 1877, 14,835*l*.; 1878, 5572*l*.; 1879, 6732*l*.; 1880, 5801*l*.

Conscrip Fathers (patres conscripti), the designation given to the Roman senators because their names were written in the registers of the senate.

Conscription, a mode (derived from the Romans) adopted for recruiting armies on the continent. On 5 Sept. 1798, a military conscription was ordained in France, comprehending all the young men from 20 to 25 years of age: from whom selections were made. A conscription for 350,000 men took place in Jan. 1813, after the disastrous Russian campaign, and in Dec. same year another for 300,000 after the battle of Leipsic. Estimated conscription, 1793–1813, 4,103,000. The law of 1818 (modified in 1824, 1832, and 1868) required a certain annual contingent for each department. The conscription was enlarged and modified by the army bill which was enacted in Feb. 1868. The reorganization of the army began in 1871, after the fatal war with Germany. Substitutes were allowed under certain conditions. Conscription for Great Britain was advocated and strongly opposed in 1875; see Militia. In the American Civil War (1861–5) conscription was resorted to by both the national and confederate governments. The national armies, however, were only indirectly affected by the measure, as a sufficient number of volunteers were induced by large bounties to enlist for long terms of service. The first conscription law of the Confederacy was passed 16 April, 1862. It annulled all contracts made with volunteers for short terms, holding them for two additional years, and made every white male in the South between 18 and 35 liable to be brought into service at a moment's notice. On 27 Sept. the law was extended to include those between 35 and 45 years of age. In July, 1863, all between 18 and 45 were called into active service. In Feb. 1864, the law was extended to include all between 17 and 50; see Riots in New York City.

Consecration. Aaron and his sons were consecrated priests, 1490 B.C. (Lev. viii.). The Jewish tabernacle was dedicated 1490 B.C., and Solomon's temple 1004 B.C. (1 Kings viii.). The consecration of churches began in the second century. Anciently the consecration of popes was deferred until the emperor had given his assent to their election. Gregory IV. desired to have his election confirmed by the emperor Louis in 828.—Henault. The consecration of churches, places of burial, etc., is admitted in the reformed religion. An act relating to the consecration of church-yards, passed 20 Aug. 1867, was amended in 1868. A form of consecration was adopted by convocation, but not sanctioned by the crown, April, 1712. It is generally used, but is not compulsory.—Burn. The form of consecrating bishops in the church of England is set forth in the prayer-book of 1549.—Stow.

Conservation of Force. The doctrine that no physical force can be created or destroyed, but may be transferred, is maintained by Faraday, Grove, Helmholtz, Tyndall, and other philosophers; see Correlation.

Conservatives, a name of modern date, is given to and accepted by a political party whose leading principle is the preservation of our national institutions, since 1830. Conservative in popular language is now opposed to Liberal. It was termed a new cant word by T. B. Macaulay in Edinburgh Review, July, 1832. Sir Robert Peel acknowledged himself a conservative when reproached by the Irish party in parliament with being an Orangeman; but the party that afterwards separated from him called their principles conservative in contradistinction to his—his policy and measures being changed.—The Conservative Club was founded in 1840; see Protectionists and Clubs. A great meeting of the National Union of Conservative Associations was held at the Crystal Palace, 24 June, 1872. The party in the minority at the elections in 1868 obtained a majority at those in Feb. 1874, and came into office. They were again in a minority at the general election, and resigned 22 April, 1880. The marquess of Salisbury was elected leader of the party, 9 May, 1881, succeeding the earl of Beaconsfield, who died 19 April previous; see Derby and Disraeli.

Conservatoires, a name given to establishments for the cultivation of music and the arts on the Continent. One was established at Naples in 1537. The singing-school at Paris, founded in 1784, and closed in 1789, was reopened in 1793 as the "Institut National de Musique;" and, after being reorganized, was renamed "Conservatoire de Musique" in 1795, and flourished under Cherubini (1822–42). The "Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers" was established in 1784. It includes a museum and library, and lectures are given to workmen there.

Conservators of the Public Liberties, officers chosen in England to inspect the treasury and correct abuses in administration, 28 Hen. III., 1244.—Rapin. Conservators were appointed to see the king's peace kept.—Pardon. Conservators were formerly appointed in every seaport to take cognizance of all offences committed against the peace upon the main sea out of the liberty of the Cinque Ports.—Bailey.

Consistories, for regulating ecclesiastical discipline and divine worship in the Lutheran church in Germany, were established at the Reformation—the first at Wittenberg, in 1542, other consistories were established after the peace of Augsburg, in 1555.

Consistory Court, anciently joined with the hundred court; and its original, as divided therefrom, is found in a law of William I., 1079, quoted by lord-justice Coke. The chief and most ancient consistory court of the kingdom belongs to the see of Canterbury, and is called the Court of Arches (which see).

Consolidated Fund was formed by combining the "aggregate," "general," and "South-sea funds," 1786. On 5 Jan. 1816, the exchequers of Great Britain and Ireland, previously separate, were amalgamated, forming "the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom."

Conspiracy and Protection to Property Act, passed 13 Aug. 1875; relates to trade disputes, breaches of contract, etc.

Constable of ENGLAND, LORD-HIGH, the seventh great officer of the crown, and, with the earl marshal, formerly a judge of the court of chivalry, called, in the time of Henry IV., curia militaris, and subsequently the court of honor. The power of this officer was so great that in 1389 a statute was passed for abridging it, and also the power of the earl marshal (which see). The office existed before the conquest, after which it went by inheritance to the earls of Hereford and Essex, and next in the line of Stafford. In 1521 it was forfeited by Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, attainted for high-treason, and has never since been granted to any person otherwise than pro hac vice (for this occasion) to attend at a coronation or trial by combat. The only instance of a trial by combat being ordered since this office fell into the hands of the crown was that commanded between lord Reay and Mr. David Ramsey, in Nov. 1681; but the king prevented it.

LORD-HIGH CONSTABLES AT CORONATIONS.

Queen Anne, Wriothesley, duke of Bedford.	1702
George I., John, duke of Montague.	1714
George II., Charles, duke of Richmond.	1727
George III., John, duke of Bedford.	1761
George IV.	1821
William IV. } Arthur, duke of Wellington.	1831
Victoria }	1838

Constable of SCOTLAND, LORD-HIGH. The office was instituted by David I. about 1147. The holder had the keeping of the king's sword, which the king, at his promotion, delivered to him naked (and hence the badge of the lord-high constable is a naked sword); and the absolute command of the king's armies while in the field, in the absence of the king. The office was conferred heritably in 1321 on sir Gilbert Hay, created earl of Erroll, by Robert Bruce; and with his descendants it still remains, being expressly reserved by the treaty of union in 1707. The present earl of Erroll is the twenty-second lord-high constable (1881).

Constables of Hundreds and Franchises, instituted in the reign of Edward I., 1285, are now called high-constables. There are three kinds of constables, high, petty, and special: the high-constable's jurisdiction extends to the whole hundred; the petty constable's to the parish or liberty for which he is chosen; and the special constable is appointed for particular emergencies (as in April, 1848, on account of the Chartists). The general appointment of parish constables was made unnecessary by an act passed Aug. 1872; see Special Constables and Tinner.

Constabulary Force. For that of London, see Police. The Constabulary of Ireland act passed in 1823, when this species of force was embodied throughout the country. Several subsequent acts were consolidated in 1836.

Constance, a city in Baden (S. Germany). Here was held the seventeenth general council, 1414-18, which condemned John Huss; and here he was burned, 6 July, 1415; see Hussites.

Constantina, the ancient capital of Numidia, was taken by the French, 13 Oct. 1837. During the assault on 12 Oct. the French general Damremont was killed. Achmet Bey retired with 12,000 men as the victors entered Constantina.

Constantinople (formerly Byzantium, which see), now Stamboul, derives its name from Constantine the Great, who removed the seat of the Eastern Empire here, dedicating it 11 May, 330; see Eastern Empire.

General ecclesiastical councils against heresy were held here in 381, 553, 680, and 869.

CONFERENCE on Turkish affairs; representatives: Great Britain, marquess of Salisbury; Russia, gen. Ignatieff; France, Chaudry; Austria, Zichy; Germany, Von Werther; Italy, Cori; ordinary meetings began	23 Dec. 1876

Turkey rejected the propositions and the conference closed. 20 Jan. 1877

Treaty of peace with Russia: 12 articles; Turkey accepted modifications of treaty of San Stefano (which see); an indemnity of about 802,500,000 francs to be paid by Turkey (settlement deferred); Russian troops to quit within 40 days, etc.; signed. 8 Feb. 1879

By the falling down of a barracks at Beyko about 200 soldiers said to be killed. about 9 Feb. 1880
(See Turkey.)

ERA OF CONSTANTINOPLE has the creation placed 5508 years B.C. It was used by the Russians until the time of Peter the Great, and is still used in the Greek church. The civil year begins 1 Sept., and the ecclesiastical year in March: the day is not exactly determined. To reduce it to our era, subtract 5508 years from Jan. to Aug., and 5509 from Sept. to the end.—Nicolas.

Constellations. Arcturus, Orion, the Pleiades, and Mazzaroth are mentioned in Job ix. 9, and xxxviii. 31, about 1520 B.C. Homer and Hesiod notice constellations; but our first direct knowledge was derived from Claudius Ptolemaeus, about A.D. 140. Hipparchus (about 147 B.C.) made a catalogue of forty-eight constellations, and others were added by Tycho Brahe, Hevelius, Halley, and others. The number at present acknowledged is 29 northern, 45 southern, and 12 zodiacal.

Constituencies, see Commons, House of.

Constituent, see National Assembly.

Constitution of ENGLAND. It comprehends the whole body of laws by which the British people are governed, and to which it is presumptively held that every individual has assented.—Lord Somers. This assemblage of laws is distinguished from the term government in this respect—that the constitution is the rule by which the sovereign ought to govern at all times; and government is that by which he does govern at any particular time.—Lord Bolingbroke. The king of England is not seated on a solitary eminence of power: on the contrary, he sees his equals in the coexisting branches of the legislature, and he recognizes his superior in the law.—Sheridan. Hallam's "Constitutional History of England" was first published in 1827; May's in 1861-3.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES was formed by representatives of the people of the different states, who met in convention at Philadelphia, in May, 1787, and chose Washington to preside over their deliberations. They closed their labors in Sept. following, and, by a resolution of the general congress, the instrument they had framed was submitted to the consideration of the people of the several states for rejection or ratification. The several states ratified the constitution in the following order:

Delaware.....	7 Dec. 1787	South Carolina..	23 May, 1788
Pennsylvania..	12 Dec. "	N. Hampshire..	21 June, "
New Jersey....	18 Dec. "	Virginia.....	26 June, "
Georgia.....	3 Jan. 1788	New York.....	26 July, "
Connecticut.....	9 Jan. "	North Carolina..	21 Nov. "
Massachusetts..	6 Feb. "	Rhode Island..	29 May, 1790
Maryland.....	20 April, "

Constitutionalist Party, a name assumed by a combination of conservatives and seceded Whigs, Aug. 1867, and used during the severely contested elections, Nov. 1868. The Constitutional Union held its first anniversary, 20 June, 1861.

Constitutions of France, enacted 1789-91, 1795, 1799, (charter) 1814, 1848, 1852, 1875.

Consubstantiation, see Transubstantiation.

Consuls (meaning colleagues), ROMAN. At the expulsion of the Tarquins, a republic was established, to be ruled by two consuls elected annually, the first being Lucius Junius Brutus and Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus, husband of the injured Lucretia, 509 B.C. The consular power was in emergencies superseded by dictators and tribunes.

A plebeian elected consul 368
[In the reign of Tiberius the consuls were nominated by the senate, and the appointment became henceforth honorary.]

The French consulate established when the directory was abolished Bonaparte, Siéyès and Roger Ducos made provisional consular commissioners, 10 Nov.; Bonaparte, Cambacérès, and Lebrun made consuls, 13 Dec. 1799. Bonaparte was made first consul for 10 years, 6 May, and for life, 2 Aug. 1802, emperor 18 May, 1804. Commercial agents were first distinguished by the name of consuls in Italy. Lorenzo Strozzi was appointed by Richard III. 1486. A British consul first appointed in Portugal 1633.

Contagious Diseases Act, for naval and military stations, passed June, 1866; amended, 1869-71; one for animals passed 1866, renewed 1867, amended 1869. Although the operation of the first act was reported to be successful, it has been much opposed. A royal commission appointed to inquire reported July, 1871, and alterations have been proposed. Its repeal negatived in the commons (308-126), 23 June, 1875; (224-102), 19 July, 1876. A new act for animals was passed 16 Aug. 1878; see Cattle.

Continental Money. This was the title given to the bills of credit issued by the congress of the united colonies of America during the war for independence. When that war broke out Spanish coin was the principal metallic currency in the colonies. Its quantity was entirely inadequate for the emergency; and when the war was fairly commenced, after the battle of Bunker's Hill, the congress imitated some of the colonial governments, and issued bills of credit. During 1775, bills to the amount of $3,000,000 were issued. Other issues were made, until, at the beginning of 1780, their bills of credit had been put forth to the amount of $200,000,000, with promises to be redeemed "in Spanish milled dollars." After the second year of their emission (1777), these bills began to depreciate rapidly, for the prospect of their redemption appeared very remote and problematical. Various measures were adopted to sustain their credit, but in vain. They depreciated more and more rapidly. In 1780, forty paper dollars were worth only one in specie, and in 1781 they were utterly valueless. They had afforded temporary relief, but were finally productive of much public evil and individual suffering. These bills are now rare objects in the collections of the curious.

Continental System, the name given to Napoleon's plan to exclude the British merchandise from the entire Continent. It began publicly with his Berlin decree in 1806, and occasioned the Orders in Council (which see).

Continuity. Mr. (afterwards sir) W. R. Grove, in his address as president of the British Association, on 23 Aug. 1866, at Nottingham, expounded the opinion held by many philosophers that all the past changes in the world have been produced by the continuous action of the causes now in operation—that "continuity is a law of nature, the true expression of the action of Almighty power."

Contraband of War, a term said to have been first employed in the treaty of Southampton between England and Spain in 1623. During the struggle between Spain and Holland, both powers acted with much rigor towards ships of neutrals conveying goods to the belligerents. This provoked the resistance of England. A milder policy was adopted by the treaty of Pyrenees, 1659, and by the declaration of Paris, 26 April, 1856. The subject was much discussed during the North American conflict, 1861-4.

Contractors with government disqualified from sitting in parliament, 1782.

Contre-danse (English, country-dance), a dance, so called from the dancers being opposite each other, was introduced into France (probably from England) about 1715 et seq.

Contreras, BATTLE OF, fought between Americans and Mexicans, 20 Aug. 1847. Americans stormed a fortified camp defended by 6000 Mexicans, and were completely victorious, taking the stronghold, and capturing 80 officers, 3000 soldiers, and 35 guns.

Contributions, VOLUNTARY, to a vast amount have been several times made by the British people in aid of the government. One in 1796, to support the war against France, amounted to two millions and a half sterling. Several men of wealth, among others sir Robert Peel, of Bury, Lancashire, subscribed each 10,000*l.*; and 200,000*l.* were transmitted from India in 1799; see Patriotic Fund. For India, etc., see Mansion House.

Control, BOARD OF. Mr. Pitt's bill establishing this board, for the purpose of aiding and controlling the executive government of India, and of superintending the territorial concerns of the company, was passed 18 May, 1784. Act amended and the board remodelled, 1798. The president of the board was a chief minister of the crown, and necessarily one of the members of the cabinet. This board was abolished in 1858, when the government of India was transferred from the company to the crown; see Indian Bills and India.

Control Department, in the British army, was divided into the commissariat and transport department, and the ordnance-store department; the old title was abolished; order issued 11 Dec. 1875.

Convalescent Institution (Metropolitan), at Walton-on-Thames, with children's branches at Hendon and Mitcham, was established in 1840; a branch at Bexhill, Sussex, was founded in 1880. A convalescent hospital for the east of London was founded at Snarebrook in 1866, greatly due to the exertions of Mr. and Mrs. Charlesworth, Mrs. Gladstone, and Miss Catherine Marsh. The principle has been since much adopted. Homes at Ramsgate, 1866; Waltham, 1867; Margate, 1873, etc.

Conventicles, private assemblies for religious worship, held by dissenters from the established church, but first applied to the schools of Wicliffe. They were strictly forbidden by Elizabeth in 1553, and by Charles II., 1664; and persons attending them were liable to severe punishment. The statutes were repealed by the Toleration act, 24 May, 1689.

Convention Parliaments assembled without the king's writ upon extraordinary occasions. One on 25 April, 1680, voted the restoration of Charles II. A second, met 22 Jan. 1689, offered the crown to William and Mary 18 Feb., and dissolved in Feb. 1690; see National Convention.

Conventions, see Treaties.

Convents were first founded, according to some authorities, 270. The first in England was erected at Folkstone, by Eadbald, in 630.—Camden. The first in Scotland was at Coldingham, where Ethelreda took the veil in 670. They were founded earlier in Ireland. They were suppressed in England in various reigns, particularly in that of Henry VIII. A very great number have been suppressed in Europe in the present century. The king of Prussia secularized all the convents in the duchy of Posen. Dom Pedro put down 300 convents in Portugal in 1834, and Spain abolished 1800 convents. Many were abolished in Italy and Sicily in 1860, 1861, and 1866, and many in Russia, 31 July, 1832, and Nov. 1864.

In 1597 lady Mary Percy founded a convent at Brussels, which flourished there till 1794, when the nuns were compelled to remove to England. They were received by bishop Milner, and placed at Winchester, at which place they remained till their removal to East Bergholt, in Suffolk, June, 1857. This was the first English conventual establishment founded on the continent after the Reformation.

By the Emancipation act of 1829, 10 Geo. IV., the establishment of convents and other religious communities in the United Kingdom was prohibited, but this enactment has been a dead letter. 1829
There were, in 1832, 16 convents in England; in 1870, 233; and 70 monasteries in Great Britain.

A select committee to investigate into the revenues of British convents appointed by the commons, 10 May, 1870; reappointed. Feb. 1871

The committee reported the evidence heard. June, " Mr. Newdegate's motion for an inquiry respecting these institut ions was negatived. 13 June, 1874

Large convent at Bournemouth, in connection with church of England, opened. 3 Oct. 1875

A Carmelite convent, specially patronized by the duke of Norfolk and family, at St. Charles's square, Notting Hill, London, W., opened by cardinal Manning, 29 Sept. 1878

Many convents in France abolished by decree, 29 March, 1880

Conveyancing Act (Scotland) passed 7 Aug. 1874.

Convicts, see Transportation.

Convocation, a general assembly of the clergy of the nation, convened by the sovereign's writ, to consult on the affairs of the church; the writ is directed to the archbishop of each province, requiring him to summon all the bishops, archdeacons, etc. The convocation is divided into two houses—the upper, consisting of bishops; and lower, of deans, prebendaries, archdeacons, and members elected from the inferior clergy. The clergy were summoned to meet the king by writ, 23 Edw. I. 1294. The power of the convocation was limited by a statute of Henry VIII., in whose reign the convocation was reorganized. The two houses of convocation were deprived of various privileges in 1716, and ceased to meet. Formal meetings of the clergy have been held annually during the sitting of parliament since 1854, and fruitless attempts have been made to obtain the power of dealing summarily with ecclesiastical affairs; but in Feb. 1872, convocation was authorized to deliberate respecting alterations in the Liturgy; upon which it acted 5 March; and again in 1789.

Convolvulus. The Canary convolvulus (Convolvulus canariensis) came to England from the Canary Isles, 1690. The many-flowered, 1779.

Cookery, an art connected with civilized life. Animals were granted as food to Noah, 2348 B.C., the eating of blood being expressly forbidden (Gen. ix. 3, 4). In 1898 B.C. a calf was cooked by Abraham to entertain his guests (Gen. xviii. 7, 8). "The Forme of Cury" (i. e. cookery) is dated 1390. An English cookery-book was printed 1498; see Cottager's Store.

Military Cookery.—Capt. Grant devised a system of cooking for the camp at Aldershot, which has continued in successful operation for the service of between 12,000 and 14,000 men. From April to August, in 1857, the plan was subjected to the severe test of cooking for 92,000 men, who marched in and out of the encampment during that period. The consumption of fuel requisite for this system of cooking was one half-pound of coal per man per day, and the official report states the cost to be one halfpenny per man per week for the three daily meals.

Self-supporting cooking depots for the working classes were set up at Glasgow (by Mr. Thomas Corbett), 21 Sept. 1860; and proved successful in Manchester, London, and other places soon after.

Three medals were awarded to the Norwegian self-acting cooking apparatus (Sorenson's patent) at the Paris Exhibition, 1867. Cooking is effected by boiling water, the heat of which is maintained by enclosing it in a non-conducting substance.

A School of Cookery was opened at the international exhibition, South Kensington, 14 April, 1873.

A National Training-school for Cookery, proposed 17 July, 1873, was established in 1874.

In the United States, schools of cookery have become common in the large cities since 1874.

Cook's Voyages. James Cook, accompanied by Mr. (afterwards sir) Joseph Banks, sailed from England in the Endeavor on his first voyage, 30 July, 1768; and returned home, after having circumnavigated the globe, arriving at Deal 12 June, 1771. The chief object of the expedition, at the request of the Royal Society, was the observation of the transit of Venus over the sun's disk, which was effected 3 June, 1769. Capt. Cook sailed to explore the southern hemisphere 13 July, 1772. In his last expedition (began 12 July, 1776) he was killed by the savages of Owhyhee, 14 Feb. 1779. His ships, the Resolution and Discovery, arrived at Sheerness 4 Oct. 1780.

Coolies, the hill-tribes of India, have been recently much employed as laborers in Australia and California, especially since 1861; and about 30,000 of them were conveyed by M. Koopmanschap to assist in making the great Pacific Railway. His proposal in 1869 to replace the negroes in the Southern States of North America for the cultivation of cotton was not accepted. "The Coolie, his Rights and Wrongs," by E. Jenkins, was published 1871. Coolie emigration has been the subject of negotiation between the British and Chinese governments since 1855.

Cooperage, an ancient art, probably suggested for preserving wine. The coopers of London were incorporated in 1501.

Co-operative Societies are composed of working-men, having for their object the sale of articles of daily consumption to the members at low prices. The Rochdale Equitable Pioneers' Society began in 1844, with a capital of 28*l*. In 1860 the business done amounted to 152,063*l*., the profits being 15,906*l*. These societies (332 in 1862) are registered pursuant to 13 and 14 Vict. c. 115 (1849). On 31 Dec. 1866, 749 industrial, provident, and co-operative societies were registered. By an act passed in 1867 they are bound to make a return. The fourth congress met at Bolton, 1 April, 1872; fifth at Newcastle, 12 April, 1873; sixth at Halifax, 6 April, 1874; seventh in London, 29 March, 1875; eighth at Glasgow, 17 April, 1876; ninth at Leicester, 2 April, 1877; twelfth at Newcastle, 17 May, 1880; thirteenth at Leeds, 6 June, 1881. A national trade society in opposition to co-operation was formed in 1872.

CO-OPERATIVE COTTON-MILLS in south Lancashire were reported successful in 1875.

OUTSEBURN CO-OPERATIVE ENGINEERING WORKS, established 1871, failed through want of capital: wound up 1875.

Much discontent among London tradesmen on account of the numerous co-operative stores, 1878-80.

Coorg, a province, S. India. War broke out between the rajah and the East India Company 1832, which ended by col. Lindsay defeating and deposing the rajah, 10 April, 1834, and his territories were soon after annexed by the British. In 1853 the rajah brought his daughter to be educated in England, where she was baptized. She married a col. Campbell, and died a few years after.

Copenhagen (Denmark), built by Waldemar I., 1157; made the capital, 1443; the university founded, 1479. In 1728 more than seventy of its streets and 3785 houses were burned. Its palace, valued at four millions sterling, was wholly burned, Feb. 1794, when 100 persons lost their lives. In a fire which lasted forty-eight hours, the arsenal, admiralty, and fifty streets were destroyed, June, 1795. A new national theatre was founded by the king, 18 Oct. 1872.—Copenhagen was bombarded by the English under lord Nelson and admiral Parker; and in their engagement with the Danish fleet of twenty-three ships of the line, eighteen were taken or destroyed by the British, 2 April, 1801. Again, after a bombardment of three days, the city and Danish fleet surrendered to Admiral Gambier and Lord Cathcart, 7 Sept. 1807. The capture consisted of eighteen sail of the line, fifteen frigates, six brigs, and twenty-five gunboats, and immense naval stores. Population, with suburbs, 1860, 273,727; see Denmark.

Copenhagen Fields (N. London). Here the Corresponding Society met on 26 Oct. 1796; and the Trades' Union, 21 April, 1834. The fields are now chiefly occupied by the Metropolitan Cattle-market, opened 18 June, 1856.

Copernican System, so called from its author, Nicolaus Copernicus, born at Thorn, 19 Feb. 1473; died 24 May, 1543. A few days before his death the printing of his book on the "Revolution of the Celestial Bodies" was completed. The system, which resembles that attributed to Pythagoras, was condemned by a decree of pope Paul V. in 1616; not revoked till 1818 by Pius VII.

Copley Medal, see Royal Society.

Copophone, a musical instrument, consisting of a series of glass tumbblers, connected with a sounding-board. The sounds are produced by moving wet fingers along the edge of the glasses. It was played on at parties in London in June, 1875, by chevalier Furtado Coelho, the inventor.

Copper One of the six primitive metals, said to have been first discovered in Cyprus.—Pliny. We read in the Scriptures of two vessels of fine copper (or brass): "precious as gold," 457 n.c. (Ezra viii. 27). The mines of Fahlun, in Sweden, are most surprising excavations. In England, copper-mines were discovered in 1561; and there are upwards of fifty mines in Cornwall, where mining has been increasing since the reign of William III. In 1857, 75,832 tons of copper ore were imported, and 25,211 tons extracted. In 1865, 196,298 tons of copper ore were extracted from British mines, and 11,890 tons smelted; 82,562 tons were imported. In 1856, 24,257 tons of pure copper (worth 2,963,611*l.*); in 1870, 8291 tons (worth 644,045*l.*); in 1875, 4382 tons (worth 808,984*l.*); in 1876, 4694 tons (worth 391,130*l.*); in 1879, 5462 tons (worth 222,507*l.*) were produced in the United Kingdom. The Burra-Burra copper-mines in S. Australia, discovered 1842, brought great prosperity. The copper-mines of the United States (in the Lake Superior region) are very rich, and as early as 1856 produced 5000 tons of ore. Their yield has been steadily increasing ever since that time.

Copper Money The Romans, prior to the reign of Nerva, used rude pieces of copper for money, see Coin. In England copper money was made at the instance of Sir Robert Cotton, in 1609, but was first really coined (when James Stewart sat for the figure of Britannia) 1666. Its regular coinage began in 1672, and it was largely issued in . . . 1698

In Ireland, copper was coined as early as 1530, in Scotland in 1606, in France in . . . 1606

Wood's coinage (which act) in Ireland commenced in . . . 1723

The copper coinage was largely manufactured at Birmingham, by Boulton and Watt, in . . . 1792

Copper plate printing was first invented in Germany, about 1480, and rolling presses for working the plates, about . . . 1844

Messrs. Perkins, of Philadelphia, invented a mode of engraving on soft steel, which, when hardened, will multiply copper plates and fine impressions indefinitely (see Engraving) . . . 1818

Copper engraving first applied to the bottom of R. M. A. steam, at Woolwich, 1761; all the navy copper-bottomed by . . . 1780

Electrotyping with copper printing types and casts from woodcuts, began . . . about 1840

Copper disc: Cox PLM, a voltaic arrangement made by Dr J. H. Gladstone and Mr A. Tribe in 1872, in which a mixture of the two metals is finely subdivided, with the points of junction exposed, so as to promote the decomposition of any binary liquid into which small pieces are immersed, the resistance of the liquid being greatly reduced. The couple is formed by immersing zinc foil in a solution of sulphate of copper, the copper being deposited on the zinc in minute particles. By this couple impurities in water are readily detected, many peculiar analyses have been made, and new organic bodies formed.

Copperas, a mineral composed of copper or iron combined with sulphuric acid (vitriol), found in copper-mines, commonly of a green or blue color; said to have been first produced in England by Cornelius de Vos, a merchant, in 1587.

 New movement was begun by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, who submitted a suggestion to the department of state, 25 Nov. 1878, embodying a proposed treaty on the subject.
 The Harper treaty approved by most of the prominent American authors in a letter to the secretary of state, Aug. 1880

Copyright in the UNITED STATES. A copyright law substantially the same as that now in force was made in 1831. The copyright law of 1856 secures to the authors of copyright plays the exclusive right of representing the same on the stage. The first copyright law of the United States was passed in 1790.

Corbiesdale, Caithness (N. Scotland). Here, on 27 April, 1650, the gallant marquis of Montrose was defeated by the Covenanters. He was taken soon after, treated with great contumely, and hanged at Edinburgh, on 21 May.

Corcyra (now Corfu, chief of the Ionian Isles), a colony founded by the Corinthians about 734 B.C. It had frequent wars with the mother-country; one about the possession of Epidamnus (431 B.C.) led to the Peloponnesian war. It was subdued by the Spartans in 373, and by the Romans, 230. At the decline of the eastern empire it fell into the hands of the Venetians, about A.D. 1149. The Turks attacked Corfu in 1716, but were gallantly repulsed. It was taken from the French by the allied Russian and Turkish fleets 3 March, 1799, and formed (with the other isles) into the Ionian republic; see Ionian Isles.

Cordeliers, friars of the order of St. Francis d'Assisi (the Minorites) instituted about 1223. They are clothed in coarse gray cloth, having a girdle of cord, hence the name, first given to them by St. Louis of France, about 1227. Several members of the French revolutionary party, termed "Cordeliers," established at Paris Dec. 1790 (Hebert, Cloots, etc.), were executed 24 March, 1794.

Cordova, the Roman Corduba (S. Spain), founded about 152 B.C., taken by the Goths A.D. 572, and made the capital of an Arab kingdom by Abderahman in 756, who founded the great mosque (now the cathedral) 786. It was the birthplace of Seneca and Lucan, and of the Arabian physician Averrhoës. It was rescued from the Arabs by Ferdinand III. of Castile, in 1236, was taken by the French under Dupont and disgracefully ravaged 7-9 June, 1808; surrendered to Joseph Bonaparte Jan. 1810; abandoned by the French in 1813; plundered by the Carlists, Oct. 1836.

Corinth (Miss.) U. S., BATTLE OF. Fought 3 Oct. 1862. Van Dorn, commanding the confederate army in Mississippi, attacked Rosecrans at Corinth, and was repulsed and driven for miles. The confederate force engaged was about 40,000, the national 20,000. Of the confederates 2268 were captured.

Corinthian Order, the richest of the orders of ancient architecture, called by Scamozzi the virginal order, is attributed to Callimachus, 540 B.C.; see Abacus.

Corinthian War, began 395 B.C.; received this name because mostly in the neighborhood of Corinth; waged by a confederacy of the Athenians, Thebans, Corinthians, and Argives, against the Lacedæmonians. It was closed by the peace of Antalcidas, 387 B.C. The most famous battles were at Coronea and Leuctra (which see).

Corioli, a Latin city, capital of the Volscians, taken by the Romans, 493 B.C. The exploits of Caius Marcius or Coriolanus against it are deemed mythical.

Cork (S. Ireland), built in the sixth century. The principality of the McCarlys was converted into a shire by king John, as lord of Ireland. The foundation of the see is ascribed to St. Barr, or Finbarr, early in the seventh century. About 1431, this see and Cloyne were united; but in 1678 they were separated, Ross having been added to Cork, 1582. Cork and Cloyne were reunited (by the act of 1833) 1835.

Cork-tree, Quercus suber, a species of the oak; part of its bark used for stopping bottles. The Egyptians made coffins of cork. The tree grows in great abundance on the Pyrenean mountains, and in other parts of Spain, in France, and in the north of New England. It was brought to England about 1690. A cork carpet company was formed in 1862.

Corn. The origin of its cultivation is attributed to Ceres, who, having taught the art to the Egyptians, was deified by them, 2409 B.C.—Arundelian Marbles. The art of husbandry, and the method of making bread from wheat, and wine from rice, is attributed by the Chinese to Ching Nong, the successor of Fohi, and second monarch of China, 1998 B.C.—Unic. Hist. Corn provided a common article of food from the earliest ages of the world, and baking bread was known in the patriarchal ages; see Exod. xii. 15. The first importation of corn of which we have a note was in 1347. A law restricting it was made in 1361, and similar legislation followed. Bounties were granted on its importation into England in 1689; see Wheat.

CORN LAWS.

The restrictions on the importation of corn felt, in consequence of the increase of manufactures, about 1770; relaxed.	1773
Mr. Robinson's act passed, permitting importation when wheat is 50s. a quarter.	1815
During the discussions on this bill, mobs assembled in London, and many of the houses of its supporters were damaged, 28 Jan.; and a riot in Westminster continued, 6-9 March.	"

Cornwall, S.W. extremity of England, originally called Kernow, a term connected with the Latin cornu, a horn, probably in allusion to its numerous promontories. On the retreat of the ancient Britons, Cornwall is said to have been formed into a kingdom, and to have existed many years under different princes, among whom were Ambrosius Aurelius and the celebrated Arthur. Cornwall is said to have been made an earldom by Alfred. The eldest son of the British sovereign is born duke of Cornwall; see Stannary Courts.

CORONATION CHAIR. In the cathedral of Cashel, formerly the metropolis of the kings of Munster, was deposited the Lia Fail, or Fatal Stone, on which they were crowned. Tradition says, that in 513 Fergus, a prince of the royal line, having obtained the Scottish throne, procured the use of this stone for his coronation at Dunstaffnage, where it continued until the time of Kenneth II., who removed it to Scone; and in 1296 it was removed by Edward I. from Scone to Westminster; the present chair being made to receive it.

A CORONATION OATH was administered by Dunstan, archbishop of Canterbury, to Ethelred II., in 978. An oath, nearly corresponding with that now in use, was administered in 1377. The oath prescribed by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 6 (1689), was modified in 1701, and again in 1821 on account of the union of the churches of England and Ireland.

Coronea, BATTLES OF. I. (or Chæronea). The Athenians were defeated and their general, Tolmides, slain in a battle with the Bæotians at Coronea near Chæronea, 447 B.C. II. The Athenians, Thebans, Argives, and Corinthians having entered into a league, offensive and defensive, against Sparta, Agesilaus, after diffusing the terror of his arms, from his many victories, even unto Upper Asia, engaged the allies at Coronea, a town of Boeotia, and achieved a great victory over them, 394 B.C.

Coroners, officers of the realm, mentioned in a charter, 925. Coroners for every county in England were first appointed by statute of Westminster, 3 Edw. I. 1275.—Stow. They are chosen for life by the freeholders, and their duty is to inquire into the cause of unnatural death, upon view of the body. By an act passed in 1843, coroners are enabled to appoint deputies to act for them in case of illness. Laws respecting coroners amended 1860.—20,531 coroners' inquests were held in England and Wales in 1859:

1861	21,038	1869	24,709		(18,875 males.)

Coronets, caps or inferior crowns of the nobility. The coronets for earls were first allowed by Henry III.; for viscounts by Henry VIII.; and for barons by Charles II.—Baker. But authorities conflict. Sir Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury, was the first of the degree of earl who wore a coronet, 1604. It is uncertain when the coronets of dukes and marquesses were settled.—Beutson.

Corporate Reunion, see Order.

Corporations. Numa, in order to break the force of the two rival factions of Sabines and Romans, is said to have instituted separate societies of manual trades.—Plutarch. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS IN ENGLAND. Bodies politic, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer, or more, and members, who are able, by their common consent, to grant or receive in law any matter within the compass of their charter.—Cowell. Charters of rights were granted by the kings of England to various towns, first by Edward the Confessor. Henry I. granted charters, 1100; and succeeding monarchs gave corporate powers to numerous communities throughout the realm, subject to tests, oaths, and conditions.—Blackstone. The Corporation and Test act, passed in 1661, was repealed in May, 1828. The Corporation Reform act, for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76 (1835), was amended in 1869. The Irish Municipal Corporation act, 4 Vict. c. 108, passed in 1840, was amended in 1861. The Corrupt Practices (Municipal elections) act was passed 6 Aug. 1872. The law relating to municipal elections amended by act passed 19 July, 1875. Royal commission on 110 unreformed municipal corporations appointed in 1876; report issued 17 Feb. 1880. Property qualification bill rejected in commons (173–167) 2 April, 1879.

Corpulence. In Germany some fat monks have weighed eighteen stone.—Render.

Mr. Bright, a tallow-chandler and grocer, of Maldon, in Essex, who died in his 29th year. Seven persons of the common size were with ease enclosed in his waistcoat; buried at All-Saints, Maldon. . . . 12 Nov. 1750
Daniel Lambert, supposed to have been the heaviest man that ever lived, died in his 40th year, at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, weighing 52 stone 11 pounds; (10 stone 4 pounds more than Mr. Bright). . . . 21 June, 1809
James Mansfield, died at Debben, aged 82, weighing 34 stone. . . . 9 Nov. 1856
Mr. William Banting published a letter on corpulence, recommending, from his own experience, as a remedy, great moderation in the use of sugar and starch in diet. 50,000 copies of this letter were speedily sold or given away. . . . 1863

Corpus Christi (Fête Dieu in France), a festival in the Roman church, in honor of transubstantiation, kept on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday (which see). It was instituted by pope Urban IV. between 1262 and 1264, and confirmed by the council of Vienne in 1311.

"Correlation of the Physical Forces," a book by Mr. (afterwards Sir) W. R. Grove, F. R. S., who in 1842 enunciated the theory of the correlation or mutual dependence and convertibility into each other of all the forces of nature (viz. heat, light, electricity, magnetism, chemical affinity, and motion).

Corresponding Society of London was formed, about 1791, to spread liberal opinions and check the severity of the British government, then much alarmed by the French revolution. Horne Tooke and other members were tried for treason and acquitted, Oct. 1794; see Trials, 1794. The meetings of the society at Copenhagen Fields and elsewhere, in 1795 and 1796, were termed treasonable.—On 21 April, 1798, Messrs. O'Connor, O'Coigley, and others were tried for corresponding with the French directory; and James O'Coigley was executed as a traitor (protesting his innocence) on 7 June.

Corrupt Practices Act, respecting elections for members of parliament, was passed in 1854, and continued in following years; see Bribery.

Corsica, an island in the Mediterranean Sea (called by the Greeks Cyros), held by the French. The ancient inhabitants had the character of robbers, liars, and atheists, according to Seneca. Corsica was colonized by Phœœans 564 B.C., and afterwards held by the Carthaginians, from whom it was taken by the Romans, 231 B.C. It has been held by Vandals, A.D. 456; by Saracens, 852; by Pisans, 1077. It was dependent upon Genoa from 1559 till 1768, when it was ceded to France.

He came to England, was imprisoned in the King's Bench prison for debt, and long subsisted on private friends, but released; he gave in his schedule the kingdom of Corsica to his creditors, and died in Soho. . . . 1756
The earl of Orford wrote the following epitaph for a tablet near his grave in St. Anne's church, Dean street:

"The grave, great teacher! to a level brings Heroes and beggars, galleys-slaves and kings.
But Theodore this moral learn'd ere dead;
Fate pour'd its lesson on his living head,
Bestowed a kingdom and denied him bread."

Corte Nuova, near Milan (N. Italy). Here the emperor Frederic II. defeated the Milanese after a severe conflict, 27 Nov. 1237.

Cortes, the Spanish parliament, originating in the old Gothic councils. The cortes were assembled after a long interval of years, 24 Sept. 1810, and settled the new constitution, 16 March, 1812, which was set aside by Ferdinand VII., who banished many members of the assembly in May, 1814. The cortes were reopened by him March, 1820; dissolved Oct. 1823; again assembled April, 1834, and have since been regularly convened. The cortes of Portugal assembled by virtue of dom Pedro's charter, 30 Oct. 1826; they were suppressed by dom Miguel in 1828; and restored in 1833.

Corunna (N.W. Spain). The British army, about 15,000 men, under the command of sir John Moore, had just accomplished their retreat when they were attacked by the French, whose force exceeded 20,000; the enemy were completely repulsed, but the loss of the British in the battle was immense, 16 Jan. 1809. Sir John was struck by a cannon-ball, which carried away his left shoulder and part of the collar-bone, and he died universally lamented. The remains of the army embarked at Corunna, under sir David Baird, 17 Jan.

Corus (Corupedion, or Cyropedion), a plain in Phrygia, Asia Minor, where the aged Lysimachus was defeated by Seleucus, and slain, 281 B.C. These two were the only survivors of Alexander the Great's generals.

Corvée, forced labor and service under the feudal system in France, was partially reduced by Louis XVI., at the instigation of Turgot, 27 June, 1787; by the constituent assembly, 18 March, 1790; and totally abolished by the convention, 17 July, 1792.

Coryphæus, the principal person of the chorus in ancient tragedy. The name was given to Tysias or Stesichorus, who first instructed the chorus to dance to the lyre, 556 B.C.

"Cospatrick," emigrant vessel, burned; see Wrecks, 1874.

Cossacks, warlike people inhabiting the confines of Poland, Russia, Tartary, and Turkey. They at first lived by plundering the Turkish galleys and the people of Nátolia; but were formed into a regular army by Stephen Bathori, about 1576, to defend the frontiers of Russia from the Tartars. They joined the Russians in 1654, and in the great war against France (1813-15) formed a valuable portion of the Russian army.

Cossova, a plain in Servia. Here Amurath I. totally defeated the Christian army (Servians, Hungarians, etc.), Sept. 1389; but was himself killed by an expiring soldier. Here John Huniades was defeated by a Turkish army four times larger than his own, 17 Oct. 1448.

Costa Rica, a republic in Central America, part of Guatemala, established independently Nov. 1848. It has been much disturbed by the American filibusters; see Nicaragua, and America, Central. Constitution, 27 Dec. 1859. On 14 Aug. 1859, the president Juan Mora was suddenly deposed, and Dr. José Monteleagre made president; Dr. J. Ximenes elected president 3 April, 1863; was succeeded by Dr. Joseph Castro, 8 May, 1866; deposed; J. Jimenez, governor, Nov. 1868; Vicente Quadra proclaimed president 12 March, 1871; J. M. Guardia, president, elected 1871 for 1872-6; Aniceto Esquivel, elected 8 May, 1876; Vicente Herrera, 31 July, 1876; resigned; succeeded by Thomas Guardia, Oct. 1877. Population 1880, estimated, 185,000.

Costermongers, itinerant dealers in fruit, vegetables, fish, etc., deriving their name, it is said, from costard, a favorite apple. The London costermongers are useful in relieving the markets when glutted; and it was said in 1860 that 3,000,000, passed through their hands annually. Previous to fasting and thanksgiving days, they sell the appointed forms of prayers in great numbers. On 22 Nov. 1860, they held a meeting in order to represent to the city authorities the hardships they felt by the police restricting their means of livelihood; and the Metropolitan Streets Act was modified, 7 Dec. 1867.

Their moral and physical condition has been much improved of late years, greatly through the instrumentality of the earl of Shaftesbury, who constituted himself a costermonger, and owned a barrow in 1874.

Cottage. The term was originally applied to a small house without land, 4 Edw. I. 1275. "No man may build a cottage, except in towns, unless he lay four acres of land thereto," etc., 31 Eliz. 1589. This statute was repealed, 15 Geo. III. 1775. By returns to the tax-office, in 1786, the number of cottages was 284,459. The number in 1800 was 428,214; the number in 1840 was about 770,000. In 1860 the public attention was much drawn to the deplorable state of cottages in many parts of the country, and the law of settlement was altered in 1865. Mr. Disraeli (afterwards lord Beaconsfield) said that "every cottage should have a tank, an oven, and a porch."

Cottage Improvement Society, founded 12 April, 1861, 7 Adam street, Strand. Some of the society's models Cottage Hospitals: much advocated by Dr. Horace Swete in 1870. Many since then have been established: one by the baroness Burdett-Coutts, 1878.

Cotton, a vegetable wool, the produce of the Gossypium, a shrub indigenous to the tropical regions of India and America. Indian cotton cloth is mentioned by Herodotus, was known in Arabia in the time of Mahomet, 627, and was brought into Europe by his followers. It does not appear to have been in use among the Chinese till the thirteenth century; to them we are indebted for the cotton fabric termed nankeen. Cotton was the material of the principal articles of clothing among the American Indians when visited by Columbus. It was grown and manufactured in Spain in the tenth century; and in the fourteenth century was introduced into Italy. Indian muslins, chintzes, and cottons were so largely imported into England in the seventeenth century, that in 1700 an act of parliament was passed prohibiting their introduction. Cotton became the staple commodity of England in the present century. About 1841 the "cotton" or "Manchester" interest began to obtain political influence, which led to the repeal of the corn laws in 1846; see Calico, Muslin, etc.

Fustian and retzelen made of cotton, about 1641.

Calico sheeting, etc. The fly-shuttle was invented by John Kay, of Bury, 1738; the drop-box by Robert Kay, 1760; spinning by rollers (also attributed to John Wyatt) patented by Louis Paul, 1738; the spinning-jenny, by Hargreaves, 1767; the water-frame, by Arkwright, 1769; the power-loom, by rev. Dr. Edmund Cartwright, 1785; the dressing-machine, by Johnson and Radcliffe, 1802-4; another power-loom, by Horrocks, 1803-13. A combing machine was patented by Joshua Heilmann, in 1845.

British muslin (totally superseding that of India) is due mainly to the invention of the MULE (which see) by Samuel Crompton, 1774-9; and to the self-acting mule of Mr. Roberts, 1825.

Calico printing commenced 1764.

The Steam-engine first applied to the cotton manufacture (by Boulton and Watts), 1785.

First cotton factory in America established at East Bridgewater, Mass., 1787. First Arkwright machinery used in America, in Providence, R. I., Dec. 1790. First power-looms in the United States, 1813.

Bleaching by means of chloride of lime introduced by Mr. Tennant, of Glasgow, 1798.

Stockings. The stocking frame was invented by William Lee, in 1689. Cotton stockings were first made by hand about 1730; Jedediah Strutt obtained a patent for Derby-ribbed stockings in 1759; and Horton patented his knitter-thread in 1776; Crompton's mule was employed in making thread for the stocking manufacture about 1770.

Cotton-lace—Bobbins-net. The stocking-frame of Lee was applied to lace-making by Hammond, about 1768; the process perfected by John Heathcoat, 1809.

American cotton. Previous to 1795, our cotton fibre came from the East and West Indies, the Levant, and a little from the United States. About 1786 the growth of cotton began in Georgia. In 1784 eight bags of American cotton were seized at Liverpool on the ground that so much could not have been produced in the United States. Sea Island cotton was first grown in 1786. In 1793, Eli Whitney, an American, invented the saw-gin, a machine by which cotton wool is separated from the pod and cleaned with great ease and expedition.* This led to such increased cultivation that the United States soon exported 1,500,000 lbs. of cotton.

* A trial of various kinds of cotton-gins, under the direction of Dr. Forbes Watson, took place at Manchester, 28 Nov.-22 Dec. 1871.

The following figures indicate the growth of cotton manufacturing in the United States: of raw cotton, the number of pounds used were: in 1800, 150,000; in 1810, 3,000,000; in 1815, 27,000,000; in 1850, 288,558,000; in 1860, 422,704,975; in 1870, 398,302,257; in 1880, 763,969,925.

Spindles: in 1810, 96,400; in 1815, 350,000; in 1835, 1,750,000; in 1840, 2,284,631; in 1860, 5,235,727; in 1870, 7,132,415; in 1880, 10,921,147.

The census report for 1880 gives the following figures: looms, 230,223; spindles, 10,921,147; bales of cotton used (average weight 481.65 lbs.), 1,586,481; persons employed, 181,628. This is exclusive of hosiery mills and of those woollen mills in which some cotton is used. These consumed 173,519 bales of cotton during the year.

The cotton crop of the United States for the year ending 30 Sept. 1880, was 5,737,397 bales of 481.55 lbs. each. Of this quantity, there were exported 3,865,621 bales, while 1,760,000 bales were converted into cotton goods in American factories.

Cotton imported from other countries: in 1847, 110,208,324 lbs.; in 1859, 264,281,803 lbs.; in 1860, 215,048,144 lbs.; in 1861, 437,481,203 lbs.; in 1870, 621,959,644 lbs.; in 1876, 351,752,800 lbs.

Cotton imported from India: 1856, 463,000 bales; official value, 3,572,329; in 1865, 1,266,520 bales; value, 25,025,866; in 1866, 1,847,770 bales; value, 25,270,847; in 1874, 412,025,040 lbs.; in 1876, 275,856,336 lbs.; in 1877, 193,856,320 lbs.; in 1879, 181,347,601 lbs.

COTTON FAMINE.

The supply of cotton from North America nearly ceased, in consequence of the secession of the Southern States from the union in 1860-61. In 1852, Mr. T. Bazley warned the country on the danger of trusting to this source. In May, 1862, he stated that through its failure the loss of the laboring classes was 12,000,000 sterling a year, and estimated the loss, including the employing classes, at nearly 40,000,000 a year.

At a meeting of noblemen and gentlemen connected with the cotton manufacturing districts at Bridgewater house, St. James's, on 19 July, 1862, the earl of Derby in the chair, 10,000 were subscribed to the Cotton District Relief Fund. The viceroy of Egypt, in London at the time, gave 10000, and the queen gave 20000 on 24 July. Liberal subscriptions flowed in from all parts. On 28 Aug., the lord mayor had received 41,902.

In the Lancashire district (population about 4,000,000) there were receiving parish relief, Sept. 1861, 43,700 persons; in Sept. 1862, 164,498. Earl of Derby, 2 Dec. 1862.

In July, 1863, about the value of 700,0000 remained of the donations which had been received in money and goods, amounting to about 1,900,0000.

On 9 Feb. 1863, the George Griswold arrived, containing contributions of provisions, etc., from the United States, for the relief of the sufferers in Lancashire.

The Union Relief act (passed Aug. 1862, and continued in 1863) gave much relief by enabling overseers to borrow money to be expended in public works to be executed by the unemployed workmen.

In Oct. 1864, much distress still existed, and fears were entertained for the approaching winter; 90,000 more paupers than ordinary in cotton districts. — Times, 18 Jan. 1865.

In June, 1865, Mr. Farnall, the special commissioner (appointed in May, 1862) was recalled by the poor law board, and the famine was declared to be ended. 1,000,000 had been expended in two years. The executive of the Central Relief Fund held their last meeting, 4 Dec. 1865.

The account of the fund was made up in 1873. The balance, above 130,0000, was proposed to be appropriated to the foundation of a convalescent hospital for Lancashire.

A memorial window (the gift of the cotton operatives of Lancashire who subscribed to commemorate the munificence of the metropolis to them during the cotton famine, 1861-4) placed in Guildhall and uncovered, 15 July, 1868.

COTTON FACTORIES regulated by acts of parliament passed in 1825, 1831, 1833, and 1844. The hours of labor were limited, and the employment of children under nine years of age prohibited. In 1846, 1724 cotton mills employed 197,500 persons. In 1862, the persons employed were stated to be 451,000; 315,000 in Lancashire.

Cotton Oil, largely manufactured from the seeds in the south of the United States; year 1876-7, 3,316,000 gallons; 1878-9, 8,175,000 gallons.

Cotton Wool, see Respiration. Dr. Percy, in 1874, applied cotton wool to purify the air for ventilating the houses of parliament.

Cottonian Library, formed by sir Robert Bruce Cotton, 1600 et seq. He died 6 May, 1631. It was rescued from the republicans during the protectorate, 1649-60, and was secured to the public by a statute in 1700. It was removed to Essex-house in 1712; in 1730 to Dean's yard, Westminster (where on 23 Oct. 1731 a part of the books sustained damage by fire); to the British Museum in 1757.

Coulmiers, a village ten miles west of Orleans, central France. Here the Bavarians, under gen. Von der Tann, were defeated by the French army of the Loire, under gen. d'Aurelle de Paladines, who took about 2000 prisoners, 9 Nov. 1870, and regained Orleans.

Councils. King Alfred, in about 886, is said to have so arranged the business of the nation that all resolutions passed through three councils. The first was a select council which considered all affairs to be laid before the second council, bishops and nobles appointed by the king, like the present privy council. The third was a general assembly of the nation, called, in Saxon, Witenagemot, in which quality and offices gave a right to sit. In these three councils we behold the origin of the cabinet, privy councils, and parliaments; see Cabinet, Common, and Privy Councils, etc.

Councils of CONCILIATION, to adjust differences among masters and workmen, may be established by license of the secretary of state, by virtue of an act passed 15 Aug. 1867.

Councils of the CHURCH. The following are among the most memorable. Those numbered are the (Ecumenical or General councils. Sir Harris Nicols in his "Chronology of History," enumerates 1604 councils, and gives an alphabetical list.

Of the church at Jerusalem (Acts xv).....	50
Of the western bishops at Arles, in France, to suppress the Donatists; three fathers of the English church attended.....	314
I. First Ecumenical or General, at Nice (Constantine the Great presided), decreed the consubstantiality of the Son of God, condemned Arianism, and composed the Nicene creed.....	325

At Clermont, convened by Urban II. to authorize the crusades: 310 bishops attended. 1095

IX. First Lateran: right of investiture settled by treaty between pope Calixtus II. and the emperor Henry V. 18 March to 5 April, 1123

X. Second Lateran: Innocent II. presided; preservation of temporalities of ecclesiastics the principal subject; 1000 fathers of the church attended. 20 April, 1139

XI. Third Lateran, against schismatics. 5 to 19 March, 1179

XII. Fourth Lateran: 400 bishops and 1000 abbots attended; Innocent III. presided; against Albigenses, etc. 11 to 30 Nov. 1215

XIII. Lyons: under pope Innocent IV.; emperor Frederick II. deposed. 28 June to 17 July, 1245

XIV. Lyons: under Gregory X.; temporary union of Greek and Latin churches. 7 May to 17 June, 1274

XV. Vienne in Dauphiné: Clement V. presided, and the kings of France and Aragon attended; order of Knights Templar suppressed. 16 Oct. 1311; 3 April and 6 May, 1312

XVI. Pisa: Gregory XII. and Benedict XIII. deposed; Alexander elected. 5 March to 7 Aug. 1409

XVII. Constance: Martin V. elected pope; and John Huss and Jerome of Prague condemned to be burned. 1414-18

XVIII. Basel. 1431-43

XIX. Fifth Lateran: begun by Julius II. 1512

Continued under Leo X. for the suppression of the pragmatic sanction of France, against the council of Pisa, etc., till. 1517

XX. Trent: held to condemn the doctrines of the reformers Luther, Zuinglius, and Calvin (see Trent). 13 Dec. 1545, to 3 Dec. 1563

XXI. Rome: summoned by an encyclical letter, 8 Sept. 1564; met. 8 Dec. 1569

Present: 6 archbishop-princes, 49 cardinals, 11 patriarchs, 640 archbishops and bishops, 23 abbots, 29 generals of orders—803 in all.

There were held four public sessions, and between 90 and 100 congregations. New canons were issued 24 April, 1870, and, after much discussion and opposition, the infallibility of the pope as head of the Church was affirmed by 547 placets against 2 non-placets, and promulgated. 18 July, 1870

Many bishops withdrew from the discussion. The council then adjourned to 11 Nov. (see Rome).

Councils, FRENCH. The Council of ANCIENTS, consisting of 250 members, together with the Council of FIVE HUNDRED, instituted at Paris, 1 Nov. 1795: the executive was a Directory of FIVE. Bonaparte dispersed the Council of Five Hundred at St. Cloud, 9 Nov. 1799, declaring himself, Roger Ducos, and Siéyès, consuls provisaires; see France.

Counsel are supposed to be coeval with the curia regis. Advocates are referred to the time of Edward I., but are mentioned earlier. Counsel who were guilty of deceit or collusion were punishable by the statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I. 1285. Counsel were allowed to persons charged with treason, by act 8 Will. III. 1696. An act to enable persons indicted for felony to make their defence by counsel, passed Aug. 1836; see Barristers and King's Counsel.

Count, Latin comes, a companion; French comte; equivalent to the English earl (whose wife is still termed a countess), and to the German Graf; see Champagne and Toulouse.

Counterpoint (in music), writing the chords to a melody. The earliest known specimen of contrapuntal writing is by Adam de la Halle in the twelfth century.

Countess of Huntingdon's Connection, see Whitefieldes.

Counties, or SHIRES. The division of this kingdom into counties began, it is said, with king Alfred; but some counties bore their present names above a century before. The division of Ireland into counties took place in 1562. Lord-lieutenants were appointed in 1549 in England, and in 1831 in Ireland. Counties first sent members to parliament, before which period knights met in their own counties, 1285. CHANDOS CLAUSE, sect. 20 of the Reform act, 2 Will. IV. c. 45 (1832), inserted by the motion of the marquess of Chandos. By it occupiers as tenants of land not situate in a borough, paying an annual rent of 50*l.*, became entitled to a vote for the knight of the shire. It increased the number of Tory voters, and in consequence several attempts were made to repeal it. It was superseded by the Reform act of 15 Aug. 1867.

By the Winter Assizes act, 1876, certain counties were united (by order in council, first time, 23 Oct. 1876) to facilitate more speedy trials of prisoners.

In the United States the division of the states into counties has existed from the colonial period. In Louisiana the counties are called parishes, and until 1868 those in South Carolina were called districts.

Country Dance, see Contre Danse.

Country Party, see Country Party.

County Courts, or SCHYREOTES, in the time of the Saxons, were important tribunals. Alfred is said to have divided England into counties, and counties into hundreds; but county courts seem to have existed much earlier.

County Courts, for the recovery of debts under 20*l.*, superseding courts of requests, instituted by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. 26 Aug. 1846

The counties of England and Wales are divided into sixty districts, each district having a county court, with a barrister as judge, and juries when necessary. Their jurisdiction extended by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, to sums not exceeding 50*l.* 1850

Their proceedings facilitated in 1852 and 1854; 60 county courts in England and Wales. 1868-72

In 1850 plaintiffs entered at the courts of the sixty circuits were 303,793, for 1,265,115*l.*; in 1857, 744,652 plaintiffs for 1,337,745*l.*; of the 217,173 causes tried, 4297 were for sums between 20*l.* and 50*l.*

From 1847 to 1868 judgment was obtained in these courts for 8,309,236*l.*

Equity powers, like those of the court of chancery, in cases relating to sums under 500*l.*, conferred on these courts, to begin. 1 Oct. 1865

Their jurisdiction still further enlarged. 20 Aug. 1867

Admiralty jurisdiction conferred on them by act passed July, 1868, amended. Aug. 1869

County Court acts amended by act passed. 2 Aug. 1875

A County Boards bill withdrawn. July, 1879

County Franchise, a bill for giving votes to laborers and others, annually brought in by Mr. G. O. Trevelyan; see Household Suffrage.

County Officers and Courts, Ireland: an act to amend the law respecting them passed 14 Aug. 1877.

Coup d'État, in France; Pronunciamiento in Spain: Changes in the government effected by force, either by the ruler, the army, or the populace. The speaker's coup d'état, see Parliament, 2 Feb. 1881.

Couriers. Xenophon attributes the first to Cyrus; and Herodotus says that they were common among the Persians (see Esther iii. 15) about 510 B.C. The Greeks and Romans had no regular couriers till the time of Augustus, when they travelled in cars, about 24 B.C. Couriers or posts are said to have been instituted in France by Charlemagne about A.D. 800. Couriers for letters were employed by Louis XI. of France, 1463.—Héaulst. See Post-office.

Courland, a duchy of Livonia, conquered by Danes, 1218; by Teutonic knights, 1239; subjected to Poland in 1561; conquered by Charles XII. of Sweden in 1701; Ernest Biren, duke, 1737; his son, Peter, 1769; annexed to Russia, March, 1795.

Court Baron, an ancient court which every lord of a manor may hold by prescription. In it duties, heriots, and customs are received, and estates and surrenders are passed. Its jurisdiction was restricted in 1747 and 1838. By the Small Debts act, 1856, lords of the manor may give up holding these courts.

Court Circular, conservative weekly paper; established 26 April, 1856.

Court Dress, see Dress.

Court Journal, fashionable journal, established 1829.

Court Leet, an ancient court of record, belonging to a hundred, instituted for punishing encroachments, nuisances, fraudulent weights and measures, etc. The steward is judge, and all persons residing within the hundred (peers, clergymen, etc., excepted) are obliged to do suit within this court.

Court of Honor. In England the court of chivalry, of which the lord high-constable was a judge, was called Curia Militaris in the time of Henry IV., and subsequently the Court of Honor. In Bavaria, to prevent duelling, a court of honor was instituted in April, 1819. Mr. Joseph Hamilton for many years ardently labored to establish a similar institution in Britain.

Court of Justiciary, High, in Scotland, constituted by a commission under the great seal, 1671, ratified 1672. The present lord justice-general, the right hon. John Inglis, was appointed Feb. 1867, and the lord justice-clerk, the right hon. James Moncreiff, Nov. 1869; made lord Moncreiff, Dec. 1873. The procedure in this court was amended by an act passed in 1869.

Court of Requests (or Court of Conscience), first instituted in the reign of Henry VII., 1493, and remodelled by Henry VIII. in 1517.—Stow. Established for the summary recovery of small debts under forty shillings; but in the city of London the jurisdiction extended to debts of five pounds.—Ashe. The courts of requests superseded in 1847 by the County Courts (which see).

Court of Session, the highest civil tribunal in Scotland, was instituted by James V. by statute, 17 May, 1532. It consisted of fourteen judges and a president, and replaced a committee of parliament. In 1830 the number of judges was reduced; and the court now consists of the lord president, the lord justice-clerk, and eleven ordinary judges. In 1867 the necessity of renovating this court was asserted by high legal authority; and an act to amend its procedure was passed 31 July, 1868. The present lord president, the right hon. John Inglis, was appointed, Feb. 1867.

Court Party—Country Party, politicians in the parliaments of England, beginning about 1620. At the end of the seventeenth century the latter embodied toryism and high-church principles, maintained the rights of "the land," as opposed to whiggism and the trading interests. Its most distinguished statesman was sir Thomas Hanmer (the Montalto of Pope's Satires), who died in 1746.—Ashe.

Court Theatre, Sloane Square, Chelsea, opened 25 Jan. 1871; Miss Litton first manager.

Courtrai (Belgium). Here Robert, count of Artois, who had defeated the Flemings in 1297, was defeated and slain by them, 11 July, 1302. The conflict was named the "Battle of Spurs," from the number of gilt spurs collected.

Courts of Justice were instituted at Athens 1507 B.C. (see Arrangus); by Moses, 1491 B.C. (Exod. xviii. 25), and in Rome. For these realms, see Chancery, Common Pleas, Exchequer, King's Bench, etc. The citizens of London were privileged to plead their own cause in the courts of judicature, without employing lawyers, except in pleas of the crown, 41 Hen. III. 1257.—Stow. The rights of the Irish courts were established by the British parliament in April, 1783.

Courts of Law Fees Act, passed 20 Aug. 1867, directs the application of surplus fees towards providing new courts of justice. Acts for building these courts were passed in 1863 and 1868. The plan for their erection by Mr. Street was approved of in 1871.

Courts of Survey, consisting of a judge and two assistants, for appeals respecting unseaworthy ships, were directed to be appointed in certain ports and districts by the Merchant Shipping Act, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 80 (15 Aug. 1876). They act in 1877.

Courts-martial are regulated by the Mutiny act, first passed in 1690. The powers of these courts were much discussed in 1867, in consequence of the measures used to suppress the negro insurrection in Jamaica, Oct. 1866.

Coutras (S.W. France). Here Henry of Navarre totally defeated the duc de Joyeuse and the royalists, 20 Oct. 1587.

Covenanters, those persons who, in the reign of Charles I., having signed the solemn league and covenant, engaged to stand by each other in opposition to the projects of the king in 1638. The COVENANT or league between England and Scotland (the preceding one modified), solemnly adopted by the parliament, 25 Sept. 1643; was accepted by Charles II. 18 Aug. 1650, but repudiated by him on his restoration in 1661, when it was declared to be illegal by parliament, and copies of it ordered to be burned; see Cameronians and Bothwell Bridge.

The Covenant consisted of six articles

1. The preservation of the reformed church in Scotland, and the reformation of religion in England and Ireland.
2. The extirpation of popery, prelacy, schism, etc.
3. The preservation of the liberties of parliament and the king's person and authority.
4. The discovery and punishment of all malignants, etc.
5. The preservation of "a blessed peace between these kingdoms."
6. The summing all who enter into the covenant "This will we do as in the sight of God."

Covent Garden (London), corrupted from "Convent Garden," having been the garden of St. Peter's convent. The square was built about 1633, and the piazza on the north side and the church were designed by Inigo Jones. The fruit and vegetable markets were rebuilt in 1829-30, from designs by Mr. Fowler (the ground belonging to the duke of Bedford).

Covent Garden Theatre sprang out of one in Lincoln's-inn Fields, through a patent granted 14 Chas. II. 1662, to sir William Davenant, whose company was denominated the "duke's servants," as a compliment to the duke of York, afterwards James II.; see under Theatres.—The theatre was burned down 5 March, 1856, during a bal masqué held by Mr. Anderson, the Wizard of the North. The present theatre, by F. Barry, was opened 15 May, 1858. The Floral Hall adjoining it was opened 7 March, 1860, with the volunteers' ball.

Coventry (Warwickshire). Leofric, earl of Mercia, lord of Coventry, is said to have relieved it from heavy taxes, at the intercession of his wife Godiva, on condition of her riding naked through the streets, about 1067. Processions in her memory took place in 1851; 23 June, 1862; 4 June, 1866; 20 June, 1870; and 4 June, 1877. A parliament was held here in the reign of Henry IV., called parliamentum indoctorum, or the unlearned parliament, because lawyers were excluded, 1404; and in the reign of Henry VI. another met, called parliamentum dubitans, from the acts of attainder passed against the duke of York and others, 30 Nov. 1459. The town was surrounded with strong walls, three miles in circumference, and twenty-six towers, which were demolished by order of Charles II. in 1662. The ribbon-makers here suffered much from want of work in the winter of 1860-1. An industrial exhibition here was opened by earl Granville, 19 June; closed by the earl of Clarendon, 21 Oct. 1867. The prince and princess of Wales were warmly received 7 Nov. 1874. The Bismarck was founded by Oswy, king of Mercia, 656, and had the double name of Coventry and Lichfield, which was reversed by later bishops. It was so wealthy that king Offa, by the favor of pope Adrian, made it archiepiscopal; but this title was laid aside on the death of that king. In 1076 the see was removed to Chester; in 1102 to Coventry; and afterwards to its original foundation, Lichfield, but with great opposition from the monks of Coventry. Coventry merged into the bishopric of Lichfield (which see).

Coventry Act passed to prevent malicious maiming and wounding, 6 March, 1671, in consequence of sir John Coventry, K.B., M.P., being maimed in the streets of London by sir Thomas Sandys and others, adherents of the duke of Monmouth, 21 Dec. 1670. Repealed 1830.

Cowpens, BATTLE AT THE. This battle-ground is in Spartanburg district, South Carolina, among the Thicket Mountains. There, on 17 Jan. 1781, a very severe battle was fought between the Americans under gen. Daniel Morgan, and the British under col. Tarleton. The combat continued more than two hours, with mutual skill and bravery. The British were defeated, with a loss of almost 300 men killed and wounded, 500 men made prisoners, and a large quantity of ammunition, stores, and baggage. The Americans lost 70 men, only 12 of whom were killed. Congress gave Morgan a gold medal in commemoration of his brilliant victory.

Cow-pock inoculation, see Smallpox and Vaccination.

Cracow, a city in Austrian Poland. The Poles elected Cracus for their duke, who built Cracow with the spoils taken from the Franks about 700. It was their capital, 1320-1609. Cracow was taken by Charles XII. in 1702, and taken and retaken several times by the Russians and other confederates. The sovereign was crowned at Cracow until 1764. The Russians, who had taken it, 1768, were expelled by Kosciuszko, 24 March, 1794; but it surrendered to the Prussians, 15 June, same year, and in 1795 was awarded to Austria. Cracow was formed into a republic, June, 1815. Occupied by 10,000 Russians, who followed here the defeated Poles, Sept. 1831. Its independence was extinguished, and it was seized by the emperor of Austria and incorporated with his empire, 16 Nov. 1846, which was protested against by England, France, Sweden, and Turkey: see Poland. A dreadful fire laid the greater part of the city in ashes, 18 July, 1850. The discovery on 22 July, 1869, of Barbara Abryk, a nun, secluded for 21 years in a convent cell, led to violent rioting.

Cranes are of very early date, for the engines of Archimedes may be so called. In 1837 a crane had been erected at Glasgow capable of lifting 60 tons; see Derrick.

Crane Island, DEFENCE OF. This island, about five miles below Norfolk, Va., was attacked by the British 23 June, 1813; and was defended by col. Heatty and maj. Faulkner. The British were repulsed with a loss of about 300 men, the Americans losing none.

Craniology (or PHRENOLOGY), the study of the external form of the human skull, as indicative of mental powers and moral qualities. Dr. Gall, the propounder, was a German physician, born March, 1758, and his first observations were among his schoolfellows. Afterwards he studied the heads of criminals and others, and eventually reduced his ideas to a system, marking out the skull like a map. His first lecture was given at Vienna in 1796; but in 1802 the Austrian government prohibited his teaching. In 1800 he was joined by Dr. Spurzheim; and in 1810-12 they published at Paris their work on the "Anatomy and Physiology of the Nervous System, and of the Brain in particular." Gall died in 1820. The researches of Gall and Spurzheim led to increased study of the brain. Combe's "Phrenology," first published in 1819, is the popular English work on this subject. Phrenological societies were formed early in London and Edinburgh.

Phrenology was refuted by lord Jeffrey in the Edinburgh Review in 1826, and more recently by Dr. W. B. Carpenter. Professor Ferrier reported the results of researches tending to prove localization of certain faculties in the brain to the British Association, Sept. 1873.

CRAMER, LATIMER, AND RIDLEY, martyrdom of; see Protestants, note.

CRANDOGES, see Lake-dwellings.

CRANON or CRANON, Thessaly, N. Greece. Near here the Macedonians, under Antipater and Craterus, defeated the confederated Greeks, twice by sea and once by land, 322 B.C. The Athenians demanded peace, and Antipater put their orators to death, among whom was Hyperides, who, that he might not betray the secrets of his country under torture, cut out his tongue, and Demosthenes is said to have taken poison shortly after.

Cranworth's Act, Lord, to simplify the practice of conveyances, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 145 (1865).

Crassino (N. France). Here Victor and Ney defeated the Prussians under Blücher after a severe contest, 7 March, 1814.

Crape. It is said some crape was made by Ste. Badour, when queen of France, about 680. It is said to have been first made at Bologna.

Cravant, see Cressant.

Crayford (Kent). Hengist the Saxon is said to have defeated the Britons here, 437.

Crayons, colored substances made into paste, and dried into pencils, were known in France about 1422, and improved by L'Oriol, 1748.

Cressots, or KREASOTE (discovered by Reichenbach about 1833), a powerful antiseptic and coagulator of albuminous tissue, is obtained by the destructive distillation of wood and other organic matters. It has been used for the preservation of meat, timber, etc.

Creatine (from the Greek κρεας, flesh), the chemical principle of flesh, was discovered in 1835 by E. Chevreul, and has been investigated by Liebig, Gregory, and others.

Creation OF THE WORLD. The date given by the English Bible, and by Usher, Blair, and some others, is 4004 B.C. There are about 140 different dates assigned to the Creation, varying from 3616 to 6984 B.C. Dr. Hales gives 6411; see Eras.

Haydn's Creation (oratorio), composed 1796-8; first performed (in London, at Covent Garden Theatre), 26 March, 1800; in Paris, 24 Dec. same year.

Crèches, establishments for temporarily receiving the young children of working mothers; begun at Paris about 1844; in London (in Rathbone place, etc.) about 1863.

Crecoy, or CRECQY (N. France), where Edward III. and his son, Edward the Black Prince, and an army of about 36,000, obtained a great victory over Philip, king of France, with about 180,000, 26 Aug. 1346. John, king of Bohemia (nearly blind); James, king of Majorca; Ralph, duke of Lorraine (sovereign prince); and a number of French nobles, together with 80,000 private men, were slain, while the loss of the English was very small. The crest of the king of Bohemia (three ostrich-feathers, with the motto Ich dien—in English, "I serve") has since been adopted by princes of Wales.

Crédit Foncier, etc. A plan of providing loans to land-owners was introduced by Frederick the Great of Prussia in 1763, in some of the Prussian provinces, as the best method of alleviating the distresses of the landed interest caused by his wars. The system consists of lending money to land-owners on the security of their estates, and providing the loan capital by the issue of debentures charged upon the aggregate mortgaged estates. There are two modes of carrying out this scheme: (1) by means of an association of land-owners; (2) by means of a proprietary public company. The former obtains in Eastern Prussia, but the latter is exclusively found in Western Europe.

Crédit Foncier companies have been founded in Hamburg (1792), Western Prussia (1797), Belgium (1841), France (1853), England (1863). Similar companies were formed in all the states of Europe, in India, and in our colonies and dependencies.—Henriques.

Crédit Mobilier: a joint-stock company with this name was established at Paris by Isaac and Emile Péreire and others, 18 Nov. 1852.

It took up or originated trading enterprises of all kinds, applying to them the principle of commenda, or limited liability, and was authorized to supersede or buy in any other companies (replacing their shares or bonds with its own scrip), and also to carry on the ordinary business of banking. The funds were to be obtained by a paid up capital of 25 millions sterling, the issue of obligations at not less than 60 days' date or sight, and the receipt of money on deposit or current account. The society apparently prospered; but was considered by experienced persons a near approach to Law's bank of 1716.

Several of the directors failed, Sept. 1867, no dividend paid.....May, 1868

Many companies based on its principles established in London 1863
 Emile and Isaac Pereire withdrew from the management; the company failed, and the capital was said to have disappeared Oct. 1867
 The high court of appeal decided that M. Pereire and other directors were responsible for their acts, and that damages should be given to the shareholders 1 Aug. 1868
 Emile Pereire died 6 Jan. 1875, Isaac died 12 July, 1880

Crédit Mobilier of America. A joint-stock company under this name was organized May, 1863, with a capital of $2,500,000. The charter was purchased, Jan. 1867, by a company interested in constructing the Union Pacific Railroad, and the stock, which was increased to $3,750,000, rose to a high price, paying enormous dividends, earned in connection with Pacific Railroad construction. In 1872, in the course of certain legal proceedings, it was made to appear that several members of congress and the vice-president of the United States were more or less secret holders of this stock, a fact which caused great scandal, inasmuch as the profits of the company and the value of the stock largely depended upon the legislative action of congress. The conviction was general that some, at least, of the members of congress who held the stock had received it as an indirect bribe, and a prolonged investigation followed during the session of congress for 1872-3. The senate committee reported, 27 Feb. 1873, recommending the expulsion of one implicated senator; but no action was taken, and his term expired five days later. The house of representatives passed resolutions censuring two of its members.

Creeds. see Confessions of Faith. J. R. Lumby's "History of the Creeds" appeared 1874.

Creek War. In 1813, while the United States were at war with Great Britain, the Creek Indians of Alabama were incited to hostility by Tecumseh, who visited them for that purpose, and by British agents in Florida. A fierce war followed, in which the Creeks, led by William Weatherford (Red Eagle), were overcome by gen. Jackson. The war seriously endangered the integrity of the nation; and, the Creeks being an intelligent and partly civilized people, many well-planned and stoutly contested battles were fought; see Battles, Indians, and United States, 1813-14.

Cremation. see Burning the Dead. Cremation-halls have been erected at Milan and Gotha.

Cremora. BATTLE OF, see Fabi.

Cremona (N. Italy), a city founded by the Romans, 221 B.C. It became an independent republic in 1107, but was frequently subjugated by its neighbors, Milan and Venice, and partook of their fortunes. In Nov. 1859, it became part of the kingdom of Italy. Cremona was eminent for violin-makers from about 1550 to 1750.

Crescent, a symbol of sovereignty among the Greeks and Romans, and the device of Byzantium, now Constantinople, whence the Turks adopted it. The crescent has given name to three orders of knighthood; founded by Charles I. of Naples, 1268, by René of Anjou, in 1448; by the sultan Selim, in 1601. The last is still in existence.

Crespy (N. France). Here was signed a treaty between Charles V. of Germany and Francis I. of France, 18 Sept. 1544. The former renounced Burgundy and the latter Italy.

Crests are ascribed to the Carians. Richard I. (1189) had a crest on the helmet resembling a plume of feathers. The English kings had generally crowns above their helmets; that of Richard II., 1377, was surmounted by a lion on a cap of dignity; see Crecy. Alexander III. of Scotland, 1249, had a plume of feathers; the helmet of Robert I. was surmounted by a crown, 1306; and that of James I. by a lion, 1424. In the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the crest was described to be a figure placed upon a wreath, coronet, or cap of maintenance.—Gilliam.

Crete, now CANDIA (which see).

Crevant-sur-Yonne (N. France) was besieged by John Stuart, earl of Buchan, with a French army, July, 1423, and relieved by the earl of Salisbury with an army of English and Burgundians. After a severe contest, the French were totally defeated.

Crevelt, near Cleves (W. Prussia). Here, on 23 June, 1758, prince Ferdinand of Brunswick defeated the French under the count of Clermont.

Cricket, an ancient English game, said to be identical with the "club ball" of the fourteenth century. Rules were laid down in 1774 by a committee of noblemen and gentlemen, including the duke of Dorset and sir Horace Mann. In 1861 the All England Eleven gained and lost games in Australia; in Sept. 1868, they beat the New York Twenty-two. In 1878-4 they were beaten at Melbourne.

Eleven Australians visited England, and, after gaining ten games and losing five, gained one against "Players of All England" 3 Sept. 1878
 Thirteen Australians visited England in May, 1880, they won 21 out of 37 matches, and lost 4, the others were drawn or indecisive, they were victors in a match with the "Players of England" at the Crystal Palace, 27, 28, 29 Sept. 1880

Crime. About 1856 it was computed that a fifteenth part of the population of the United Kingdom lived by crime. The increase in education and manufactures is gradually reducing this proportion. From 1848 to 1865 there had been no commitment for political offences, such as treason or sedition. The returns of thirty-two years showed that crime absolutely and relatively diminished (Sept. 1866); see Murder, Executions, Trials, Poisoning, France, 1871, etc.

Act for improving the administration of criminal justice passed 7 Aug. 1861.

The Criminal Justice act authorizes justices, with the consent of prisoners, to pass sentence for short periods, instead of committing them to trial, 1855.

In 1856 the expenses for criminal prosecutions in England and Wales were 194,912*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, in 1878, 144,103*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

15 persons were executed for murder in 1856 (four foreigners), 13 in 1857, 11 in 1858 (four foreigners), and 9 (four for wife-murder) in 1859. 2660 persons were liberated on tickets-of-leave in 1856.

On 17 Feb. 1867, of 126 persons thus liberated, 58 were believed to be living honestly.

In 1861, 1862, and 1863 the system was considered to have failed through the numerous crimes committed by tickets-of-leave, it was modified by the Penal Servitude act in 1864. Sentences to penal servitude, in 1869, 2008; 1870, 1798; 1879, 1502.

Criminal classes in England and Wales—estimated number 1873-8, 72,881; 1878-9, 78,319; 1874-5, 72,888; 1875-6, 74,108. By return (hours) 1877-8, 41,049; 1878-9, 44,248.

The "Judicial Statistics" of crime, police, and law, with a report have been usually published by government, commencing with 1868.

Statistical Criminal act passed 11 Aug. 1868

Prevention of Crime act passed 13 Aug. 1879

Crimes, or CRIM TARTARY, a peninsula in the Euxine or Black Sea, the ancient Taurica Chersonesus, colonized by the Greeks about 550 B.C. The Milesians founded the kingdom of Bosphorus, now Kertch, which about 108 B.C., formed part of the dominion of Mithridates, king of Pontus, whose descendants continued to rule the country, under Roman protection, till the irruption of the Goths, Huns, etc., about A.D. 258. About 1287 it fell into the hands of the Mongols under Genghis Khan; soon after the Venetians established commercial stations, with a lucrative trade, but were supplanted by the Genoese, who were permitted to rebuild and fortify Kaffa about 1361. In 1475 Mahomet II. expelled the Genoese, and subjected the peninsula to the Ottoman yoke; permitting the government to remain in the hands of the native khans, but closing the Black Sea to Western Europe. In 1774, by the intervention of the empress Catherine II., the Crimea recovered its independence; but on the abdication of the khan in 1782 the Russians took possession of the country, after a war with Turkey, and retained it by the treaty of Jassy, 9 Jan. 1792. The Crimea (now Taurida) was divided into eight governments in 1803. War having been declared against Russia by England and France, 28 March, 1854, large masses of troops were sent to the East, which, after remaining some time at Gallipoli and other places, sailed for Varna, where they disembarked 29 May. An expedition against the Crimea having been determined on, the allied British, French, and Turkish forces, amounting to 58,000 men (23,000 British), commanded by Lord Raglan and marshal St. Arnaud, sailed from Varna 3 Sept., and landed on the 14th, 15th, and 16th, without opposition, at Old Fort, near Eupatoria, about 80 miles from Sebastopol. On the 20th they attacked the Russians, between 40,000 and 60,000 strong (under prince Menschikoff), entrenched on the heights of Alma, supposed to be unassailable. After a sharp contest the Russians were totally routed; see Alma and Rasse - Turkish War. Peace was proclaimed in April, 1856, and the allies quitted the Crimea 12 July following.

Criminal Laws of England. Their great severity, pointed out by Sir Samuel Romilly, Sir James Mackintosh, and others about 1818, was considerably mitigated by Sir Robert Peel's acts, passed 1828-9. The criminal law was consolidated by 24 and 25 Vict. cc. 84-100, 1861. Some defects were amended by an act passed in 1867.

Sir J. F. Stephen's "Digest of the Criminal Law" published 1877

Bill for amending law relating to indictable offences (re-arranging a digest and code) brought in by Sir John Holker attorney-general 14 May, 1878

Referred to royal commission (Justices Blackburn and Jush and Sir James F. Stephen), announced 8 July, "

The bill brought in and withdrawn 1879

Crimina, a river in Sicily, near which Timoleon defeated the Carthaginians, 339 B.C.

Crimping-houses were used to entrap persons into the army; hence the name of "crimp sergeant." Some of them in London were destroyed by the populace, in consequence of a young man who had been enticed into one being killed in endeavoring to escape, 16 Sept. 1794.

Crisnan Canal, Argyleshire, cut through Kintyre peninsula, 1798-1801: 15 locks; saves about 115 miles.

Crinoline (a French word, meaning stuff made of erin, hair) is the modern name of the "farlingale" of the time of queen Elizabeth, hoop-like petticoats made of whalebone, etc., revived in France and England since 1855. They have frequently occasioned loss of life by coming in contact with fire and machinery. In No. 116 of the Tatler, published 5 Jan. 1710, is an amusing trial of the hoop-petticoat then in fashion.

Cripplegate (London) was so called from the lame beggars who sat there, so early as the year 1010. The gate was newly built by the brewers of London in 1344; and was pulled down and sold for 912 in July, 1700. The poet Milton was buried in the church near it, 12 Nov. 1674; see London.

Cripples' Home, Marylebone Road, established 1851, for crippled girls to be taught suitable trades. The Cripples' Nursery, Old Quebec street and Margate, was established 1862.

Crispin and Crispianus are said to have been two saints, born at Rome, whence they travelled to Soummis, in France, to propagate the Christian religion. They worked as shoemakers; but the governor of the town, discovering them to be Christians, ordered them to be beheaded, about 288. Their day is 25 Oct.

Criterion Theatre, Regent's Circus, Piccadilly, opened by Spens and Pond, 21 March, 1874.

Crith (from the Greek κριθι, a barleycorn, or small weight), a term suggested by Dr. A. W. Hofmann (about 1864) to express the volume-weight of gases, a cube containing 1 litre of hydrogen (0.0896 gramme) to be the unit. Hydrogen being one crith, oxygen will be 16, nitrogen 14 criths.

Critica. The first society of them was formed 276 B.C.—Blair. Varro, Cicero, Apollonius, and Aristarchus were ancient critics. In modern times the Journal des Savans was the earliest periodical critical work. It was originated by Denis de Sallo, ecclesiastical councillor in the parliament of France, and was first published at Paris, 30 May, 1656, and is still continued. Jean Le Clerc's "Ars Critica," published 1696, is said to be the earliest systematic treatise. The first work of this kind in England was the Review of Daniel Defoe (the term being invented by himself), published in Feb. 1703. The Works of the Learned began 1710, and the Notes of Literature in 1714; discontinued in 1722; see Reviews.

The legality of fair criticism was established in the English courts in Feb. 1794, when an action that excited great attention, brought by an author against a reviewer for a severe critique upon his work, was determined in favor of the defendant, on the principle that criticism is allowable, however sharp, if just, and not malicious; see Travis, 1878.

Croatia, conquered by Coloman, king of Hungary, in 1102, was with that country united to Austria in 1526. The Croatian diet was abolished in Nov. 1861. The Croats protested against incorporation with Hungary, 25 May, 1867, and their diet (including Croatia and Slavonia) at Agram was dissolved 27 May. The union of Croatia with Hungary was recognized by a Croatian deputation 27 May, 1868, and Croatian delegates entered the Hungarian diet 24 Nov. The emperor and empress visited Agram 9-10 March, 1869.

Crookery-ware, see Pottery.

Crocodiles were revered as divinities by the Egyptians. The emperor Augustus is said to have collected twenty-five at one time in his amphitheatre, where they were killed by gladiators.

Croix, St., a West India island, purchased from the French by Christian VI., king of Denmark, in 1733; taken by Sir Alexander Cochrane, 22 Dec. 1807; restored in 1814.

Cromlechs, ancient monuments, formerly considered to be Druidical altars, but now believed to be connected with burials. One still exists in Anglesey: similar structures have been found in Ireland, India, Arabia, and other countries.

Cronstadt, Russia, founded by Peter the Great, 1710, and received its name (Crown-town) in 1721. It was not attacked by the fleets in the war with Russia, 1854-5.

Crook, a bishop's pastoral staff or crook, distinct from the crozier. Nine pastoral staffs have been recently presented to English bishops; one to the bishop of Hereford, Dr. James Atlay, in Jan. 1872.

Cropredy Bridge, near Banbury, Oxfordshire. Here the royalists defeated sir William Waller and the army of the parliament, 29 June, 1644.

Croquet. This game, which became common in Britain about 1850, is said to be a revival of the old Pall Mall (which see). It has been much superseded by Lawn Tennis, 1877-81.

Crosier, a staff surmounted by a cross, borne before an archbishop, was in use in the fourth century. The bearing a crosier before ecclesiastics is mentioned in the life of St. Caesarea of Arles about 500.

Cross. That on which the Redeemer suffered on Mount Calvary was said to have been found at Jerusalem, with two others, deep in the ground, by St. Helena, 3 May, 328 (termed the Invention of the Cross); Christ's being distinguished from those of the thieves by a sick woman being cured by touching it. It was carried away by Chosroes, king of Persia, on the plundering of Jerusalem; but was recovered by the emperor Heraclius (who defeated him in battle), 14 Sept. 615, and that day has since been commemorated as "the festival of the Exaltation of the Cross," established in 642.

It is asserted by church writers that a great shining cross was seen in the heavens by Constantine, and that it led him to adopt it on his standard, with the inscription "In hoc signo vinces."—"Under this sign thou shalt conquer." With this (Labarum) he advanced to Rome, where he vanquished Maxentius, 27 Oct. 312.—Lenglet.

Signing with the Cross was first practised by Christians to distinguish themselves from the Pagans. . . . about 110

Crotona (S. Italy), a city founded by the Achæan Greeks about 710 B.C. Here Pythagoras taught about 520. The Crotons destroyed Sybaris, 510.

Crown. An Amalekite brought Saul's crown to David, 1056 B.C. (2 Sam. i.). The first Roman who wore a crown was Tarquin the Elder, 616 B.C. The crown was first a fillet tied round the head; afterwards it was formed of leaves and flowers, and also of stuffs adorned with jewels; see Tiara.

The crown of Alfred had two little bells attached (872); it is said to have been long preserved at Westminster, and may have been that described in the parliamentary inventory taken in 1649.

Atheistan's crown resembled an earl's coronet, 929.
William I. wore his crown on a cup, adorned with points, 1066.
Richard III. introduced the crosses, 1483.

Henry VII. introduced the arches, 1485.
The crown and regalia of England were pledged to the city of London by Richard II. for 2000*l.* In 1386; see the king's receipt on redeeming them.—Rymer.

The crown of Charles II., made in 1660, is the oldest existing in England (see Blood's Conspiracy).

The Imperial State Crown of England was made by Rundell and Bridges in 1838, principally with jewels taken from old crowns. It contains one large ruby, 1 large sapphire, 16 sapphires, 11 emeralds, 4 rubies, 1363 brilliants, 1273 rose diamonds, 147 table diamonds, 4 drop-shaped pearls, and 273 pearls.—Professor Tennant.

Crown Lands. The revenue arising from those in England is now nearly all subject to parliament, which annually provides for the support of the sovereign and government about 875,000*l.* The revenue of the duchy of Cornwall belongs to the prince of Wales even during his minority. Henry VII. (1485) resumed those lands which had been given to their followers by the sovereigns of the house of York. The hereditary estates of the crown were largely bestowed on their courtiers by the sovereigns—especially by the Stuarts.

Crown of India, Imperial Order of, instituted by queen Victoria (to commemorate the assumption of the title of empress, 1 Jan. 1877), for princesses of the royal family, distinguished Indian and British ladies, and wives of viceroys and governors and secretaries of state for India, 31 Dec. 1877. Twelve ladies (the marchioness of Salisbury and others) invested, 29 April, 1878.

Crowns and HALF-CROWNS of silver were coined in England by Edward VI. in 1553. None were coined in 1861, and they were gradually withdrawn from circulation. The coinage of half-crowns was resumed in 1974, after an inquiry as to their utility.

Crows. An act passed for their destruction in England, 24 Hen. VIII. 1532. Crows were anciently employed as letter-bearers, as carrier-pigeons are now.

Croydon, Surrey, granted to Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, about 1070. Archbishop Whitgift's hospital was founded in 1596. The fine old parish church was burned 5, 6 Jan. 1867.

Crozier, see Crosier.

Crucifix, the cross with the figure of Christ attached to it, first known in the fourth, came into general use in the eighth century.

Crucifixion. A mode of execution common among the Assyrians, Egyptians, Persians, Carthaginians, Greeks, and Romans. Ariarathes, of Cappadocia, aged 80, vanquished by Perdiccas, and discovered among the prisoners, was flayed alive and nailed to a cross, with his principal officers, 322 B.C. Jesus Christ was crucified 3 April, A.D. 33.—Usher (15 April, A.D. 29, Clinton; 28 March, A.D. 31, Hales). Crucifixion was ordered to be discontinued by Constantine, 330.—Lenglet.

Cruelty to Animals, see Animals, and Virsecution.

Crusades (French Croisades), wars undertaken to drive the infidels from Jerusalem and the "Holy Land." Peter Gautier, the Hermit, an officer of Amiens, on his return from pilgrimage incited pope Urban II. to expel infidels from the city where Christ had taught. Urban convened a council of 310 bishops at Clermont in France, at which the ambassadors of the chief Christian potentates assisted, and gave Peter the commission to summon Europe to a general war, 1094. The first crusade was published; an army of 300,000 men was raised, of which Peter had the direction, and Godfrey de Bouillon the command, 1095. The warriors wore a red cross upon the right shoulder, and their motto was Volonté de Dieu, "God's will."—The French government have published some of the historians of the Crusades in a magnificent form (1844-77).

I. Crusade (1095) ended by Jerusalem being taken by assault, 15 July, 1099, and Godfrey de Bouillon made king.
II. Preached by St. Bernard in 1146, headed by emperor Conrad II. and Louis VII. of France. Crusaders defeated; Jerusalem lost in 1187.
III. Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, etc., in 1188, joined by Philip II. of France and Richard I. of England in 1190. Glorious, but fruitless.
IV. 1195, by emperor Henry VI.: successful till his death in 1197.
V. Proclaimed by Innocent III., 1198. Baldwin, count of Flanders, attacked the Greeks, and took Constantinople in 1203. His companions returned.
VI. In 1216. In 1229, emperor Frederick II. obtained possession of Jerusalem on a truce for ten years. In 1240, Richard, earl of Cornwall, arrived at Palestine, but soon departed.
VII. By Louis IX. (St. Louis), 1248, who was defeated and taken prisoner at Mansourah, 5 April, 1260; released by ransom; truce of ten years.

VIII. and last, in 1270, by the same prince, who died of a contagious disease, at Carthage, in Africa, 3 Aug. Prince Edward, afterwards Edward I. of England, was at Acre, 1271. In 1291, the sultan took Acre, and the Christians were driven out of Syria.

Crystal Palace, Hyde Park, London; see Exhibition of 1851.

Crystal Palace, New York. This building was opened 14 July, 1853, by president Pierce, for a universal industrial exhibition. It stood in Reservoir Square. Its main buildings and galleries covered an area of 173,000 square feet. After the close of the exhibition it was used by the American Institute for its fairs and for meetings of various kinds. On 5 Oct. 1858, it was destroyed by fire, together with a great number of articles sent for exhibition at the American Institute. The Crystal Palace was owned by a stock company, was designed by Messrs. Carstensen and Gildemeister, of New York, and was considered a beautiful piece of architecture.

Crystal Palace, Sydenham. The exhibition building of 1851 having been surrendered to Messrs. Fox and Henderson on 1 Dec. 1851, the materials were sold for 70,000*l.* to a company, who soon after commenced erecting the Crystal Palace on its present site, near Sydenham in Kent, under the direction of sir Joseph Paxton, Owen Jones, Digby Wyatt, and others. Crystallography is the science relating to the symmetrical forms assumed by substances passing from the liquid to the solid state. Romé de Lisle published his "Essai de Cristallographie" in 1772; but René-Just Haüy is regarded as the founder of the modern school of crystallography (1801).—Whewell. Dana, Dufresnoy, and Miller are eminent modern writers on this subject.

Ctesiphon (afterwards AL MADAYN), on the Tigris, the splendid capital of Parthia, was taken by Trajan in 116, and by Alexander Severus (who made 100,000 captives), 198. Its defences deterred Julian from the siege, 363. It was taken by Omar and the Saracens, 637, and utterly destroyed, and Cufa, near it, built with the remains.

Cubit, a measure by which the ark of Noah was measured (2448 B.C.). It was the distance from a man's elbow to the extremity of the middle finger. According to Arbuthnot, the Hebrew cubit was a little under 22 inches, the Roman cubit 17½ inches, and the English cubit 18 inches.

Cucking-stool (or DUCKING-STOOL), for shrews: one at Kingston-on-Thames was used in April, 1745; and another at Cambridge in 1780.—Chambers.

Cucumbers, noticed by Virgil and other ancient poets, were brought to England from the Netherlands about 1538.

Cuddalore (India), on the coast of the Carnatic, was acquired by the English in 1681. It was reduced by the French in 1758, but recaptured in 1760 by sir Eyre Coote. Again lost in 1781, it underwent a destructive siege by the British under gen. Stuart, in 1783, which was continued until peace was signed, when it reverted to them, 1784.

Cuenca, New Castile, Spain, 80 miles from Madrid, attacked by the Carlists 13 July, and captured 14 July, 1874. The garrison and the inhabitants were barbarously used. Gen. Lopez Pinto rescued the prisoners, 19 July.

Cuirass, a part of Greek and Roman armor. The skins of beasts, and afterwards tanned leather, formed the cuirass of the Britons until the Anglo-Saxon era. It was afterwards made of iron and brass. The cuirass was worn by cavalry in the reign of Henry III., 1216 et seq. Napoleon had several regiments of cavalry wearing cuirasses, and most European armies have picked corps of such.

Culdees, said to derive their name from cultores Dei, worshippers of God, monks in Scotland and Ireland, who had their principal seat at St. Andrew's. It is said that in 1185, at Tipperary, there was a Culdean abbey whose monks were "attached to simple truth and pure Christian worship, and had not yet conformed to the reigning superstition." They were eventually subjected to the papal yoke.

Cullen's-wood (Ireland). An English colony from Bristol, inhabiting Dublin, went to divert themselves at Cullen's-wood, when the O'Byrnes and O'Tooles fell upon them, and destroyed 500 men, besides women and children, 30 March, 1209 (on Easter, afterwards called Black Monday).

Culloden, near Inverness, where the English, under William, duke of Cumberland, defeated the Scotch, headed by the young Pretender, the last of the Stuarts, 16 April, 1746. The Scots lost 2500 men in killed upon the field, or in the slaughter which occurred in the pursuit, while the loss of the English did not far exceed 200. Prince Charles, who wandered among the wilds of Scotland for six months, while 30,000*l.* were offered for taking him, at length escaped from Uist to Morlaix, and died at Rome 3 March, 1788.

Culture, according to Mr. Matthew Arnold ("The Apostle of Culture"), is the knowledge of "the best that has been thought and said in the world" (1880).

Cultur-Kampf, see Kultur-Kampf.

Culverin, cannon so called from the French coulverine, said to have been introduced into England from a French model in 1534. It was originally five inches and a quarter diameter in the bore, and carried a ball of eighteen pounds.—Bailey.

Cumæ (S. Italy), a Greek colony, 1050 B.C., said to have been the residence of the ancient Sibyl, was taken by the Samnites 420 B.C., and annexed by the Romans 338 B.C.

Cumberland, a N.W. county of England, was granted to Malcolm I. of Scotland in 945, by king Edmund, "on condition that he should be his fellow-worker." It was seized by William I., but restored to Malcolm III., "who became his man," 1072. William the Lion, after his defeat at Alnwick, resigned Cumberland to Henry II., and it was finally annexed to England in 1237.

* "At any contested election for a county or borough represented by more than two members, and having more than one seat vacant, every voter shall be entitled to a number of votes equal to the number of vacant seats, and may give all such votes to one candidate, or may distribute them among the candidates as he thinks fit."

cumulative vote was used in the election of the London school board, 29 Nov. 1870.

Cunaxa, in Mesopotamia, near the Euphrates, where Cyrus the younger was defeated and slain by his brother Artaxerxes II., against whom he had conspired (401 B.C.), narrated in Xenophon's "Anabasis." His Greek auxiliaries were successful; see Retreat of the Greeks.

Cuneiform Inscriptions (from cuneus, Latin for a wedge), in characters resembling arrow-heads, inscribed on bricks or clay tablets, found at Babylon, Behistun, etc., have lately been deciphered by English and foreign scholars, who date some of them as far back as 2000 B.C.; see Assyria, Babylon, Behistun.

Cunnersdorf (in Prussia). On 12 Aug. 1759, Frederick II., king of Prussia, with 50,000 men, attacked the Austrian and Russian army of 90,000 in their camp near this place, and at first gained considerable advantages; but pursuing them too far, the Austrians and Russians rallied, and gained a complete victory. The Prussians lost 200 pieces of cannon and 30,000 men in killed and wounded.

Cupola Ships, see Navy of England, 1861.

Cupping, a mode of blood-letting. The skin is scarified by lancets, and a glass cup in which the air has been rarified by heat is immediately applied to it, when the blood usually flows into the cup. This operation was well known to the ancients, and is described by Hippocrates (413 B.C.) and Celsus (20 B.C.). It was common in England about 1820.

Curaçoa, an island in the Caribbean sea, settled by the Spaniards about 1527, was seized by the Dutch in 1634. In 1800 the French, settled on part of this island, quarrelled with the Dutch, who surrendered it to a British frigate. It was restored to the Dutch in 1802, taken from them by the British in 1807, and again restored in 1814.

Curates were of early appointment as coadjutors in the Catholic church, and are mentioned in England in the seventh century. Among the acts passed for the relief of this laborious class of the clergy are the 12th Anne, 1713, and 36th, 53d, and 58th Geo. III., and especially the beneficent act, 2 Will. IV., Oct. 1831. It appeared by parliamentary reports on ecclesiastical revenues that there were, in 1831, 5230 curates in England and Wales, whose stipends amounted to 424,695*l*. The greatest number of curates in one diocese was Lincoln, 629; and the smallest that of St. Asaph, 43. The Pastoral Aid Society was established in 1836; the Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates, in 1837; the Curates' Augmentation Fund, 1866.

Curfew Bell (from the French couvre feu) was revived or introduced in England by Will. I. 1068. On the ringing of the curfew at eight o'clock in the evening all fires and candles were to be extinguished, under a severe penalty.—Rapin. The curfew was abolished 1 Hen. I. 1100. A so-called curfew bell was rung at West Ham so lately as Nov. 1859.

Curiatii, see Rome, 669 B.C.

Curling, a Scotch national game with stones on the ice, said to have been introduced from the Low Countries in the sixteenth century. The Duddingstone curling club was instituted 1795. The royal Caledonian curling club, founded in 1838, owns a large artificial pond at Strathallan, Perthshire.

Curragh, see Kildare.

Currants, from Corinth, whence, probably, the tree was first brought to us about 1533. The name is also given to a small kind of dried grape, brought from the Levant and Zante. The duty on these currants (4*s*. 4*d*. per cwt. in 1834) has been reduced to 7*s*. The hawthorn currant (Ribes oxycanthoides) came from Canada in 1705.

Currency Acts. Those of sir Robert Peel were passed in 1819 and in 1844.

Curator Baron. This office, formerly attached to the court of exchequer, was abolished in 1856, on the death of the right hon. George Bankes.

Curtatone, near Mantua (N. Italy). Here the Austrians, under Radetzky, crossed the Mincio, and defeated the Italians after a severe conflict, 29 May, 1848.

Cushee Pieces, invented by Richard Leake, the master-gunner of the Royal Prince man-of-war, renowned for bravery shown in the engagement with the Dutch admiral Van Tromp, in 1673.

Custom is a law not written (lex non scripta), established by long usage and consent, and is distinguished from lex scripta, or the written law. It is the rule of law when it is derived from 1189 downwards. Sixty years' custom is binding in the civil law, and forty years' in ecclesiastical cases.

Customs were collected upon merchandise in England, under Ethelred II. in 979. The king's claim to them by grant of parliament was established 3 Edw. I. 1274. The customs were farmed to sir Thomas Smith for annual sums varying from 14,000*l*. to 50,000*l*. in the reign of Elizabeth.—Stow. They were farmed by Charles II. for 390,000*l*. in 1666.—Davenant. In 1671 commissioners were appointed. The customs were consolidated by Mr. Pitt in 1787. Between 1820 and 1830 so many reductions and consolidations were made in the customs department, that above a quarter of a million was saved in salaries, though the work had enormously increased.—Acts consolidating the customs duties were passed in 1853, 1854, and 1860, whereby the number of articles in the tariff and the amount of the customs were greatly reduced. Many changes have been made since; see Revenue. The disqualification of custom-house officers and officers of excise from voting for the election of members of parliament in 1782 was removed in 1867–8.

The laws respecting the customs were amended by an act passed 21 Aug. 1871, and consolidated by acts passed, 24 July, 1876

Customs Parliament, see Zollverein.

Custos Rotulorum, keeper of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, previously nominated by the lord chancellor, was in 1545 directed to be appointed by a bill signed by the king. The act was confirmed in 1689.

Custoza, near Verona (N. Italy). Here the Italians were defeated by marshal Radetzky, 23 July, 1848; and here they were again defeated, 24 June, 1866, after a series of desperate attacks on the Austrian army. The Italians were commanded by their king, Victor Emmanuel, and the Austrians by the archduke Albrecht. The Italian loss was computed to be 720 killed, 8112 wounded, and 4315 missing; the Austrian loss, 960 killed, 8690 wounded, and nearly a thousand prisoners. The Italians soon recrossed the Mincio.

Cutch (Kachh), W. India, a principality under the government of Bombay. In consequence of the depredations of the natives, the East India government resorted to hostile measures, which resulted in a stringent treaty with the rao in Jan. 1816. In 1819 he was deposed for misgovernment, and replaced by his infant son, supported by a British contingent. The traffic in children, detected in Dec. 1835, was suppressed by the British. Many persons perished by an earthquake in July, 1819.—Thornton.

Cutlery, see Steel.

Cuttack (Katak), E. India, a British province ceded to the E. I. company in 1803. Cuttack, the capital, was taken by col. Harcourt, 14 Oct. same year. The Maharrattas conquered it in 1750.—Thornton.

Cutting-out Machines. Wearing apparel was first cut out by machinery in England by Messrs. Hyams in 1853. The machine, invented by Mr. Frederick Osbourn, consists of a reciprocating vertical knife working through a slot in the table that supports the pile of cloth to be cut. The cloth being pressed up to the edge of the knife by the attendant, the knife will sever it in the direction of the lines marked on the upper layer.

Cuzco, capital of Peru, was entered by Pizarro in Nov. 1533, and taken by him in Aug. 1536, after five months' siege.

Cyanogen, a colorless gas (composed of nitrogen and carbon), irritating to the nose and eyes, derived from Prussian blue, was first obtained in the free state by Gay Lussac in 1815, being the first instance of the isolation of a compound radical.

Cycle of the sun, the twenty-eight years before the days of the week return to the same days of the month; that of the moon is nineteen lunar years and seven intercalary months, or nineteen solar years. The cycle of Jupiter is sixty years. The Paschal cycle, or the time of keeping Easter, was first calculated for the period of 532 years by Victorius, 463.—Blair. See Melonic Cycle, Calippic Period.

Cyclones, circular whirlwinds, or hurricanes, common in the East and West Indian and Chinese seas, vary from 200 to 500 miles in diameter. Many details respecting them will be found in Reid's "Law of Storms," published 1838.

By a great cyclone immense damage was done on sea and land; about 100 ships are said to have been lost, and about 60,000 persons perished, and whole towns nearly destroyed: see Calcutta. 5 Oct. 1864
Captain Watson, of the Clarence, observing the barometer falling, and foretelling the approach of the cyclone, saved his ship by steering out of its range.
Great cyclone in the Bahamas, at Nassau, New Providence; above 600 houses and many churches and other buildings thrown down; between 60 and 70 persons killed, and a great many ships dismantled. 1, 2 Oct. 1866
Another cyclone at Calcutta, not so destructive. 1 Nov. 1867
A cyclone desolated Antigua, St. Kitts, and other isles; religious and manufacturing buildings destroyed, and thousands made homeless. 21 Aug. 1871
Destructive cyclone near Madras; ships lost. 1 May, 1872
Destructive cyclone, S.E. Bengal; Calcutta barely escaped; about 215,000 persons perished. 31 Oct. 1876

Cyclopædia, see Encyclopædiæ.

Cyclopean Masonry, a term given to very ancient buildings in Greece, Italy, and Asia Minor, probably the work of the Pelasgi, more than 1000 B.C.

Cyder, see Cider.

Cymbal, the oldest known musical instrument, made of brass. Xenophon says the cymbal was invented by Cybele, and used in her feasts about 1580 B.C.

Cymmrodorion Society was established in Sept. 1751, to instruct the ignorant and relieve distressed Welsh. It was suspended in 1781, and revived 24 June, 1820, for literary purposes. The society was re-established in 1877 for promotion of literature and the arts in Wales.

Cymri or KYMBRI (hence Cambria), the great Celtic family to which the Britons belonged, and which came from Asia and occupied a large part of Europe about 1500 B.C. About A.D. 640 Dyvnwal Moelmud reigned "King of the Cymry;" see Wales.

Cynics, a sect of philosophers founded by Antisthenes (about 396 B.C., Diog. Laert., Clinton), who professed to condemn all worldly things, even sciences, except morality; and lived in public with little shame. Diogenes, the eminent cynic, died 323 B.C.

Cynoscephalæ (dogs' heads), so named from the shape of the heights), in Thessaly, where Pelopidas and the Thebans defeated Alexander, tyrant of Phææ and the Thessalians, 364 B.C. Pelopidas was slain. Here also the consul Flaminius totally defeated Philip V. of Macedon, 197 B.C., and ended the war.

Cypress, Cupressus sempervirens, a tree found in the isle of Cyprus. The Athenians buried heroes in coffins made of this wood, of which Egyptian mummy-chests were also fabricated. The ancients planted it in cemeteries. The cypress was brought to England about 1441. The deciduous cypress, C. disticha, came from North America before 1640.

Cyprus, a large island in the Mediterranean, near the coasts of Asia Minor and Syria; present capital Levkosia or Nikosia; seaports, Larnaka and Famagosta. Here the ancients found copper (æs Cyprium), silver, and precious stones. The country was fertile, and abounded with trees in ancient times; and under Venice its commerce was important. The population, two thirds Greek, is now about 135,000: under Venice, said to have been a million, probably exaggerated.

The Phœnician colonists introduced the worship of Ashtaroth (the Greek Astarte or Aphrodite, the Roman Venus). 500-499

Cyr, St., near Versailles. Here a college for ladies was founded by Madame de Maintenon, in 1686, and here she died, 15 April, 1719. It was made a military college in 1803.

Cyrenaic Sect, founded by Aristippus the Elder, 365 B.C. They taught that the supreme good of man is pleasure, particularly that of the senses; and that even virtue ought to be commended only because it gave pleasure.

Cyrene (N.W. Africa), a Greek colony, founded by Battus about 630 B.C. Aristæus, who was chief of the colonists here, gave the city his mother's name. It was also called Pentapolis, on account of its five towns—namely, Cyrene, Ptolemais, Berenice, Apollonia, and Arsinoë. It was conquered by Ptolemy Soter I., who placed many Jews here (286 B.C.). Cyrene was left by Ptolemy Apion to the Romans, 97 B.C. It is now a desert. Some Cyrenaic sculptures were placed in the British Museum in July, 1861.

Cyropædium, see Corus.

Cyzicus (Asia Minor). In the Peloponnesian war, the Lacedæmonian fleet under the command of Mindarus, assisted by Pharnabazus, the Persian, was encountered by the Athenians under Alcibiades, and defeated with great slaughter, near Cyzicus, Mindarus being slain, 410 B.C.—Plutarch.

Czar (the title of the emperor of Russia), probably derived from Cæsar, a title said to have been assumed by Ivan Basilowitz after defeating the Tartars, about 1482. The empress is termed czarina, and the eldest son czarewitch.

Czecha, the native race of Bohemia and Moravia (which see). The antagonism between the Germans and Czechs is milder in Moravia than in Bohemia. Their representatives entered the reichsrath at Vienna, 8 Oct. 1879.

D.

Dacca (N.E. India), a province acquired by the East India Company in 1765, and ruled under them by a nawab till its annexation in 1845.—Thornton.

Dacia, a Roman province, part of Hungary, and the adjoining provinces, after many contests, was subdued by Trajan, 106, when Decebalus, the Dacian leader, was killed. Dacia was abandoned to the Goths by Aurelian, in 270; subdued by the Huns, 376; by Scythians, 566; by Charlemagne, and by the Magyars, in the ninth century.

Dacoits, hereditary robbers of North India, formerly employed in war by native sovereigns.

It is stated that between 1818 and 1834, one tribe alone, in 118 "dacoitees," or expeditions, killed 172 persons, and obtained plunder valued at 115,000*l*. In 1838 Lord Auckland did much to suppress the dacoits, and many settlements were broken up, but they are not quite extinct in Bengal and Burmah. Several dacoitees were suppressed in 1879.

Daghistan (S.W. Asia), was conquered by the czar Peter, 1723; restored to Persia, 1735; reannexed to Russia by Alexander I., 1813.

Daguerreotype Process, invented by Daguerre, and published 1838; see Photography.

Dahlia, a flower brought from Mexico, of which it is a native, about 1787, and cultivated by the Swedish botanist, Dahl. About 1814 it was introduced into France and England; André Thouine suggested improvements in its culture, and it soon became a favorite. Georgi introduced it at St. Petersburg; hence it is known in Germany as the Georgina.

Dahomey, a negro kingdom, West Africa, became known to Europeans early in the last century, when Trudo Andati or Guadjor Trudo, a man of energy and talent, was king. He died in 1732, and was succeeded by a series of cruel tyrants, a large part of whose revenue was derived from the slave-trade. Abbeokuta, a robbers' haunt in 1825, has, since 1829, become a strong-walled town, inhabited by free blacks; and was consequently opposed by the king of Dahomey. His army has been severely defeated in its attacks on this place, and in one on 16 March, 1864, a great number of his Amazons were slain. During the last few years Dahomey has been visited by capt. Burton and other travellers, who have described the royal sanguinary customs.

Dahra (Algeria). On 18 June, 1845, above 500 Kabyles at war with the French were suffocated in a cave, a fire having been kindled by order of gen. Pelissier, afterwards duke of Malakoff. They had fired on a messenger bearing an offer of a truce. The massacre was condemned by marshal Soult, the minister of war, but justified by marshal Bugeaud.

Daily News, liberal commercial newspaper, now 1*d*., established 21 Jan. 1846. In the number for 23 June, 1876, the letter from Mr. MacGahan, its correspondent at Constantinople, first drew attention to the atrocities in Bulgaria. The first Bulgarian parliament expressed its gratitude for this, 4 April, 1879.

Daily Telegraph, penny paper, liberal, established 29 June, 1855. It became a conservative paper, 1876. Average daily sale 242,215, May, June, 1877.

Dalecarlians (Sweden), revolted against Christian of Denmark, 1521, and placed Gustavus Vasa on the throne of Sweden.

Dalmatia, an Austrian province, N.E. of the Adriatic Sea, conquered and made a province by the Romans, 34 B.C. The emperor Diocletian erected his palace at Spalato or Spalatro, and retired there, A.D. 305. Dalmatia was held in turns by the Goths, Hungarians, and Turks, till its cession to Venice in 1699. By the treaty of Campo Formio in 1797 it was given to Austria, but in 1805 it was incorporated with Italy, and gave the title of duke to marshal Soult. In 1814 it reverted to Austria. An insurrection opposed to the new military law broke out at Bocche di Cattaro, and a conflict with the troops at Dragali took place, 10 Oct. 1869. Several regiments were sent there, but the insurgents obtained several successes during the month. A deputation offered submission, 2 Nov., and the operations against them were suspended about the end of the month.

Damascus (Syria), a city in the time of Abraham, 1913 B.C. (Gen. xiv.); now the capital of a Turkish pachalic.

Taken by David (1040 B.C.), but retaken shortly after; made the capital of Syria under Benhadad and his successors B.C.
Recovered by Jeroboam II. about 822
Taken by Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria 740
From the Assyrians it passed to the Persians, and from them to the Greeks, under Alexander 333
To the Romans about 64
Paul, converted, preaches here (Acts ix.) 52
Taken by the Saracens, 633; by the Turks in 1075; destroyed by Tamerlane Jan. 1401
Taken by Ibrahim Pachá 1832
The disappearance of a Greek priest, named father Tommaso, from here, 1 Feb. 1840, led to the torture of a number of Jews suspected of his murder, and to a cruel persecution of that people, which caused remonstrances from many states of Europe. 1840

 Damascus restored to Turkey. 1841
 In consequence of a dispute between the Druses and Maronites, the Mahometans massacred above 3000 Christians and destroyed the houses, rendering vast numbers of persons homeless and destitute; a large number were rescued by Abd-el-Kader, who held the citadel. 9, 10, 11 July. 1860
 Justice executed for these crimes by Fuad Pacha: 100 persons executed, including the Turkish governor; and 11,000 persons made soldiers. Aug.-Sept. "

Damask LINENS AND SILKS, first manufactured at Damascus, have been beautifully imitated by the Dutch and Flemish. The manufacture was brought to England by artisans who fled from the persecutions of Alva, 1571-3. The DAMASK ROSE was brought here from the south of Europe by Dr. Linacre, physician to Henry VIII., about 1540.

Damiens's Attempt. Louis XV. of France was stabbed with a knife in the right side by Damiens, a native of Arras, 5 Jan. 1757. The culprit endured the most excruciating tortures, and was then broken on the wheel, 28 March.

Damietta (Lower Egypt) was taken by the crusaders, 5 Nov. 1219; lost 1221; retaken by Louis IX. 5 June, 1249; surrendered as his ransom when a prisoner, 6 May, 1250. The present town was built soon after. Here, it is said, dimity was first manufactured.

Damon AND Pythias (or Phintias), Pythagorean philosophers. Damon was condemned to death by the tyrant Dionysius of Syracuse, about 387 B.C. He obtained leave to go and settle some domestic affairs, promising to return at the appointed time of execution, and Pythias became his surety. When Damon did not appear, Pythias surrendered and was led to execution; but at this critical moment Damon returned. Dionysius remitted the sentence, and desired to share their friendship.

Danaï : an ancient name of the Greeks derived from Danaus, king of Argos, 1474 B.C.

Dance OF DEATH. The triumph of death over all ranks of men was a favorite subject with the artists of the middle ages, and appears in rude carvings and pictures in various countries.

The Chorea Machabæorum or Danse Macabre, the first printed representation, published by Guyot Marchand, a bookseller of Paris. 1485
 Holbein's Dance of Death (concerning the authorship of which there has been much controversy), printed at Lyons in 1538, and at Basil. 1594
 Many editions have since appeared; one with an introduction and notes published by Mr. Russell Smith. 1849
 The term Dance of Death was also applied to the frenzied movements of the Flagellants, who had sometimes skeletons depicted on their clothing, about the end of the fourteenth century.

Dancing mania, accompanied by aberration of mind and distortions of the body, was very prevalent in Germany in 1374, and in the sixteenth century in Italy, where it was termed Tarantism, and erroneously supposed to be caused by the bite of the Tarantula spider. The music and songs employed for its cure are still preserved.

Dancing was invented by the Curetes, 1534 B.C.—Eusebius. The Greeks combined the dance with their dramas, and pantomimic dances were introduced on the Roman stage 22 B.C.—L'her. Dancing by cinque paces was introduced into England from Italy, A.D. 1541. Dancing was the principal amusement of the North American Indians. They had religious, martial, and social dances. In modern times the French introduced ballets analogues in their musical dramas. The country dance (contre-danse) is of French origin, but its date is not precisely known.—Spelman. See Morice Dance, Quadrille, and Waltz.

Establishment of a national training-school for dancing, by Mr. Mapleson; second annual distribution of prizes, etc. 21 Sept. 1878

Dane-geld, or DANEGELT, a tribute paid to the Danes to stop their ravages in England; first raised by Ethelred II. in 991, and again in 1008; and levied after the expulsion of the Danes to pay fleets for clearing the seas of them. The tax was suppressed by Edward the Confessor in 1051; revived by William I. 1068; and formed part of the revenue of the crown, until abolished by Stephen, 1136. Every hide of land, i. e. as much as one plough could plough, or, as Bede says, as much as could maintain a family, was taxed at first 1s., afterwards as much as 7s. Camden says that once 24,860*l.* was raised.

Danes, or NORTHMEN; see Denmark. During their attacks upon Britain and Ireland they made a descent on France, where in 895, under Rollo, they received presents under the walls of Paris. They returned and ravaged the French territories as far as Ostend in 896. They attacked Italy in 903. Neustria was granted by the king of France to Rollo and his Normans (Northmen); hence Normandy, in 911. The invasions of England and Ireland were as follows:

First hostile appearance of the Danes.	788
They land near Purbeck, Dorset.	787
Descend in Northumberland: destroy the church at Lindisfarne; are repelled, and perish by shipwreck, 8 Jan.	794

Dannewerke, or DANNAWIRKE, a series of earthworks, considered almost impregnable, stretching across the long narrow peninsula of Schleswig, Holstein, and Jutland—said to have been constructed during the "stone age," long before the art of metal-working. It was rebuilt in 937 by Thyra, queen of Gormo the Old, for which she was named "Dannabod," the pride of the Danes. It was repaired by Olaf Tryggveson between 995 and 1000. Near here the Prussians, helping the dukes, defeated the Danes, 23 April, 1848. The retreat of the Danes from it, 5 Feb. 1864, occasioned much dissatisfaction at Copenhagen.

Dante's Divina Commedia was first printed in 1472. He was born 14 May, 1265; died at Ravenna, 14 Sept. 1321. A festival in his honor, at Florence, was opened by the king, 14 May, 1865, when a large statue of Dante by Pazzi of Ravenna was uncovered.

Dantzic (N. Germany), a commercial city in 997; according to some authorities, built by Waldemar I. in 1165. Poland obtained the sovereignty of it in 1454. It was seized by the king of Prussia, and annexed in 1793. It surrendered to the French, May, 1807; and by the treaty of Tilsit was restored to independence, under the protection of Prussia and Saxony, July, 1807. Dantzic was besieged by the allies in 1812; and surrendered 1 Jan. 1814. By the treaty of Paris it reverted to the king of Prussia. By the Vistula breaking through its dykes, 10,000 head of cattle and 4000 houses were destroyed, and many lives lost, 9 April, 1829.

Danube (German, Donau; anciently Ister, in its lower part), the largest river in Europe, except the Wolga, rises in the Black Forest and falls into the Black Sea. Trajan's bridge at Gladova was destroyed by Adrian, to prevent the barbarians entering Dacia. Steam navigation was projected on this river, by count Szechenyi, in 1830; and in that year the first steamboat was launched at Vienna, and the Austrian company was formed shortly after. The Bavarian company was formed 1836. A canal between the Danube and the Maine was completed by Louis I. of Bavaria. Charlemagne, in the eighth century, contemplated uniting the Danube and Rhine by a canal. At the peace of 30 March, 1856, the free navigation of the Danube was secured, and an independent European commission appointed to make it navigable from Isaktchi to the sea, which has worked with good effect. The British government, in 1868, lent 135,000*l.* to complete the works. The treaty respecting the navigation of the Danube renewed for twelve years, 13 March, 1871. The river suddenly took possession of a new bed, near Vienna, 17 April, which was formally opened 30 May, 1875.

In the Russo-Turkish war the Russians crossed the Danube and entered Bulgaria (see Russo-Turkish War, II.), June, 1877

The navigation of the Danube was regulated by Articles 50-54 of Berlin treaty..... 13 July, 1878

Danubian Principalities. WALLACHIA and MOLDAVIA (capitals, Bucharest and Jassy) were united and named ROUMANIA, 1859. Population of the two, 1860, 3,864,848; 1866, 4,424,961; 1873, 5,073,000. These provinces formed part of the ancient Dacia (which see).

Part of Moldavia ceded to Russia..... 1812
The provinces having participated in the Greek insurrection in 1821, were severely treated by the Turks; but by the treaty of Adrianople were placed under the protection of Russia..... 1829
The Porte appointed as hospodars prince Sirbey for Wallachia, and prince Ghika for Moldavia..... June, 1849
They retire from their governments when the Russians enter Moldavia (see Russo-Turkish War)..... 2 July, 1853
The Russians quit the provinces and the Austrians enter, Sept. 1854; retire..... March, 1857
The government of the principalities finally settled at the Paris conference (there were to be two hospodars, elected by elective assemblages, and the suzerainty of Turkey was to be preserved)..... 19 Aug. 1858
Alexander Cousa elected hospodar of Moldavia, 17 Jan.; of Wallachia..... 5 Feb. 1859

Dardanelles. Two castles (Sestos, in Roumania, and Abydos, in Naxos), built by the sultan Mahomet IV. in 1659, commanding the entrance of the strait of Gallipoli, named Dardanelles from the contiguous town Dardanus.—The passage of the strait was achieved by the British squadron under sir John Duckworth, 19 Feb. 1807; but he repassed them with great loss, 3 March, the castles of Sestos and Abydos hurling down stone shot upon the British ships. The allied English and French fleets passed the Dardanelles, at the sultan's request, Oct. 1853; see Hellas and Xerxes.

Daric, a Persian gold coin, issued by Darius, hence its name, about 538 B.C. About $5.56.—Knowles. It weighed two grains more than the English guinea.—Dr. Bernard.

Darien, ISTHMUS OF (Central America), discovered by Columbus, 1494. In 1694 William Paterson, founder of the Bank of England, published his plan for colonizing Darien. A company was formed in 1695, and in 1698-9 three expeditions sailed thither from Scotland, where 400,000*l.* had been raised. The first consisted of 1200 young men of all classes, besides women and children. The enterprise not having been recognized by the English government, the settlements were threatened by the Spaniards, to whom they were finally surrendered, 80 March, 1700. Paterson and a few survivors from famine and disease had set off shortly before the arrival of the second expedition. Several years after, 398,085*l.* were voted by parliament to the survivors as "equivalent money." 18,000*l.* were also voted to Paterson; but the bill was rejected in the house of lords; see Panama. The average breadth 40 miles; least breadth 30 miles.

Dark Ages, a term applied to the Middle Ages; according to Hallam, comprising about 1000 years—from the invasion of France by Clovis, 486, to that of Naples by Charles VIII., 1495. During this time learning was at a low ebb.

Dartford (Kent). Here commenced the insurrection of Wat Tyler, 1381. A convent of nuns, of the order of St. Augustin, endowed here by Edward III., 1355, was converted by Henry VIII. into a royal palace. The first paper-mill in England was erected at Dartford by sir John Spielman, a German, in 1590 (Stow), and about the same period was erected here the first mill for splitting iron bars. The powder-mills here were blown up four times between 1730 and 1738. Various explosions have since occurred, in some cases with loss of life to many persons: 12 Oct. 1790; 1 Jan. 1795; and others recently.

Dartmoor Prison, founded March, 1806. Seven prisoners of war were shot 6 April, 1815, after an insurrection. The autumn military manœuvres at Dartmoor, Aug. 1873, were unsuccessful through bad weather.

A mutiny here was checked with loss of life of one prisoner..... 12 Nov. 1880

Dartmouth (Devon). Burned by the French in the reigns of Richard I. and Henry IV. In a third attempt (1404), the invaders were defeated by the inhabitants, assisted by the valor of the women. The French commander, Du Chastel, three lords, and thirty-two knights, were made prisoners. In the war of the parliament, Dartmouth was taken after a siege of four weeks, by prince Maurice, who garrisoned the place for the king (1643); but it was retaken by General Fairfax by storm in 1646.

Dates were affixed to grants and assignments, 18 Edw. I. 1290. Before this time it was usual, at least, to pass lands without dating the deed of conveyance.—Lewis. Numerous instruments of assignment enrolled among our early records establish this fact. The date is determined by the names of the parties, particularly that of the grantor: the possession of land was proof of the title to it.—Hardie. A useful glossary of the dates given in old charters and chronicles will be found in Nicolas's "Chronology of History." J. J. Bond's "Handy-book for Verifying Dates," published 1866.

Dauphiné * (S.E. France), successively held by the Allobroges, Burgundians, and Lombards; was, about 732-4, delivered from the invading Saracens by Charles Martel. After forming part of the kingdom of Arles, it was much subdivided among counts. One of these, Humbert II., ceded Dauphiné and the Viennois to Philip VI. in 1343, for his eldest son, on the condition that the prince should be styled dauphine, which took effect in 1349, when Humbert became a monk. Louis Antoine, duke of Angoulême, son of Charles X., the last dauphin who assumed the title at his father's accession, 16 Sept. 1824, died 3 June, 1844.

Davertry, Northamptonshire. Near here Lambert, having escaped from the Tower, was defeated and retaken in his attempt to enkindle the war, by Monk, 21 April, 1660. The dissenting academy removed here from Northampton in 1752, was transferred to Wymondley in 1789, thence to London as Coward College, and finally united with Homerton and Highbury Colleges as New College, in 1850.

David's, Sr. (S.W. Wales), the ancient Menapia, now a poor decayed place, but once the metropolitan see of Wales, and archiepiscopal. When Christianity was planted in Britain, three archbishops' seats were appointed—viz., London, York, and Caerleon upon Usk, in Monmouthshire. That at Caerleon, being too near the dominions of the Saxons, was removed to Mynyw, and called St. David's, in honor of the archbishop who removed it, 522. St. Sampson was the last archbishop of the Welsh; for he, withdrawing himself on account of a pestilence to Dôle, in Brittany, carried the pall with him. In the reign of Henry I. the archbishops submitted to the see of Canterbury.—Beatson. Present income, 4500*l*.

BISHOPS.

David's Day, Sr., 1 March, is annually commemorated by the Welsh, in honor of St. David. Tradition states that on St. David's birthday, 540, a great victory was obtained by the Welsh over their Saxon invaders; and that the Welsh soldiers were distinguished, by order of St. David, by a leak in their caps.

Davis's Strait (North America), discovered by John Davis, 11 Aug. 1585, on his voyage to find a north-west passage, 1585-87. He made two more voyages for the same purpose, and five voyages to the East Indies. In the last he was killed by Japanese pirates, on the coast of Malacca, 27 or 29 Dec. 1605.

The Davy Medal, furnished by the sale of sir Humphry Davy's plate, was first awarded by the Royal Society to professors Bunsen and Kirchhoff for their discovery of spectrum analysis (which see).

Davyum, a new metal, discovered by Sergius Kern, 28 June, 1877, in the residuum of platinum ore; said to be hard, infusible, and rather ductile. It has been suspected to be ruthenium.

Day. Day began at sunrise among most of the northern nations, at sunset among the Athenians and Jews; and among the Romans at midnight as with us. The Italians in some places reckon the day from sunset to sunset, making their clocks strike twenty-four hours round. The Chinese divide the day into twelve parts of two hours each. The astronomical day begins at noon, is divided into twenty-four hours (instead of two parts of twelve hours), and is the mode of reckoning used in the Nautical Almanac. Thus the astronomical day 8 Dec. begins at noon of 8 Dec. and ends at noon 9 Dec.

Deaconesses, or ministering widows, have their qualifications given in 1 Tim. v. 9, 10 (65). Their duties were to visit the poor and sick, assist at the agapæ or love-feasts, admonish the young women, etc. The office was discontinued in the Western church in the fifth and sixth centuries, and in the Greek church about the twelfth, but has been recently revived in Germany. The appointment of deaconesses, subject to the parochial clergy, was advocated by the bishop of Ely about 1853, and some were appointed. The Diocesan Deaconess Institution, London, was established in 1861.

Deacons (literally, servants), an order of Christian ministers, began with the Apostles, about 58. (Acts vi.) Their qualifications are given by St. Paul (65), 1 Tim. iii. 8-14.

Dead. Prayers for their benefit were probably offered up in the second century, being referred to by Tertullian, who died 220. The practice was protested against by Aetius, and defended by Epiphanius, who died 403. It is renounced by the church of England.

Dead Weight Loan acquired its name from its locking up the capital of the Bank of England, which in 1823 advanced 11,000,000*l*. to the government (to construct new ordnance, etc.). The latter engaged to give an annuity of 585,740*l*. for 44 years, which ceased in June, 1867.

Deaf and Dumb. The first systematic attempt to instruct the deaf and dumb was made by Pedro de Ponce, a Benedictine monk of Spain, on Jerome Cardan's system, about 1570.

Oral Teaching.—Mr. Wm. Van Fraagh introduced the so-called German system into this country in July, 1867; published his "Plan for the Establishment of Day Schools [in preference to boarding houses] for the Deaf and Dumb" (in which they are to be taught by speech and lip-teaching only; the finger alphabet and artificial signs being rigidly excluded), in 1871. By the help of the baroness Meyer de Rothschild and others, the "Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb" was founded in 1871, and a day school opened at 12 Fitzroy square..... 16 July, 1872

International congress at Milan; great majority in favor of oral teaching of deaf mutes..... Sept. 1880

Deal, a cinque port with Sandwich, 1229; a fishing village in the reign of Henry VIII.; its strong castle built 1539 by Henry VIII. Deal was incorporated and made independent of Sandwich, 1699.

Dean (decanus), a name commonly given to the arch-priest, or eldest presbyter, in the twelfth century; originally a military title, an officer over ten soldiers. In the church of England, the dean and chapter of a cathedral nominally elect the bishop and form his council. By 13 & 14 Car. II. (1662), a dean must be in priest's orders; previously the office had occasionally been held by a layman, with special dispensation. The ancient office of "rural dean" has been much revived since 1850. The Deans and Canons' Resignation act passed 13 May, 1872. The Five Deans' memorial, and counter-memorial, see Church of England, 1881.

Dean, FOREST OF, Gloucestershire, anciently wooded quite through, and in the last century, though much curtailed, was twenty miles in length and ten in breadth. It was famous for its oaks, the material of our ships of war. Riots in this district, when more than 3000 persons assembled in the forest, and demolished upwards of fifty miles of wall and fence, throwing open 10,000 acres of plantation, took place on 8 June, 1831. The Dean Forest (mines) act passed 16 Aug. 1871.

The punishment of death was abolished in a great number of cases by sir Robert Peel's acts, 4 to 10 Geo. IV. 1824-9
By the Criminal Law Consolidation acts, death was confined to treason and wilful murder. 1861
The commission on capital punishment (appointed 1864) issued their report (recommending that penal servitude be substituted for death in some cases where murder was unprompted, and that executions should not be public). Dec. 1865
Capital punishment restricted in Italy. April
Its proposed abolition in Belgium was negatived. 18 Jan. 1837
"Capital Punishment within Prisons Bill" passed May, 1853. First case, 13 Aug. 1868; see Executions.
Capital punishment abolished in Saxony. 1 April 1868
Vote for its abolition in Switzerland, 1874; for its restoration (191,197-177,263). May, 1879
Abolition of the punishment of death in Great Britain proposed by Mr. Gilpin in the commons; negatived (127 to 23), 21 April, 1863; negatived (118 to 58), 29 July, 1869; negatived (167-54), 24 July, 1872; (155-50), 12 June, 1877; (263-64), 13 March, 1878; proposed by Mr. Pease, negatived (175-79). 22 June, 1881
Practically ceased in Belgium, Prussia, Bavaria, Denmark, and Sweden, though not abolished.
In France, 126 convictions for murder—4 executed in one year; similar proportion in Italy.
Abolished in some of the United States. Maine, 1876; Rhode Island, Michigan, and Wisconsin, since; in others virtually ceased.

Debating Societies; several formed in the last century. The celebrated Oxford Union Society was founded in 1823, and many orators have been trained by it.

Debtors have been subjected to imprisonment in almost all countries and times. In the eighteen months subsequent to the panic of Dec. 1825, as many as 101,000 writs for debt were issued in England. In the year ending 5 Jan. 1830, there were 7114 persons sent to the several prisons of London; and on that day 1547 of the number were yet confined. On 1 Jan. 1840, the number of prisoners for debt in England and Wales was 1732; in Ireland the number was under 1000; and in Scotland under 100. The operation of statutes of relief, and other causes, considerably reduced the number of imprisoned debtors. When the new Bankruptcy act (abolishing imprisonment for debt except when fraudulently contracted) came into operation in Nov. 1861, a number of debtors who had been confined were released. "Arrest of Absconding Debtors Bill," 14 & 15 Vict. c. 52, 1852. In 1863 nearly 18,000 persons were imprisoned by order of the county courts: average time, 15 days; amount of debt, 3*l*. 10*s*. By an act passed 9 Aug. 1869, the imprisonment of fraudulent debtors was abolished, with certain exceptions, and nearly a hundred debtors were released by a judge's order in Jan. 1870. An act to facilitate the arrest of absconding debtors, passed 9 Aug. 1870. Imprisonment for debt in Ireland was abolished by an act passed 6 Aug. 1872, and in Scotland (after 31 Dec.) by Dr. Cameron's act, passed 7 Sept. 1880; see Arrest, King's Bench, Bankrupts, Insolvents, and National Debt.

7978 persons were committed to jail by the county courts in 1871; 4438 in 1874.

Debusscope, an instrument of French origin, somewhat similar to the kaleidoscope, said to be useful for devising patterns for calico-printers, etc., made its appearance in 1860.

Deccan (Dekhan or Dakhan) (S. India) was invaded by the Mahometans in 1294. The first independent sultan was Alaudin. The natives revolted, and the dynasty of Bahmani was founded by Hasan Ganga in 1347. About 1686-90, Aurungzebe I. recovered the Deccan, but soon lost great part of it to the Mahrattas. The Nizam al Mulk, his viceroy, became independent in 1717. A large part of the Deccan was ceded to the English in 1818.

December (from decem, ten), the tenth month of the year of Romulus, commencing in March. In 713 B.C. Numa introduced January and February before March, and thenceforward December became the twelfth of the year. In the reign of Commodus, A.D. 181-192, December was called, by way of flattery, Amazonius, in honor of a courtesan whom that prince had loved, and had had painted like an Amazon. The English commenced their year on the 25th December, until the reign of William I.; see Year.

Decemviri, or Ten Men, appointed to draw up a code of laws, to whom for a time the whole government of Rome was committed, 451 B.C. The laws they drew up were approved by the senate and general assembly of the people, written on ten metallic tables, and set up in the place where the people met (comitium). Two more tables were added, 450 B.C. The Decemviri at first ruled well, but the conduct of Appius Claudius towards Virginia occasioning an insurrection, they were forced to resign; and consuls were again appointed, 449 B.C.

Decennalia, festivals instituted by Augustus, 17 B.C., celebrated by the Roman emperors every tenth year of their reign, with sacrifices, games, and largessea. —Liry. Celebrated by Antoninus Pius, A.D. 148.

Decimal System of COINAGE, WEIGHTS, etc. In 1782 Gouverneur Morris, the able assistant fiscal agent of the continental congress (United States), reported a decimal currency system, in which he attempted to harmonize the moneys of all the states. He ascertained that the one thousand four hundred and fortieth part of a Spanish dollar was a common divisor for the various currencies. Starting with this fraction as a unit, he proposed the following table of moneys: Ten units to be equal to one penny; ten pence to one bill; ten bills one dollar (about seventy-five cents of the present currency); ten dollars one crown. In 1784 Mr. Jefferson, as chairman of a committee of congress, proposed to strike four coins upon the basis of the Spanish dollar, as follows: A golden piece of the value of ten dollars; a dollar in silver; a tenth of a dollar in silver; a hundredth of a dollar in copper. The congress adopted his proposition, and this is the origin of the cent, dime, dollar, and eagle of the United States currency; see Metric System.

Decipium, a new metal found by M. Delafontaine in the same earth with Philippium (which see); announced Nov. 1878.

Declaration of Independence, UNITED STATES. On 2 July, 1776, the American congress resolved "that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; and that all political connection between us and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved." On the 4th a declaration, setting forth the causes which impelled the colonies to a separation, was adopted, signed by John Hancock, the president of congress, and sent forth to the world. At the beginning of August (it having been engrossed on parchment) it was signed by all the members of congress then present, and subsequently by two others, making the whole number of signers fifty-six. That parchment is preserved at Washington city.

Decoration Day The custom of strewing flowers on the graves of the dead originated among the women of the South, who, during the civil war, annually decorated the graves of soldiers in that way. The beautiful custom was adopted throughout the country, and in 1868 and 1869 gen. John A. Logan, as commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, appointed 30 May for that purpose. Since that time 30 May in each year has been observed as Decoration Day throughout the United States.

Decorative Art Its principles, enunciated by A. W. Pugin in his "Designs," in 1835, have been advanced by Owen Jones, Redgrave, and others. Owen Jones's elaborate "Grammar of Ornament" was published in 1856. A decorative art society, founded in 1844, existed for a short time only.

De Courcy's Privilege, that of standing covered before the king, granted by king John to John de Courcy, baron of Kingsale, and his successors, in 1203. He was the first Irish nobleman created by an English sovereign, 27 Hen. 1 1189, and was intrusted with the government of Ireland, 1185. The privilege was allowed to the baron of Kingsale by William III., George III., and by George IV. at his court held in Dublin in Aug. 1821. The present baron is the 80th in succession.

Decretals. They formed the second part of the canon law, or collection of the pope's edicts and decrees and the decrees of councils. The first acknowledged to be genuine is a letter of Siricius to Himerius, a bishop of Spain, written in the first year of his pontificate, 385. —Howell. Certain false decretals were used by Gregory IV. in 837. The decretals of Gratian, a Benedictine (a collection of canons), were compiled in 1150. Héaumont. Five books were collected by Gregory IX. 1227; a sixth by Boniface VIII. 1297; the Clementines by Clement V. in 1313; employed by John XXII. in 1317; the Extravagantes range from 1422 to 1483.

Dedication of the Jewish tabernacle took place 1490 B.C.; of the temple, 1004 B.C. of the second temple, 515 B.C. The Christians under Constantine built new churches and dedicated them with great solemnity, in A.D. 331 et seq. The dedication of books (by authors to solicit patronage or testify respect) existed in the time of Meccenas, 17 B.C., the friend and counsellor of Augustus, and a patron of Horace (Ode i. 1).

Deed, a written contract or agreement. The formula, "debeo tibi ad me act and deed," occurs in a charter of 933. Fosbrooke. Deeds in England were formerly written in Latin or French; the earliest known instance in English is the indenture between the abbot of Whitby and Robert Bustard, dated at York in 1343; see English.

Deep-sea Soundings. Much new and interesting information respecting the animal life and temperature of the deep sea has been acquired by the dredgings on the coast of Norway by M. Sars, and by those of Dr. W. B. Carpenter and professor (afterwards sir) Wyville Thomson on our own coasts, near the Faroe isles, in 1868 and 1869, and in the Mediterranean by Dr. Carpenter in 1870. Living animals have been found at a depth of three miles. On 21 Dec. 1872, Dr. Wyville Thomson and a party of scientific men sailed in H.M.S. Challenger (capt. G. S. Nares) to examine into the physical and biological condition of the great ocean basins and the direction of their currents. Deepest sounding then known was taken in the Atlantic, north of St. Thomas's, 3875 fathoms (4 miles, 719 yards), 24 March, 1873. On 10 Dec. 1874, capt. Thomson succeeded capt. Nares, who took command of the new Arctic expedition. The Challenger returned, with valuable collections, 28 May, 1876, after a voyage of above 80,000 miles. The "Voyage" was published by sir C. Wyville Thomson in Dec. 1877. A Norwegian expedition explored the northern seas 16 July–18 Aug. 1877. Extensive deep-sea soundings, especially in the Gulf Stream, have been made in connection with the United States coast survey. These soundings are made with apparatus especially devised for the purpose and, under the supervision of prof. Agassiz and the count de Pourtales, they have been made to contribute largely to scientific knowledge concerning ocean deposits and the deep-sea fauna. The voyage of the coast-survey vessel Hussler, in 1871, with Agassiz and other scientific men on board, was very rich in scientific results.

Deer are mentioned in a will of one Athelstan, dated 1045. Professor Owen thinks that fallow-deer are not native, but were introduced here at an early period. There are now in England 384 deer-parks, the oldest being probably lord Abergavenny's at Eridge, Sussex. See Evelyn Shirley's "Account of Deer-parks," July, 1867. 1658 deer in the royal parks, 1873.

"Deerhound," an English yacht, while conveying arms to the Carlists, seized by the Spanish government vessel Buenaventura, off Biarritz, and captain and crew imprisoned, 13 Aug. released about 18 Sept. 1873. Rescued capt. Semmes and part of his crew from the Alabama after her capture by the Kearsarge, 19 June, 1864.

Defamation is punishable by fine and imprisonment by statute of 1843. The jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts on this subject was abolished by 18 and 19 Vict. c. 41 (1855).

Defence Act, a complete conscription act, authorizing a levy en masse, 1803, was unsuccessful; new measures were taken in 1807–8. The Defence of the Realm Act passed 28 Aug. 1860, in consequence of the unsettled state of Europe, and the doubtful policy of the emperor Napoleon; see Fortification and Colonies.

"Defence Government" in France, formed on 4 Sept. 1870, when the emperor was deposed and a republic proclaimed, gen. Trochu president; it included Gambetta, Simon, etc. It resigned after Paris had capitulated, 5, 6 Feb. 1871; see France.

Defender of the Faith (Fidei Defensor), a title of the British sovereign, conferred by Leo X. on Henry VIII. of England, 11 Oct. 1521, for the tract against Luther on behalf of the Church of Rome (then accounted Dominicum fidei Catholica).

Defenders, a faction in Ireland which arose out of a quarrel between two residents of Market-hill, 4 July, 1784. Each was soon aided by a large body of friends, and many battles ensued. On Whit-Monday 1785, an armed assemblage of one of the parties (700 men), called the Nappagh Fleet, prepared to encounter the Brown Fleet, but the engagement was prevented. They subsequently became religious parties—Catholic and Presbyterian—distinguished as Defenders and Peep-o'-day Boys; the latter were so named because they usually visited the dwellings of the Defenders at daybreak in search of arms; see Diamond.

Degrees. Eratosthenes attempted to determine the length of a geographical degree about 250 B.C.; see Geodesy, Latitude, and Longitude. Collegiate degrees are coeval with universities. Masters and doctors existed, 826. Those in law are traced up to 1149; in medicine, to 1384; in music, to 1463. Middle-class examinations for degrees were instituted at Oxford, 18 June, 1857; at Cambridge, 24 Nov. 1857; and girls were allowed to compete for degrees, Oct. 1863. Bill to enable Scotch universities to grant degrees to women rejected by the commons, 3 March, 1876; see Women.

Dei Gratia, see Grace of God.

Deira, a part of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Northumbria; see Britain, p. 113.

Deism, THEISM, or MONOTHEISM (Latin, deus; Greek, θεός, God), the belief in one God, in opposition to polytheism and to the doctrine of the Trinity. About the middle of the sixteenth century some gentlemen of France and Italy termed themselves deists, to disguise their opposition to Christianity by a more honorable appellation than that of Atheism (which see). The most distinguished deists were Herbert, baron of Cherbury, in 1624; Hobbes, Tindal, Morgan, lord Bolingbroke, Gibbon, Hume, Holcroft, Paine, and Godwin.

A high-caste Brahmin, Rammohun Roy, founded a Brahmin monotheistic church, about 1830
The "Progressive Brahmins," termed the Brahmo Samaj, or theistic church of India, opened a place of worship at Calcutta, 24 Aug. 1869
Their leader, Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, was received at a public meeting in London as a reformer, 12 April, and subsequently preached in a Unitarian chapel, Finsbury, London 1870
Schism in his church; new church formed, 1880
(See Unitarians and Voysey.)

Delagoa Bay (S.E. Africa), claimed by Great Britain and Portugal. Having been referred to arbitration, it was awarded to Portugal by marshal MacMahon, Aug. 1875.

Delaware, one of the United States of North America, named after lord De la Warre, governor of Virginia, who entered the bay 1610. It was settled by Swedes, sent there by Gustavus in 1627; acquired by the Dutch, 1655; ceded to the English, 1664.

Delegates, COURT OF. Appeals to the pope in ecclesiastical causes having been forbidden (see Appeals), such causes were for the future to be heard in this court, established by Henry VIII., 1533.—Stow. This court was abolished in 1832, and appeals now lie to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, according to 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41 (1833); and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38 (1843); see Archæ.

Delft (S. Holland), a town founded by Godfrey le Bossu about 1074; famous for "Delft earthenware;" first manufactured here about 1310. The sale of delft greatly declined after the introduction of potteries into Germany and England. Grotius was born here, 10 April, 1583; and here William, the great prince of Orange, was assassinated by Gerard, 10 July, 1584.

Delhi, the once great capital of the Mogul empire, and chief seat of the Mahometan power in India; it was taken by Timour in 1398. It is now in decay, but contained a million of inhabitants in 1700. In 1739, when Nadir Shah invaded Hindostan, he entered Delhi; 100,000 of the inhabitants perished by the sword, and plunder to the amount of 62,000,000*l.* sterling is said to have been collected. Similar calamities were endured in 1761, on the invasion of Abdalla, king of Candahar. In 1803, the Mahrattas, aided by the French, took Delhi; but were defeated by gen. Lake, 11 Sept., and the aged Shah Aulum, emperor of Hindostan, was restored to his throne with a pension; see India, 1803. On 10 May, 1857, a mutiny arose in the sepoy regiments at Meerut. It was soon checked; but the fugitives fled to Delhi on 11 May, and, combined with other troops here, seized the city, proclaimed a descendant of the Mogul king, and committed frightful atrocities. The rebels were anxious to possess the chief magazine; but, after a gallant defence, it was exploded by order of lieut. Willoughby, who died of his wounds shortly after. The other heroes of this exploit were lieutenants Forrest and Rayner, and the gunners Buckley and Scully. Delhi was shortly after besieged by the British, but was not taken till 20 Sept. following. The final struggle began on the 14th, brigadier (since sir) R. Archdale Wilson being the commander. Much heroism was shown; the gallant death of Salkeld at the explosion of the Cashmere gate created much enthusiasm. The old king and his sons were captured soon after: the latter were shot, and the former, after a trial, was sent for life to Rangoon, where he died 11 Nov. 1862; see India, 1857. A camp formed at Delhi by the earl of Mayo, the viceroy, Dec. 1871, was visited by the king of Siam, Jan. 1872. The prince of Wales visited Delhi, 11 Jan. 1876. Queen Victoria was proclaimed empress of India here with much magnificence, many Indian princes being present, 1 Jan. 1877.

"Delicate Investigation" into the conduct of the princess of Wales (afterwards queen of England, as consort of George IV.) was commenced by a committee of the privy council, under a warrant of inquiry, dated 29 May, 1806. The members were lord Grenville, lord Erskine, earl Spencer, and lord Ellenborough. The inquiry, of which the countess of Jersey, sir J. and lady Douglas, and other persons of rank were the prompters, led to the publication called "The Book;" afterwards suppressed. The charges against the princess were disproved in 1807 and in 1813; but, not being permitted to appear at court, she went on the continent in 1814; see Queen Caroline.

Delium, Boeotia, N. Greece, the site of a celebrated temple of Apollo. Here, in a conflict between the Athenians and the Boeotians, in which the former were defeated, Socrates the philosopher is said to have saved the life of his pupil Xenophon, 424 B.C.

Della Crusca Academy of Florence merged into the Florentine in 1582.—The DELLA CRUSCA SCHOOL, a term applied to some English residents at Florence, who printed inferior sentimental poetry and prose in 1785. They came to England, where their works, popular for a short time, were severely satirized by Gifford in his "Baviad" and "Mæviad" (1792-5).

Delos, a Greek isle in the Ægean sea. Here the Greeks, during the Persian war, 477 B.C., established their common treasury, which was removed to Athens, 461.

Delphi (N. Greece), celebrated for its enigmatical oracles delivered by the Pythia, or priestess in the temple of Apollo, which was built, some say, by the council of the Amphictyons, 1263 B.C. The Pythian games were first celebrated here 586 B.C. The temple was burned by the Pisistratidæ, 548 B.C. A new temple was raised by the Alcæmonidæ. The Persians (480 B.C.) and the Gauls (279 B.C.) were deterred from plundering the temple by awful portents. It was, however, robbed and seized by the Phocians 357 B.C., which led to the Sacred War, and Nero carried from it 300 costly statues, A.D. 67. The oracle was consulted by Julian, but silenced by Theodosius.

Delphin Classics, a collection of thirty-nine Latin authors in sixty volumes, made for the use of the dauphin (in usum Delphini), son of Louis XIV., and published in 1674-91. Ausonius was added in 1730. The duc de Montausier, the young prince's governor, proposed the plan to Huët, bishop of Avranches, the dauphin's preceptor; and he, with other learned persons, including Madame Dacier,* edited all the Latin classics except Lucan. Each author is illustrated by notes and an index of words. An edition of the Delphin classics, with additional notes, etc., was published by Mr. Valpy of London, 1818 et seq.

Deluge. The Deluge was threatened in the year of the world 1536; and began 7 Dec. 1656, and continued 377 days (Gen. vi., vii., and viii.). The ark rested on Mount Ararat 6 May, 1657; and Noah left the ark 18 Dec. following. The year corresponds with that of 2348 B.C.—Blair. The following are the epochs of the Deluge, according to Dr. Hales:

Septuagint	B.C. 3246	Clinton	B.C. 2482
Jackson	3170	Playfair	2352
Hales	3155	Usher and Eng. Bible ..	2348
Josephus	3146	Marsham	2344
Persian	3103	Petavius	2320
Hindoo	3102	Strauchius	2293
Samaritan	2998	Hebrew	2286
Howard	2698	Vulgar Jewish	2104

In the reign of Oggyes, king of Attica, 1764 B.C., a deluge so inundated Attica that it lay waste for nearly 200 years.—Blair. Buffon thinks that the Hebrew and Grecian deluges were the same, and arose from the Atlantic and Bosphorus bursting into the valley of the Mediterranean.

The deluge of Deucalion, in Thessaly, is placed 1503 B.C. according to Eusebius. It was often confounded by the ancients with the general flood; but considered to be merely a local inundation, occasioned by the overflowing of the river Peneius, whose course was stopped by an earthquake between the mounts Olympus and Ossa. Deucalion, who then reigned in Thessaly, with his wife Pyrrha, and some of their subjects, are stated to have saved themselves by climbing up Mount Parnassus.

A general deluge was predicted to occur in 1524, and arks were built; but the season happened to be a fine and dry one.

* This beautiful and gifted woman translated Callimachus at the age of 23; and also Anacreon, Sappho, Plautus, Terence, and Homer. She died in 1720.

Demerara and Essequibo, colonies in British Guiana, South America, founded by the Dutch, 1580, were taken by the British, under major-gen. Whyte, 22 April, 1796, but were restored at the peace of Amiens, March, 1802. They again surrendered to the British under gen. Grinfield and commodore Hood, Sept. 1803, and became English colonies in 1814. John Scott was appointed governor, 31 Dec. 1868; James R. Longden, 1874; Cornelius Hendrickson Kortright, 1877.

Democratic Federals, a political party, proposed by Mr. Joseph Cowan, M.P. for Newcastle, opposed to the policy of the government of Mr. Gladstone, 5 April, 1881.

Democrats, advocates for government by the people themselves (δημος, people, and κρατιν, to govern), a term adopted by the French republicans in 1790 (who termed their opponents aristocrats, from ἀριστος, bravest or best). The name Democrat was adopted by one of the two great political parties in the United States before the present and recent questions entered into politics. The Democrats in early days advocated free trade and opposed national appropriations for internal improvements, a national bank, etc. Their opponents were called Whigs until 1853-55, when the Native American, or Know-nothing, party arose. In 1856 the various parties in opposition to the Democrats were merged into the Republican party. The Republicans opposed and the Democrats favored the extension of slavery. With the election of Mr. Lincoln as president, 4 Nov. 1860, the Republicans came into control of the national government, which they have held ever since. The elections of 1874 and 1875 gave the Democrats a majority in congress, but in 1881 they became again a minority party in both houses.

Denain (N. France). Here marshal Villars defeated the Imperialists, 24 July, 1712.

Denarius, the chief silver coin among the Romans, weighing the seventh part of a Roman ounce, and value 7½d. sterling, first coined about 269 B.C., when it exchanged for ten asses; see As. In 216 B.C. it exchanged for sixteen asses. A pound weight of silver was coined into 100 denarii.—Digby. A pound weight of gold was coined into twenty denarii aurei in 206 B.C.; and in Nero's time into forty-five denarii aurei.—Lemprière.

Denham Murders, see Trials, 1870.

Denis, St., an ancient town of France, near Paris, famous for its abbey and church; the former abolished at the Revolution, the latter the place of sepulture of the French kings, from its foundation by Dagobert, about 630; the remains of the saint Denis were placed there in 636. On 6, 7, 8 Aug. 1793, the republicans demolished most of the royal tombs, and in Oct. following the bodies were taken from coffins and cast into a pit; the lead was melted, and the gold and jewels taken to Paris. By a decree of Bonaparte, dated 20 Feb. 1806, the church (which had been turned into a cattle-market) was ordered to be cleansed out and redecored as "the future burial-place of the emperors of France." On the return of the Bourbons, more restorations were effected, and the duc de Berri and Louis XVIII. were buried here. The damage sustained in the war of 1870-1 has been well repaired.

Denison's Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 34) provides "for the education of the children of persons in receipt of out-door relief;" passed 26 June, 1855.

Denman's Act, LORD, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85 (1843), relates to juries and witnesses.

Denmark (N. Europe). The most ancient inhabitants were Cimbric and Teutonic, who were driven out by the Jutes or Goths. The Teutones settled in Germany and Gaul; the Cimbrians invaded Italy, where they were defeated by Marius. The peninsula of Jutland obtained its name from the Jutes; and the name of Denmark is supposed to be derived from Dan, the founder of the Danish monarchy, and mark, a German word signifying country. For their numerous invasions of Britain, etc., see Danes. Population of the kingdom of Denmark in 1860, 1,600,551; of the duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg, 1,004,473; of the colonies, 120,283. By the treaty of peace, signed 30 Oct. 1864, the duchies were taken from Denmark; Schleswig and Holstein were to be made independent, and Lauenburg was to be incorporated, by its desire, with Prussia. For the result, see Gastein and Prussia, 1866. Population of the monarchy, 1870, 1,784,741; 1876, 1,903,000; 1880, 1,969,454; of the colonies, 1860, 127,401; 1876, 129,000; 1880, 130,350.

"Deserted Village," a poem, by Dr. Oliver Goldsmith, first published May, 1770.

Design, SCHOOLS OF, established by government, began at Somerset House, London, 1 Jan. 1837. In 1852 the head school was removed to Marlborough House, and became eventually "the department of science and art," transferred to South Kensington in 1857. It is under the direction of the committee of council on education; see Copyright.

Despard's Conspiracy. Colonel Edward Marcus Despard (a native of Ireland), Broughton, Francis, Graham, Macnamara, Wood, and Wratten conspired to kill the king and establish a republic on the day of opening parliament, 16 Nov. 1802. Above thirty persons, including soldiers, were taken in custody; of those tried, 20 Jan. 1803, Despard and six others were executed, 21 Feb. He had been a distinguished officer under Nelson.

Destitute Children's Dinner Society, established in 1867, to give weekly meat dinners. 16,822 dinners given in 1869; 147,858 dinners in 58 dining-rooms in 1870; 114,000 dinners in 42 dining-rooms, year 1876-7; 170,000 dinners in 49 rooms, 1878-9.

Detroit (North America), the oldest city in the West, was built by the French about 1670.

Dettingen (Bavaria), BATTLE OF, 16 (or 27 o. s.) June, 1743, between the British, Hanoverian, and Hessian army (52,000), commanded by king George II. of England and the earl of Stair, and the French army (60,000), under marshal Noailles and the duc de Grammont. The French passed a defile, which they should have merely guarded. The duc de Grammont, with his cavalry, charged the British foot with great fury, but was received with such intrepidity that he was obliged to give way and to repass the Maine, losing 3000 men. Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum" first performed 27 Nov. 1743.

Development (or EVOLUTION). Wolff put forth a theory of epigenesis in 1759; Lamarck, the naturalist, in 1809, propounded a theory that all animals had been developed from "monads," living minute particles; see Species and Vestiges. Buffon held a similar doctrine.

In 1827 Ernst von Baer of Königsberg demonstrated that all mammals are developed from a minute egg not a hundredth of an inch in diameter. Mr. C. Darwin's views are given in his "Origin of Species," 1859; and "Descent of Man," 1871. He supposes that man was gradually evolved from the lowest created form of animal life. Haeckel, his most advanced follower, published in German a "History of Creation," 1873; a translation in English, 1875. Mr. Alfred Wallace published his work on Natural Selection in 1870; see Evolution.

The theory of the development of living beings out of the substance of the earth was put forth by Lucretius in his "De Rerum Natura," about 57 B.C.

"We cannot teach, we cannot pronounce it to be a conquest of science, that man descends from the ape or from any other animal. We can only indicate it as a hypothesis."—Professor Virchow, 1877.

"The primitive monads were born by spontaneous generation in the sea."—Professor Haeckel, 1878.

Devil-worship. Devil—Greek, δαίμων, false accuser; Hebrew, satan, an adversary; abaddon, destroyer, etc. The worship of devils is frequently mentioned in the Bible (Lev. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xi. 15; 1 Cor. x. 20; Rev. ix. 20, etc.). Mr. Layard describes the Yezidees as recognizing one supreme being, yet reverencing the devil as a king or mighty angel, to be conciliated (1841).

Mr. Moncreux Conway's "Demonology and Devil-lore" first published, Dec. 1878.

Devizes, Wilts; at Roundway Down, near here, sir William Waller and the parliamentarians were defeated, 13 July, 1643.

Devonport, see Dockyards and Plymouth.

Devonshire, the country of the Damnonii, or Dumnonii. Odun, earl of Devon, in 878 defeated the Danes, slew Ubbo, or Hubba, their chief, and captured his magic standard. A bishopric of Devonshire was founded in 909; see Exeter.

Richard de Redvers, first earl of Devon, son of Baldwin, sheriff of Devonshire, died 1137.

William Courtenay, the present earl, is descended from Robert de Courtenay and Mary de Redvers, daughter of William de Redvers, earl of Devon, in 1184.

William Cavendish, created first earl of Devonshire, 1618.

William Cavendish (his great-grandson), created first duke of Devonshire, 1694; from him is descended William Cavendish, the present duke (1881).

Devonshire and Pitt Administration, formed 16 Nov. 1756; dismissed 5 April, 1757.

First lord of the treasury, William, duke of Devonshire.

Chancellor of the exchequer, hon. Henry Bilson Legge.

Lord president, earl Granville (lord Cartaret).

Privy seal, earl Gower.

Secretaries of state, earl of Holderness and William Pitt (afterwards earl of Chatham, the virtual premier).

George Grenville, earl of Halifax, duke of Rutland and Grafton, earl of Rochfort, viscount Barrington, etc. The great seal in commission.

"Devout Life." "Introduction à la Vie Dévote," written by St. François de Sales, and published 1608. He was born 21 Aug. 1567; bishop of Geneva, 1602; died 28 Dec. 1622.

Dew, the modern theory respecting it was put forth by Dr. Wells in his book, 1814.

Dewangiri, see India, 1865.

Diadem, the band or fillet worn by the ancients instead of the crown, and consecrated to the gods. At first it was made of silk or wool, set with precious stones, and was tied round the temples and forehead, the two ends being knotted behind, and let fall on the neck. Aurelian was the first Roman emperor who wore a diadem, 272.—Tillemont.

Dialectical Society, LONDON, for the philosophical consideration of all subjects, with a view to the discovery and elucidation of truth, was established in 1865. The report of their committee on spiritualism was published in Nov. 1871.

Dials. "The sun-dial of Ahaz," 713 B.C. (Isa. xxxviii. 8). A dial invented by Anaximander, 550 B.C.

—Pliny. The first dial of the sun seen at Rome was placed on the temple of Quirinus by L. Papirius Cursor, when time was divided into hours, 298 B.C.—Blair. Dials set up in churches about A.D. 618.—Lenglet. Mrs. Alfred Gatty's "Book of Sun-dials" was published in 1872.

Dialysis, an important method of chemical analysis, depending on the different degrees of diffusibility of substances in liquids, was made known in 1861, by its discoverer, professor Thomas Graham, then master of the mint.

Diamagnetism, the property possessed by nearly all bodies of behaving differently to iron when placed between two magnets. The phenomena, previously little known, were reduced to a law by Faraday in 1845, and confirmed by Tyndall and others.

Diamond, a hamlet, Armagh, N. Ireland, where was fought the "battle of the Diamond," 21 Sept. 1795, between the "Peep-o'-day Boys" and the "Defenders," and many of the latter were killed. To commemorate this conflict the first Orange lodge was formed immediately after; see Defenders.

Diamonds were first brought to Europe from the East, where the mine of Sumbulpoor was the first known, and where the mines of Golconda, the realm of diamonds, were discovered in 1594. The mines of Brazil were discovered in 1728. From these last a diamond weighing 1680 carats, or fourteen ounces, was sent to the court of Portugal, and was valued by Mr. Romeo de l'Isle at 224 millions; by others at 56 millions and at 3½ millions; its true value (not being brilliant) was 400,000*l*.

The great Russian diamond weighed 193 carats, or 1 oz. 12 dwts. 4 gr. troy. The empress Catherine II. offered for it 104,160*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., besides an annuity for life to the owner, of 1041*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., which was refused; but it was afterwards sold to Catherine's favorite, count Orloff, for the first-mentioned sum, without the annuity, and was by him presented to the empress on her birthday, 1772; it is now in the sceptre of Russia.

The Pitt diamond weighed 136 carats, and, after cutting, 108 carats: it was sold to the king of France for 125,000*l*. in 1720.

The Pitt diamond (bought by Mr. Pitt, grandfather of William Pitt) was sold for 9500 guineas, 10 May, 1802.

The diamond called the KOHINOOR, or MOUNTAIN OF LIGHT, was found in the mines of Golconda, in 1650, and is said to have belonged in turn to Shah Jehan, Aurungzebe, Nadir Shah, the Afghan rulers, and afterwards to the Sikh chief Runjeet Singh. Upon the abdication of Duplee Singh, the last ruler of the Punjab, and the annexation of his dominions to the British empire, in 1849, the Kohinoor was surrendered to the queen. It was accordingly brought over and presented to her, 3 July, 1850. It was shown in the Great Exhibition, 1851. Its original weight was nearly 400 carats, but it was reduced by the unskilfulness of the art, at Hortensio Borghese, a Venetian, to 279 carats. Its shape and size resembled the pointed half (rose cut) of a small hen's egg. The value is scarcely computable, though two millions sterling have been mentioned as a justifiable price, if calculated by the scale employed in the trade. This diamond was recut in 1862, and now weighs 102½ carats.

The SANCY diamond, which belonged to Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, was bought by sir C. Jejeebhoy from the Demidoff family for 20,000*l*. in Feb. 1865.

A diamond, termed the STAR OF THE SOUTH, was brought from Brazil in 1855, weighing 254½ carats, half of which was lost by cutting.

Diamonds were discovered in Cape Colony, S. Africa, in March, 1867. A fine one, termed the "Star of South Africa," brought to England in 1869, was purchased by Messrs. Hunt and Roskill. After cutting, it weighed 46½ carats, and was valued at 25,000*l*. in June, 1870.

Rich diamond-fields recently discovered near the Vaal and Orange rivers, Sept. 1870.

Great influx of diggers, and many fine diamonds found, Nov. Value of 141 diamonds found in 1869, 7403*l*.; of 5661 found in 1870, 124,910*l*.; about 2,000,000*l*. said to have been exported in 1877.

DIAMOND-NECKLACE AFFAIR.—In 1785, Bohmer, the court jeweller of France, offered the queen, Marie Antoinette, a diamond necklace for 66,000*l*. The queen desired the necklace, but feared the expense. The countess de la Motte (of the ancient house of Valois) forged the queen's signature, and, by pretending that the queen had an attachment for him, persuaded the cardinal de Rohan, the queen's almoner, to conclude a bargain with the jeweller for the necklace for 66,000*l*. De la Motte thus obtained the necklace and made away with it. For this she was tried in 1786, and sentenced to be branded on the shoulders and imprisoned for life. She accused in vain the celebrated Italian adventurer Cagliostro of complicity in the affair, he being then intimate with the cardinal. She made her escape and came to London, where she was killed by falling from a window-sill, in attempting to escape an arrest for debt.—De Rohan was tried and acquitted, 14 April, 1786. The public in France at that time suspected the queen of being a party to the fraud. Talleyrand wrote at the time, that he should not be surprised if this miserable affair overturned the throne.

Diamond Robbery; see Trials, 1871.

Diamonds valued at 50,000*l.* stolen from the post-office at Cape Town about 20 March, 1880.

Artificial Diamonds: those prepared by Mr. MacTear of Glasgow examined by Mr. Story Maskelyne, and declared not to be diamonds, 30 Dec. 1879; acknowledged by Mr. MacTear, Jan. 1880.

Diamonds said to have been made by J. Ballantine Hannay at Glasgow, announced in Times, 20 Feb. 1880.

Diamonds said to have been made at Paris, 1880.

INFLAMMABILITY OF DIAMONDS.

Boetius de Boot conjectured that the diamond was inflammable, 1609. When exposed to a high temperature it gave an acrid vapor, in which a part of it was dissipated, 1673.—Boyle. Sir Isaac Newton concluded, from its great refracting power, that it must be combustible, 1675.

Averani demonstrated, by concentrating the rays of the sun upon it, that the diamond was exhaled in vapor, and entirely disappeared, while other precious stones merely grow softer, 1695.

It has been ascertained by Guyton, Davy, and others, that diamonds contain nothing but pure charcoal, or carbon. Diamonds were charred by the intense heat of the voltaic battery—by M. Dumas, in Paris, and by prof. Faraday, in London, in 1848.

Diana, TEMPLE OF (at Ephesus), accounted one of the seven wonders of the world, was built at the common charge of all the Asiatic states, 552 B.C.; the chief architect being Ctesiphon. Pliny says that 220 years were occupied in completing it. It was 425 feet long, 225 broad, and was supported by 127 columns (60 feet high, each weighing 150 tons) of Parian marble, furnished by so many kings. It was set on fire, on the night of the birth of Alexander the Great, by Herostratus or Eratosthenes, who confessed that his sole motive was the desire of transmitting his name to future ages, 356 B.C. The temple was rebuilt, but again burned by the Goths in their naval invasion, A.D. 256 or 262. In April, 1869, Mr. J. T. Wood discovered the site of the second temple; and since then sculptured marble columns have been removed to the British Museum. Diana was the Roman name of the Greek Artemis.

Dice. The invention of dice is ascribed to Palamedes, of Greece, about 1244 B.C. The game of tali and tessera among the Romans was played with dice. Stow mentions two entertainments given by the city of London, at which dice were played. Act to regulate the licenses of makers, and the sale of dice, 9 Geo. IV. 1828.

In 1357, the kings of Scotland and France being prisoners, and the king of Cyprus on a visit to Edward III., a great tournament was held in Smithfield, and afterwards Henry Picard, mayor of London, "kept his hall against all comers that were willing to play at dice and hazard. The lady Margaret, his wife, did keepe her chamber to the same intent." The mayor restored to the king of Cyprus 50 marks which he had won from him, saying, "My lord and king, be not aggrieved; for I covet not your gold, but your play," etc.—Stow.

Dichroscope, an optical apparatus, described by the inventor, prof. Dove of Berlin, in 1860, who intended it to represent interferences, spectra in colored lights, polarization of light, etc.

Dictators were supreme and absolute magistrates of Rome, appointed to act in critical times. Titus Lartius Flavius, the first dictator, was appointed 501 B.C. Caius Marcus Rutilius was the first plebeian dictator, 356 B.C. This office became odious by the usurpations of Sylla and Julius Cæsar; and after the death of the latter the Roman senate, on the motion of the consul Antony, passed a law forbidding a dictator to exist in Rome, 44 B.C.

Dictionary. A standard dictionary of the Chinese language, containing about 40,000 characters, most of them hieroglyphic, or rude representations, somewhat like our signs of the zodiac, was perfected by Pa-out-she, who lived about 1100 B.C.—Morrison. See Encyclopædiaz, Musie, etc.

Didymium, a rare metal, discovered by Mosander in 1841. It appears to be always associated with lanthanum and cerium.

Dieppe (N. France). This town was bombarded by an English fleet, under admiral Russell, and laid in ashes, July, 1694. It was again bombarded in 1794; and again, together with the town of Granville, by the British, 14 Sept. 1803.

"Dies Iræ" ("Day of Wrath"), a Latin mediæval hymn on the day of judgment, is ascribed to various authors, among others to pope Gregory the Great (died about 604); St. Bernard (died 1153); but is generally considered to have been composed by Thomas of Celano (died 1255), and to have been used in the Roman service of the mass before 1385.

Diet of the GERMAN EMPIRE (in which the supreme court of authority of the empire may be said to have existed) was composed of three colleges: one of electors, one of princes, and one of imperial towns, and commenced with the edict of Charles IV. 1356; see Golden Bull; Würzburg (1180); Nuremberg (1467); Worms (1521); Spire (1529); Augsburg (1530); Ratibon (1541); Frankfurt (1806 et seq.); and Germany.

Dietherscope, an apparatus for geodesy and teaching optica, constructed by G. Luvini, of Tunis, and announced April, 1876.

Dieu et mon droit ("God and my right"), the royal motto of England, was the parole of the day, given by Richard I. of England to his army at the battle of Gisors, in France, 20 Sept. 1198, when the French army was signally defeated. "Dieu et mon droit" appears to have been first assumed as a motto by Henry VI. (1422-61); see Semper Eadem.

"Dieu-donné," the name given in his infancy to Louis le Grand, king of France, the queen, his mother, having been barren for twenty-three years previously, 1638. Also to the present comte de Chambord, son of the duchess of Berri, born 29 Sept. 1820. His father was assassinated 14 Feb. 1820. One of the popes (672) was named Adodatus, or God's gift.

Differential Engine, see Calculating Machine.

Diffusion of Gases. In 1825, Döbereiner observed the transmission of hydrogen gas through a crack in a glass vessel, and prof. Thomas Graham discovered the passage of gases through porous porcelain, graphite, and other substances, and established laws in 1832, and to him we are indebted for the discovery of Atmolytic and Dialysis. He died 16 Sept. 1869.

Diffusion of Useful Knowledge Society, which published a number of books relating to history, science, and literature, and an atlas, in a cheap form, ridiculed as the "Sixpenny Sciences," was established by Lord Brougham, Mr. William Tooke, Mr. Charles Knight, and others. It published its "Library" 1827-48, and patronized the publication of the Penny Magazine and the Penny Cyclopædia. Its proceedings were suspended in 1846. The Royal Institution of Great Britain was established in 1799, for "the Promotion, Diffusion, and Extension of Science and Useful Knowledge."

Digest. The first collection of Roman laws under this title was prepared by Alfenus Varus, the civilian, of Cremona, 66 A.C.—Quintil. The "Digest," so called by way of eminence, was the collection made by order of the emperor Justinian, 529: it made the first part of the Roman law and the first volume of the civil law. Quotations from it are marked with a ff.—Pardon. The "Digest of Law" commissioners signed their first report 13 May, 1867, recommending the immediate preparation of a digest of the English common-law, statute law, and judicial decisions.

Digits, any whole number under 10: 1, 2, etc., are the nine digits. Arithmetical figures were known to the Arabian Moors about 900, and were introduced by them into Spain in 1050, and thence into England about 1253. In astronomy, the digit is a measure used in the calculation of eclipses, and is the twelfth part of the luminary eclipsed; see Figures.

Dijon (E. France), the ancient capital of Burgundy, is said to have been founded by Julius Cæsar, fortified by the emperor Marcus Aurelius, and named Dirio, about 274. It has been several times captured in war; and a castle was erected here by Louis XI. Dijon became the capital of the dukes of Burgundy about 1180. It was attacked by the Germans, under gen. Beyer, 30 Oct. 1870. The heights and suburbs were taken by prince William of Baden, and the town surrendered on 31 Oct.

Dilapidations, see Ecclesiastical.

Dilettanti Society of, established in 1734 by the viscount Harcourt, lord Middlesex, duke of Dorset, and others who had travelled and who were desirous of encouraging a taste for the fine arts in Great Britain. The society published, or aided in publishing, Stuart's "Athena" (1762-1816), Chandler's "Travels" (1775-6), and several other finely illustrated works. The members dine together from time to time at the Thatched-house tavern, St. James's. Mr. R. P. Pullan, on behalf of this society, excavated the temple of Bacchus at Teos, of Apollo Smintheus in the Troad, and of Minerva Polias at Priene, between 1861-70. Published "Antiquities of Ionia," 4 parts, 1769-1881.

Diocese. The first division of the Roman empire into dioceses, at that period civil governments, is ascribed to Constantine, 323; but Strabo remarks that the Romans had the departments called dioceses long before. In England the principal dioceses are coeval with the establishment of Christianity; of 28 dioceses, 20 are suffragan to the diocese of Canterbury, and six to that of York; see Bishops, and the sees severally. Diocesan conferences of the clergy and laity now frequent.

Diocletian Era (called also the era of Martyrs, on account of the persecution in his reign) was used by Christian writers until the introduction of the Christian era in the sixth century, and is still employed by the Abyssinians and Copts. It dates from the day on which Diocletian was proclaimed emperor at Chalcedon, 29 Aug. 284.

Dioptric System (from the Greek διά, through, and οπτήω, I see), an arrangement of lenses for refracting light in light-houses, devised by Fresnel about 1819, based on the discoveries of Buffon, Condorcet, Brewster, and others; see Light-houses.

Diorama. This admired exhibition was first opened by MM. Bouton and Daguerre in Paris, 11 July, 1822; in London, 29 Sept. 1823. It was not successful commercially here, and was sold in 1848. The building in Regent's Park was purchased by sir M. Peto in 1855, to be used as a Baptist chapel.

Diphtheria (from the Greek διφθίρα, leather), a disease resembling croup which has the essential character of developing a false membrane on the mucous membrane connected with the throat. It was named diphtheritis by Brétouneau of Tours in 1820. From its prevalence in Boulogne, it has been termed the Boulogne sore-throat; many persons were affected with it in England at the beginning of 1858. The princess Alice, grand-duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt, died of this disease, 14 Dec. 1878, after nursing her husband and children.

Diplomacy, the art of managing the relations of foreign states by means of ambassadors, envoys, consuls, chargés d'affaires, etc.; see Ambassadors and Consuls. New regulations for the British diplomatic service were issued 5 Sept. 1862.

Diplomas. The wholesale fraudulent sale of diplomas of M.D., etc., for 10*l*., by a Dr. Buchanan, dean of the American University of Philadelphia, and others, was detected in 1880. He attempted escape by a sham suicide, but was captured, prosecuted, and imprisoned.

Diplomatics, the foreign term for the science of palæography or ancient writings. Valuable works on this subject have been compiled by Mabillon (1681), De Vaines (1774), Astle (1781), De Wailly (1838), and other antiquaries.

"Directory for the Public Worship of God" was drawn up at the instance of the parliament by an assembly of divines at Westminster in 1644, after the suppression of the Book of Common Prayer. The general hints given were to be managed with discretion; for the Directory prescribed no form of prayer or manner of external worship, and enjoined the people to make no responses except Amen. It was adopted by the parliament of Scotland in 1645, and many of its regulations are still observed by Presbyterians.

Directory, THE FRENCH, established by the constitution of the 5th of Fructidor, an III. (22 Aug. 1795), and nominated 1 Nov., was composed of five members (MM. Lépiaux, Letourneur, Rewbel, Barras, and Carnot). It ruled in conjunction with two chambers, the Council of Ancients and Council of Five Hundred (which see), at the revolution of the 18th of Brumaire (9 Nov. 1799). It was deposed by Bonaparte, who, with Cambacères and Lebrun, assumed the government as three consuls, himself the first, 13 Dec. 1799; see Consuls.

Directory, the first LONDON, is said to have been printed in 1677. The "Post-office Directory" first appeared in 1800.

"Disciples of Christ" (also called CAMPBELLITES*) profess adherence to pure Scriptural doctrine.

* The term Campbellite originated through their first church at Brush Run, in America, having been set up by a Scotch and practice, reject human creeds and formularies, and admit to their communion all who recognize Christ's obedience and death as "the only meritorious cause of the sinner's acceptance with God;" and are baptized (by immersion) in his name.

Discipline, ecclesiastical, originally conducted spiritually according to the divine commands in Matt. xviii.
15, 1 Cor. v., 2 Thess. iii. 6, and other texts, was gradually changed to a temporal character, as it now appears in the Roman, Greek, and other churches. The "First Book of Discipline" of the Presbyterian church of Scotland was drawn up by John Knox and four ministers in Jan. 1560-1. The more important "Second Book" was prepared with great care in 1578 by Andrew Melville and a committee of the leading members of the general assembly. It lays down a thoroughly Presbyterian form of government, defines the position of the ecclesiastical and civil powers, etc.

Dispensaries, to supply the poor with medical advice and medicines, began in London. The Royal General Dispensary, London, was established in St. Bartholomew's Close in 1770. It relieved about 20,000 persons in 1861; about 17,000 in 1866. Western Dispensary, 1789. Garth's satiric poem, "The Dispensary," published 1699.

Dispensations, ecclesiastical, were first granted by pope Innocent III. in 1200. These exemptions from the discipline of the church, with indulgences, absolutions, etc., led eventually to the Reformation in Germany in 1517.

Dispensing Power OF THE CROWN (for setting aside laws or their power) asserted by some of our sovereigns, especially by Charles II. (in 1672 for the relief of nonconformists), and by James II. in 1786, was abolished by the bill of rights, 1689. It has been on certain occasions exercised, as in the case of embargoes upon ships, the Bank Charter act, etc.; see Indemnity.

Disraeli Administrations.* On the resignation of the earl of Derby through ill-health, 25 Feb.
1868, Mr. Disraeli reconstituted the ministry, 29 Feb.
(see Derby Administrations, III.). As the elections gave a large majority to the liberal party, Mr. Disraeli's ministry resigned 2 Dec. He declined to take office with the then house of commons when Mr. Gladstone resigned, 12 March, 1873, and the latter resumed office.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION, 29 Feb. 1868.

First lord of the treasury, Benjamin Disraeli.

Lord chancellor, Hugh MacCalmont, lord Cairns.

Lord president of the council, John, duke of Marlborough.

Lord privy seal, James, earl of Malmesbury.

Secretaries—home, Gathorne Hardy; foreign, Edward, lord Stanley; colonies, Richard, duke of Buckingham and Chandos; war, sir John S. Pakington; India, sir Stafford Henry Northcote.

Chancellor of the exchequer, George Ward Hunt.

Presbyterian preacher from Ireland, named Thomas Campbell, and his son Alexander. In 1812 they renounced infant baptism, and were rebaptized by immersion. Their number in America is said to be about 600,000; and in the United Kingdom, where the movement began independently and simultaneously, about 5000. They have also churches in the British colonies.

* Benjamin Disraeli (son of Isaac Disraeli, author of the "Curiosities of Literature," etc.), born 21 Dec. 1806; published "Vivian Grey," 1825; M.P. for Maidstone, 1837-41; Shrewsbury, 1841-7; Bucks, 1847-56. Chancellor of exchequer (see Derby administrations), Feb. 1852; Feb. 1858;
July, 1866; installed lord rector of Glasgow university, 19
Nov. 1873; created earl of Beaconsfield, Aug. 1876; plenipo-tentiary at the Berlin Congress, 13 June-13 July, 1878; K.G. invested by the queen, 22 July, 1878; received freedom of London, 3 Aug. 1878 ("at the pinnacle of ministerial renown;
the favorite of his sovereign, and the idol of society."—Times, 8 Aug. 1878); see People's Tribune; resigned (through liberal majority in elections), 22 April, 1880; published "Endymion," Dec. 1880; died 19 April, 1881; buried at Hughenden; prince of Wales and many present, 26 April; monument in Westminster abbey voted, 9 May, 1881. Mrs. Disraeli created viscountess Beaconsfield, 28 Nov. 1868; died 15 Dec. 1872.

First lord of admiralty, Henry Thomas I. Corry.

Chief commissioner of works, lord John Manners.

President of board of trade, Charles Henry, duke of Richmond.
Chief secretary for Ireland, Richard, earl of Mayo; made viceroy of India, Oct.; succeeded by col. J. Wilson Patten, 7

Lord great chamberlain, Orlando, earl of Bradford.

Chancellor of duchy of Lancaster, col. John Wilson Patten; succeeded by col. Thos. E. Taylor, 7 Nov. 1868.

Lord lieutenant of Ireland, James, earl (afterwards marquis) of Abercorn.

MR. DISRAELI'S LETTER of 30 Oct. 1873, to lord Grey de Wilton, severely censuring the Gladstone ministry as having "harassed every trade, worried every profession, and assailed or menaced every class, institution, and species of property in the country;" and also stating that the country has "made up its mind to close this career of plundering and blundering"—was published 7 Oct. 1873; see Gladstone Administration.

SECOND ADMINISTRATION, received seals 21 Feb. 1874.

First lord of the treasury, Benjamin Disraeli (earl of Beaconsfield, 16 Aug. 1876); and lord privy seal, Aug. 1876 to Jan.
1878.

Lord chancellor, Hugh, lord Cairns.

Lord president of the council, Charles Henry, duke of Richmond.

Lord privy seal, James, earl of Malmesbury; resigned, 12 Aug.
1876; earl of Beaconsfield, Aug. 1876; Algernon, duke of Northumberland, 4 Feb. 1878.

Secretary of state for foreign affairs, Edward, earl of Derby; resigned; Robert, marquis of Salisbury, 28 March, 1878.

Secretary of state for India, Robert, marquis of Salisbury;

Gathorne Hardy, created viscount Cranbrook, 2 April, 1878.

Secretary of state for the colonies, Henry, earl of Carnarvon; don; lord George Hamilton, April, 1878.

Chancellor of duchy of Lancaster, col. Thos. E. Taylor.

Commissioner of woods and forests, lord Henry Lennox, resigned July, 1876; Gerard James Noel, 14 Aug. 1876.

Dissection, see Anatomy.

Dissenters, the modern name of the Puritans and Nonconformists (which see). In 1851, in London, the number of chapels, meeting-houses, etc., for all classes of dissenters amounted to more than 554. (The church of England had 458; Roman Catholics, 35.) The great act (9 Geo. IV. c. 17) for the relief of dissenters from civil and religious disabilities was passed 9 May, 1828.
By this act, called the Corporation and Test Repeal act, so much of the several acts of preceding reigns as imposed the necessity of receiving the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a qualification for certain offices, etc., was repealed. By 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 85 (1836), dissenters acquired the right of solemnizing marriages at their own chapels, or at a registry office; see Worship.

A burials bill to permit the ministers of dissenters to officiate at funerals in churchyards several times rejected; in the commons 248 to 234, 21 April, 1875; 279 to 248, 3 March, 1876; earl Granville's resolution in the lords rejected, 148 to 92, 15 May, 1876.

Lord Harrowby's additional clause to the government burials bill (permitting dissenters to have religious services in churchyards), was supported by the archbishops, and carried against government (127-111), 18 June; the bill withdrawn, 26 June, 1877.

Mr. Osborne Morgan's resolution for reforming burial laws
(i. e., permitting other services), rejected (242-227), 15 Feb.
1878.

Act to amend the burial laws, permitting dissenters to have their own service or no service in churchyards; passed commons (258-79), 13 Aug.; royal assent, 7 Sept. 1880.

The Rev. W. H. Fremantle having proposed to preach at Dr.
Parker's city temple, and the bishop of London having disapproved, the opinion of two counsel (Messrs. Fitzjames Stephen and Benjamin Shaw) was taken. They declared it to be illegal for the clergy of the English church to take part in worship of dissenters, June, 1876.

Several Episcopal clergymen take part in the dedication services of Christ church (formerly Surrey chapel), Blackfriars, middle of July, 1876.

Dissolving Views. Henry Langdon Childe, the alleged inventor, died 15 Oct. 1874, aged 92.

Distaff (or Rock), the staff to which flax or any substance to be spun is fastened. The art of spinning with it at the small wheel first taught to English women by Anthony Bonavisa, an Italian.—Stow. St. Distaff's or Rock day, was formerly the first free day after the Epiphany (6 Jan.) because the Christmas holidays were over and women's work was resumed.

Distillation, and the various processes dependent on it, are believed to have been introduced into Europe by the Moors, about 1150; see Alcohol, Brandy. The distillation of spirituous liquors was in practice in Great Britain in the sixteenth century.—Burns. The processes were improved by Adam of Montpellier in 1801. M. Payen's work (1861) contains the most recent improvements. An act to prevent the use of stills by unlicensed persons was passed in 1846. 118 licenses to distillers were granted in the year ending 31 March, 1858, for the United Kingdom.

M. Raoul Pictet announces a method of distillation by use of ice made by the air-pump, April, 1881.

District Auditors Act, 42 Vict. c. 6 (28 March, 1879), regulated their appointment, duties, and payment.

District Churches Acts. By the one passed in 1865 certain new churches were constituted rectories, and by another act, passed in 1868 (the Bishop of Oxford's act), the new parishes not rectories were ordered to be styled vicarages.

Ditch, see Expedition.

"Diversions of Furley" ("Epea Pteroenta," flying words) a collection of grammatical treatises by John Horne Tooke, published in 1786, named from the residence at Purley, near Wandsworth, Surrey.

Dividends of PUBLIC STOCKS. By an act passed 11 Aug. 1869, these may be paid by post if the recipients desire it, as railway dividends are.

Divination was forbidden to the Jews, 1451 B.C. (Deut. xviii. 9). It was common among their neighbors, and is described by Ezekiel (xxi. 21) 493 B.C.

Divine Right of Kings, the absolute and unqualified claim of sovereigns to the obedience of their subjects, a doctrine totally foreign to the genius of the English constitution, was defended by many persons of otherwise opposite opinions, e.g., by Hobbes the free-thinker (1642), by Salmasius (1640), by sir Robert Filmer (about 1653), in his "Patriarcha," published in 1690, and by the High Church party generally about 1714; but opposed by Milton (1651), Algernon Sydney, and others.

Diving-Bell (first mentioned, though obscurely, by Aristotle, about 325 B.C.) was used in Europe about A.D. 1509. It is said to have been used on the coast of Mull, in searching for the wreck of part of the Spanish Armada, before 1662. Halley (about 1716) greatly improved this machine, and was, it is said, the first who, by means of a diving-bell, set his foot on the ground at the bottom of the sea. Smeaton made use of the diving-bell in improving Ramsgate harbor, 1779-88. Mr. Spalding and his assistants going down in a diving-bell in Ireland were drowned, 1 June, 1783. The Royal George man-of-war, which was sunk off Portsmouth in 1782, was first surveyed by means of a diving-bell, in May, 1817. Latterly it has been employed in submarine surveys and harbor works. The "talpa marina," or sea-mole, a diving machine for laying down torpedoes, etc., being a cylinder provided with compressed air sufficient for two persons for fifty hours, was invented by Toselli, a Venetian, and was successfully tried in the bay of Naples, 26 Aug. 1871.—Diving-dress, a close dress made by Mr. Siebe about 1836; used by sir C. W. Pasley in 1838. M. Cabirol, maker of one, died Dec. 1874.

Mr. Fleuss invented a helmet with a mouthpiece, into which he introduced enough oxygen to last five hours, and thus was enabled to remain under water several hours. He exhibited his method at the Polytechnic Institution, London, Nov. 1879, and at the Society of Arts, 6 May, 1880.

Divining Rod (virgula divina, baculatorius), formed of wood or metal, was formerly believed, even by educated persons, to have the property of indicating the position of minerals and springs of water. Instances were alleged in 1851 by Dr. H. Mayo, in his work on "Popular Superstitions."

Divinity, see Theology.

Divorce was permitted by the law of Moses (Deut. xxiv. 1), 1451 B.C., but forbidden by Christ except for unchastity (Matt. v. 31, 32). It was put in practice by Spurius Carvilius Ruga at Rome, 234 B.C. At this time morals were so debased that 3000 prosecutions for adultery were enrolled. Divorces are of two kinds; one, a vinculo matrimonii (total divorce); the other a menâ et thoro (from board and bed). Divorces were attempted to be made of more easy obtainment in England in 1539. The Judicature act, 1873, constituted the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the High Court of Justice, with two judges; see Supreme Court and Probate.—In the United States divorce is regulated by the several states independently. As a consequence, the laws vary greatly, and considerable confusion arises from their conflict. A man may be the lawful husband of one woman in one state, while the law of another state may hold him to be the husband of another. The necessity of providing some uniform system was discussed, 1881. Connecticut, Indiana, Kansas, and some other states have become notorious for easy divorce laws, and many fraudulent divorces have been made in those states either by evasion of the law or by direct forgery.

Bill to prevent women marrying their seducers brought into parliament 1801
The commissioners on the law of divorce issue their first report April, 1857
In 1857 there had been in England, since the Reformation, 317 divorces by act of parliament; in Scotland, by the law, 174 divorces since 1846; 1858-67, 1279 dissolutions of marriage, 213 judicial separations.
From the establishment of the divorce court, to March, 1859, 37 divorces had been granted out of 286 petitions; from Nov. 1860, to July, 1861, 164.
By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts respecting divorce, etc., was abolished, and the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes court instituted, to consist of three judges, the judge of the Probate court to be one (if possible) "
A full court sat—lord Campbell, chief baron Pollock, sir Creswell Creswell (judge of the Probate court)—when five marriages were dissolved 10 May, 1858
The act amended by acts passed in consequence of the increase of the business of the court 1858-60
An act respecting divorces in Scotland passed 1861
Sir C. Creswell died in July; sir James F. Wilde (afterwards lord Penzance) successor Sept. 1863
The Divorce Amendment act passed 21 July, 1868
Lord Penzance retired, Oct.; succeeded by sir James Hannen Nov. 1872
On appeal, the house of lords decide that proceedings may be taken for divorce from a wife insane (see Mordant case, Trials, 1870) 22 June, 1874

Dizier, St. (N.E. France). Here a siege was sustained for six weeks against the army of the emperor Charles V., 1544. The allies here defeated Napoleon, 27 Jan. and 26 March, 1814.

Dobrudscha, the N.E. corner of Bulgaria; in 1854, the scene of the earlier incidents of the Russo-Turkish war (which see). At the close of the war of 1877-8 it was given to Roumania in exchange for the part of Bessarabia restored to Russia, and occupied 26 Dec. 1878.

Docetæ, a sect of the first century, said to have held that Jesus Christ was God, but that his body was an appearance, not a reality.

Docks of England. The following are the principal commercial docks:

Commercial Docks, Rotherhithe, originated about 1660.

West India Docks commenced 3 Feb. 1800; opened 27 Aug. 1802, when the Henry Addington, West Indianman, first entered them, decorated with the colors of the different nations of Europe.

London Docks were commenced 26 June, 1802, and opened 20 Jan. 1805.

East India Docks commenced 1803; opened 4 Aug. 1806.

St. Katharine's Docks began 3 May, 1827; and 2500 men were daily employed on them until they were opened, 25 Oct. 1828.

Royal Victoria Docks (in Plastow marshes) completed and opened Nov. 1855; great enlargement proposed, July, 1876; completed and named Royal Albert Docks by the duke and duchess of Connaught, 24 June, 1880.

Magnificent docks at Liverpool and Birkenhead erected, 1810-57.

Milwall Docks, near London, formally opened, 14 March, 1868.

A great floating iron dry-dock, which cost 250,000*l.*, was launched at North Woolwich, 3 Sept. 1868, and towed from the Medway by two ships of war, 23 June, 1869, and arrived at the Bermudas (in thirty-six days), 30 July.

ROYAL DOCK-YARDS.

Woolwich, an extensive one in 1509; closed 1 Oct. 1869.

Deptford dock-yard founded about 1513; closed 31 March, 1869.

Chatham dock-yard was founded by queen Elizabeth; much enlarged in 1870.

Portsmouth dock-yard established by Henry VIII.

Plymouth dock, now Devonport, about 1689. Great fire here, by which the Talavera, of 74 guns, the Imogene frigate, of 26 guns, and immense stores, were destroyed; the relics and figure-heads of the favorite ships of Boscawen, Rodney, Duncan, and other naval heroes, which were preserved in a naval museum, were also burned; the loss was estimated at 200,000*l.* 27 Sept. 1840.

Sheerness dock-yard was built by Charles II. after the insult of the Dutch, who burned our men-of-war at Chatham in 1667. A fire occurred at Sheerness dock-yard, on board the Camperdown, 9 Oct. 1840.

Milford Haven dock-yard, 1790; removed to Pembroke in 1814; see Hull.

Doctor. Doctor of the Church was a title given to Athanasius, Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, and Chrysostom in the Greek church; and to Jerome, Augustin, Ambrose, and Gregory the Great in the Latin church; see Fathers. Afterwards the title was conferred on certain persons with distinguishing epithets—viz.: Thomas Aquinas (Angelicus), Bonaventura (Seraphicus), Alexander de Hales (Irrefragabilis), Duns Scotus (Subtilis), Roger Bacon (Mirabilis), William Occam (Singularis), Joseph Gerson (Christianissimus), Thomas Bradwardine (Profundus), and so on.—Doctor of the Law was a title of honor among the Jews. The degree of doctor was conferred in England, 8 John, 1207.—Spelman. Some give it an earlier date, referring it to the time of the Venerable Bede and John de Beverley, the former of whom, it is said, was the first that obtained the degree at Cambridge in the eighth century.

Doctors' Commons, the college for the professors of civil and canon law in the eighth century. In Feb. 1658, Dr. Henry Hervie, dean of the arches and master of Trinity Hall (a seminary founded at Cambridge chiefly for the study of the civil and canon laws), procured from the dean and chapter of the diocese of London a lease of Montjoy House and buildings in the parish of St. Benet, Paul's wharf, for the accommodation of the society. Other courts being held here, the whole place received the appellation of "Doctors' Commons." The original college was destroyed in the great fire of 1666; in 1672 it was rebuilt on the old site. After the great fire, until 1672, the society held its courts at Exeter House, in the Strand. It was incorporated by charter in June, 1768.—Coote. The buildings of the College of Advocates, which included all the courts of Doctors' Commons (arches, admiralty, consistory, etc.), were purchased by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and were pulled down in April, 1867, for the new Queen Victoria street; some new buildings were erected. Till 1857 the causes taken cognizance of here were blasphemy, divorces, bastardy, adultery, penance, tithes, mortuaries, probate of wills, etc. The building in Knight-rider street being dilapidated and too small, the wills were removed to Somerset House, where the office was opened 24 Oct. 1874. See Ecclesiastical Courts, Civil Law, etc.

Doctrinaires, a name given since 1814 to a class of politicians in France (Guizot, Molé, the duc de Broglie and others), who upheld constitutional principles, in opposition to arbitrary monarchical power. The party came into office in 1830 under Louis Philippe, and fell with him in 1848. The term has been applied in this country to the writers in the Westminster Review (1824 et seq.), Bentham, Molesworth, and others.

Dodona, Epirus. The temple of Jupiter here, renowned for its ancient oracle, delivered by the sound of wind in a grove of trees, was destroyed by the Ætolians, 219 B.C.

Dodson's Act (brought forward by Mr. John G. Dodson, and passed 1 Aug. 1861) provides that votes for electing members of parliament for the universities may be recorded by means of polling-papers. The act was amended in 1868.

Dog. Buffon considers the shepherd's dog as "the root of the tree," assigning as his reason that it possesses from nature the greatest share of instinct. Dr. Gall mentions that a dog was taken from Vienna to England; that it escaped to Dover, got on board a vessel, landed at Calais, and, after accompanying a gentleman to Mentz, returned to Vienna.

Statute against dog stealing, 10 Geo. III. 1770

Employment of dogs in drawing carts, etc., abolished in London, 1839; in the United Kingdom. 1854

Dog tax imposed, 1796; and again in 1808; 12*s.* a year realized 219,313*l.*, in 1808. 1866

Assessed taxes on dogs repealed, 29 March, 1867; an annual excise duty of 6*s.* imposed on all dogs more than six months old, to begin on 1 April, 1867

Dog shows held in London in 1861; since 1862 at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, at the Crystal Palace, and other places.

"Dogs' temporary home" opened, Hollingsworth street, London, N., 1861; removed to Battersea in 1871; about 2200 animals have been sheltered in a year.

As a nuisance, dogs at large unmuzzled in the metropolis were ordered to be seized by the police. July to 27 Nov. 1868

A new act, more stringent, passed. 24 July, 1871

Master McGrath, an excessively fleet hound, the property of Lord Lurgan, thrice won the Waterloo cup; was sent for the queen to see, 1 March, and died. 15 Dec. "

Dog licenses (annual 6*s.*) issued in financial year 1871-2, produced 279,425*l.*; in 1876-6, 343,257*l.*; in 1876-7, 349,613*l.*; 1877-8, 372,699*l.*

Number of dogs licensed in United Kingdom: in 1866, 445,656; in 1876, 1,362,176.

Dog-days. The canicular or dog days now commence on 3 July and end 11 Aug. The rising and setting of Sirius or the dog-star with the sun has been erroneously regarded as the cause of excessive heat and of consequent calamities.

Doge, or DUKE. Venice was first governed by a doge named Anafesto Paululio, or Pauluccio, 697; see Venice. The Genoese chose their first doge, Simone Boccanegra, in 1339.—Muratori.

Dogger-bank (German Ocean). Here a gallant but indecisive battle was fought between the British, under admiral sir Hyde Parker, and the Dutch, 5 Aug. 1781.

Doggett's Coat and Badge. Thomas Doggett, an eminent actor of Drury lane, at the first anniversary of the accession to the throne of George I., 1 Aug. 1715, gave a waterman's coat and silver badge to be rowed for by six young watermen in honor of the day, and bequeathed at his death, in 1722, a sum of money to continue the custom.

Dolt. A silver Scottish penny, of which twelve were equal to a penny sterling. Some of those struck by Charles I. and II. are in the cabinets of the curious. The circulation of "doydekyns" (small Dutch coins) was prohibited by statute in 1415.

Dollar, the German thaler. Stamped Spanish dollars (value 4*s.* 9*d.*) were issued from the mint in March, 1797, but called in Oct. following. The dollar is the customary unit in calculations of United States money. It is coined both in gold and in silver. It is worth about 4*s.* 4*d.* English money.

Dolly's Brae, see Riots, 1849.

Dom and Dromo, see Cologne and Milan.

Dom-boc or DOOM-BOOK (Liber Judicialis), the code of law compiled by king Alfred from the West-Saxon collection of Ina and other sources. Alfred reigned from 871 to 901.

Dome's-day (or Doom's-day) Book [Domus Dei book, Stow] (Liber Censualis Angliæ), a book of the general survey of England, commenced in the reign of William I., 1080 (some say 1085), and completed in 1086. It was intended to be a register to determine the right in the tenure of estates;* and from it the question whether lands be ancient demesne or not is sometimes still decided. The book, formerly kept in the Chapter-house of Westminster, is now in the Public Record Office. It consists of two volumes, a greater and less, wherein all the counties of England, except Northumberland, Durham, Westmoreland, and Cumberland, are surveyed. "This Dome's-day Book was the tax-book of king William."—Camden. The taxes were levied according to this survey till 13 Hen. VIII., 1522, when a more accurate survey was taken, called by the people the New Doom's-day Book. It was printed in four vols. folio, with introductions, etc., 1783-1816. Photo-zincographic copies of various counties have been published since 1861. In Sept. 1872, government ordered a return of all the owners of land in England and Wales—in fact, a new Dome's-day Book; the work to be done by the Local Government Board.

The return for Scotland, 1872-3, was published by government, April, 1874; for England and Wales (exclusive of the metropolis) in 1875; for Ireland, 1876.

Domestic Economy, or the study of food and clothing, was introduced into the government educational department in 1874; the congresses began at Birmingham, 16 July, 1877; Manchester, 26 June, 1878; London (Society of Arts), 26 June, 1879; 21 June, 1881.

Domingo, St., see Hayti.

Dominica (West Indies), discovered by Columbus in his second voyage, on Sunday, 3 Nov. 1493. It was taken by the British in 1761, and confirmed to them by the peace of Paris, Feb. 1763. The French took Dominica in 1778, but restored it at the subsequent peace in 1783. Their admiral Villeneuve ineffectually attacked it in 1805. It suffered great damage by a hurricane in 1806.

Dominical Letter, noting the Lord's day, or Sunday. The seven days of the week, reckoned as beginning on 1 Jan., are designated by the first seven letters of the alphabet, A (1 Jan.), B, C, D, E, F, G; and the one of these which denotes Sunday is the Dominical letter. If the year begin on Sunday, A is the Dominical letter; if on Monday, G; on Tuesday, F; and so on. Generally, to find the Dominical letter call New-year's day A, the next B, and go on thus until you come to the first Sunday, and the letter that answers to it is the Dominical letter; in leap-years count two letters. The letter for 1881, B; 1882, A; 1883, G; 1884, F-E; 1885, D.

Dominicals, see Exeter.

Dominican Republic, see Hayti, 1844-61.

Dominicans, formerly a powerful religious order (called in France Jacobins, and in England Black friars), founded to put down the Albigenses and other heretics by St. Dominic, approved by Innocent III. in 1215, and confirmed by Honorius III. in 1216, under St. Augustin's rules and the founder's particular constitution. In 1276 the corporation of London gave the Dominicans two streets near the Thames, where they erected a large convent, whence that part is still called Blackfriars. A Dominican establishment at Haverstock hill, near London, was consecrated 10 Oct. 1867.

Don Quixote, by Saavedra Miguel de Cervantes (born 1547; died 1616). The first part of this work appeared in 1605, and the second part in 1608. It is said that upwards of 12,000 copies of the first part were circulated before the second was printed.—Watts.

Donatists, an ancient strict sect, formed about 313-318, by an African bishop, Donatus, who was jealous of Cæcilian, bishop of Carthage: it became extinct in the seventh century. The Donatists held that the Father was above the Son, and the Son above the Holy Ghost. Their discipline was severe, and those who joined them were rebaptized.

Donauwerth (Bavaria). Here the French and Bavarians were defeated by the duke of Marlborough, after a severe conflict, 2 July, 1704.

Doncaster (Yorkshire), the Roman Danum, the Saxon Donne ceastre. The races here (held annually in September) began about 1708; see Races.

Donkey Show. An exhibition of donkeys and mules took place at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, 9 Aug. 1864; and since.

Dorchester (Oxfordshire) was once a bishopric, founded about 636. The first bishop, Birinus, the apostle of the West Saxons (which see), was succeeded in 650 by Agilbert. In 659 the see was divided by the king. Dorchester remained with Agilbert, and Wina, established at Winchester, in 660 obtained the whole. The see of Dorchester was revived about 764. In 1072 the bishop Remigius de Feschamp removed the see to Lincoln.

Dorchester (Dorsetshire), the Roman Durnovaria, the Saxon Dornceaster. Here are found remains of a Roman theatre and of a British camp. Here Jeffries held his "bloody assize" (after Monmouth's rebellion), 3 Sept. 1685. Much excitement was caused by six laborers of Dorchester being sentenced to transportation, 17 March, 1834, for administering illegal oaths.

Dorians, Greeks, who claimed descent from Dorus, son of Hellen; see Greece. The return of the Dorians, named Heraclidae, to the Peloponnesus is dated 1104 B.C. They sent out many colonies. To them we owe the Doric architecture, the second of the five orders.

Dorking, Surrey, an ancient town; the manor having been given by the Conqueror to earl Fitzwarren. An imaginary battle of Dorking, in which the German invaders totally defeat the British army, is the subject of a clever article, attributed to col. George Chesney, in Blackwood's Magazine for May, 1871. It provoked much controversy, and caused the publication of several pamphlets.

Dormans (N.E. France). The Huguenots and their allies, under Montmorency, were here defeated by the duke of Guise, 10 Oct. 1575.

Dort, or DORDRECHT, an ancient town in Holland. Here happened an inundation of the Meuse in 1421, through the breaking-down of the dikes. In the territory of Dordrecht 10,000 persons perished; and more than 100,000 round Dollart, in Friesland, and in Zealand. The independence of the thirteen provinces was declared here in 1572, when William Prince of Orange was made stadtholder. A Protestant synod sat at Dort 18 Nov. 1618, to 25 May, 1619; to which deputies were sent from England, and from the reformed churches in Europe, to settle the difference between the doctrines of Luther, Calvin, and Arminius, principally upon points of justification and grace. This synod condemned the tenets of Arminius.

Dorylæum (Phrygia). Soliman, the Turkish sultan of Iconium, having retired from the defence of Nicæa his capital, was here defeated with great loss by the crusaders, 1 July, 1097.—Michaud.

"Doterel," H.M.S., destroyed by explosion, 26 April, 1881; see under Navy.

Douay (N. France), the Roman Duacum, was taken from the Flemings by Philip the Fair in 1297; restored by Charles V. in 1368. It reverted to Spain, from which it was taken by Louis XIV. in 1667. It was captured by the duke of Marlborough in June, 1710; and retaken by the French 8 Sept. 1712. This town gives its name to the Roman Catholic English version of the Bible authorized by the pope, the text being explained by notes of Roman divines. The Old Testament was published by the English college at Douay in 1609; the New had been published at Rheims in 1582. The English college for Roman Catholics was founded in 1568 by William Allen, afterwards cardinal.—Dodd.

Douro, a river (separating Spain and Portugal) which, after a desperate struggle between Wellington's advanced guard under Hill, and the French under Soult, was successfully crossed by the former on 12 May, 1809. So sudden was the movement that Wellington at 4 o'clock sat down to the dinner prepared for the French general.—Alison.

Dover (Kent), the Roman Dubris. Near here Julius Cæsar is said to have first landed in England, 26 Aug. 55 B.C., and its original castle to have been built by him soon after; but this is disputed. The works were strengthened by Alfred and succeeding kings, and rebuilt by Henry II. The earliest-named constable is Leopoldus de Bertie, in the reign of Ethelred II., followed by earl Godwin, Otto the brother of William I., etc. In modern times, this office, and that of warden of the Cinque Ports, have been frequently conferred on the prime-minister for the time being—e. g., lord North, Mr. Pitt, lord Liverpool, and the duke of Wellington. The earl of Dalhousie, late governor-general for India, appointed in Jan. 1853, died 19 Dec. 1860. Lord Palmerston, appointed constable March, 1861, died 18 Oct. 1865. Earl Granville appointed Dec. 1865; see Tunnels.

Dower, the gifts of a husband to a wife before marriage (Gen. xxxiv. 12). The portion of a man's lands or tenements which his wife enjoys for life after her husband's death. By the law of king Edmund, a widow was entitled to a moiety of her husband's lands or tenements for her life, 941. The widows of traitors, but not those of felons, are debarred their dower by statute 5 Edw. VI. 1551. By the Dower Act passed in 1833, the power of the wife over her dower was much diminished.

Down (N.E. Ireland), an ancient see, first bishop St. Cailan, in 499. At the instance of John de Courcy, the conqueror of Ulster, the cathedral, consecrated to the Trinity, was re-dedicated to St. Patrick about 1183. The sepulchre of St. Patrick (buried here in 493, in the abbey of Saul, founded by himself) brought this place into great repute. The see was united with that of Connor in 1441 (see Connor); and the see of Dromore was united to both by the Irish Church Temporalities act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, Aug. 14, 1833. The cathedral of Downpatrick was destroyed by lord Grey, lord-deputy of Ireland; for this and other crimes he was impeached and beheaded in 1541.—Beutson.

Draco's Laws (enacted by him when archon of Athens, 621 B.C.), on account of their severity, were said to be written in blood. Idleness was punished as severely as murder. This code was set aside by Solon's, 594 B.C.

Drafts (or cheques). In 1856, drafts crossed with a banker's name were made payable only to or through the same banker. This act was passed in consequence of a decision to the contrary in the case of Carlton v. Ireland, 12 Dec. 1855. In 1858 the crossing was made a material part of a cheque; but bankers are not held responsible when the crossing does not plainly appear, and a penny stamp was ordered to be affixed to drafts on bankers, commencing 25 May. In the case of Simmonds v. Taylor, May, 1858, it had been decided that the crossing formed no part of the draft. The crossing had been erased, and the money paid to the holder of the draft, who had stolen it.

The "Cheque Bank," established for issuing drafts for limited amounts, opened 23 July, 1873
The payment of a stolen draft crossed on one banker and presented by another banker declared legal; Smith v. Union Bank of London: verdict for defendants, 29 Nov. 1875
Crossed Cheques act passed 15 Aug. 1876

Dragonnades. The fierce persecution of the Protestants in the reign of Louis XIV. by dragoons, by the minister Louvois, 1684, was consummated by the revocation of Henry IV.'s edict of Nantes, 22 Oct. 1685, which drove 50,000 families from France.—Duruy.

Dragoons. The name is supposed to have been derived from dragon, "because mounted on horseback with lighted match he seemeth like a fiery dragon."—Meyrick. The DRACONARIJ were horse-soldiers who bore dragons for ensigns. The first regiment of dragoons was raised in England, it is believed, in 1681. "King Charles II., at the Restoration, established a regiment of Life Guards, to which he added a regiment of Horse Guards, and two regiments of Foot Guards; and a third regiment of Foot Guards was raised at Coldstream, on the borders of Scotland."—Cupt. Curling.

Drainage of LAND, in England, is of early date—remains of British works being still extant in the Fens district. Cornelius Vermuyden, the Dutch engineer, was invited to England in 1621, and, amidst much opposition, he and his successors drained the districts termed the Great Levels; see Levels. In the present century great progress has been made in drainage. In 1861 was passed "An act to amend the laws relative to the drainage of land for agricultural purposes;" see Sewers.

Drake's Circumnavigation. Sir Francis Drake sailed from Falmouth 13 Dec. 1577, circumnavigated the globe, and returned to England after many perils, 3 Nov. 1580. He was vice-admiral under lord Howard; high admiral of England, in the conflict with the Spanish Armada, 19 July, 1588. He died at Panama, 28 Jan. 1596, during an expedition against the Spaniards.

Drama, ANCIENT. Both tragedy and comedy began with the Greeks.

Æschylus introduced dresses and a stage 486
The drama was first introduced into Rome on occasion of a plague which raged during the consulate of C. Sulpicius Petrus and C. Licinius Stolo; the magistrates, to appease the deities, instituted games called the "Scenici;" actors from Etruria danced, after the Tuscan manner, to the flute 364
Anaxandrides, first dramatic poet who introduced intrigues upon the stage; composed about 100 plays, of which 10 obtained the prize; died, 340
Plays were represented by Livius Andronicus, who, abandoning satires, wrote plays with a regular and connected plot; he gave singing and dancing to different performers 240

The greatest ancient dramatic writers were—Greek, Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides (tragedy), and Aristophanes (comedy), 525–427; Latin, Plautus and Terence (comedy), 184–160; Seneca (tragedy) 7 B.C.–A.D. 65

Drama, MODERN, arose early in the rude attempts of minstrels and buffoons at fairs in France, Italy, and England, and also in the performance of classical plays at the universities, still represented by the Westminster play. Stories from the Bible (Mystery Plays), represented by the priests, were the origin of sacred comedy. —Warton.

Gregory Nazianzen, father of the Church, is said to have constructed a drama on the Passion of Christ to counteract heathen profanities. about 364

Plays performed at Clerkenwell by the parish clerks, and "miracles" represented in the fields. 1397
The "Passion of Christ," a miracle-play, still frequently performed at Ober-Ammergau, in Bavaria, is said to have had its origin after a pestilence in. 1633
This play was witnessed by the prince of Wales and other distinguished persons in the summer and autumn. 1871
Performance, 17–26 May. 25 Sept. 1880
Its proposed performance at the Westminster aquarium, 4 Nov., was stopped by the disapprobation of many. Oct. 1878

[The "Passion-play" is still performed in Spain, with painful realism, 1873.]
Allegorical characters introduced in the fifteenth century.
Skelton and others wrote "Moralities" about 1500
The first regular drama acted in Europe was the "Sophonisba" of Trissino, at Rome, in the presence of pope Leo X.—Voltaire. 1515
First royal license for the drama in England (to master Burbage, and four others, servants to the earl of Leicester) to act plays at the Globe, Bankside. 1574
Shakespeare began to write. about 1590
A license granted to Shakespeare and others. 1603
Plays opposed by the Puritans in 1633; suspended during the commonwealth, 1649; restored. 1660
Two companies of regular performers were licensed by Charles II., Killigrew's and Sir William Davenant's. The first was at the Bull, Vere street, Clare market, which was immediately afterwards removed to Drury lane; the other in Dorset gardens, 1662. Till this time, boys performed women's parts; but Mrs. Coleman (the first female on the stage) had performed Ianthe in Davenant's "Siege of Rhodes" in. 1666
Sir William Davenant introduced operas, and both companies united, 1684, and continued together till 1694, when a schism under Betterton led to the opening of a theatre in Lincoln's inn fields, the parent of Covent garden. 1695
Act for the revision of plays and for licensing them previously to being performed. 1737
Authors' Dramatic Copyright Protection act, 3 Will. IV. c. 15, 10 June, 1832; extended to operas 1 July, 1842 (See Theatres, Covent Garden, Drury Lane, and Copyright.)

Dramatic College, for the benefit of distressed actors and their children, was proposed 21 July, 1858, at the Princess's theatre, by Messrs. C. Dickens, Thackeray, C. Kean, B. Webster, and others. Mr. Henry Dodd's offer of land and money, with certain stipulations, was declined Jan. 1859. The first stone of the buildings at Maybury, near Woking, was laid by the prince-consort, 1 June, 1860, and on 29 Sept. 1862, seven annuitants were installed. The central hall was opened by the prince of Wales, 5 June, 1865. The queen is the patron. The viceroy of Egypt was present at the annual fête at the Crystal Palace, July, 1867, and gave 500*l.* to the college. The scheme was unsuccessful. On 12 Nov. 1877, it was determined to close the college, and provide for the inmates. The buildings were sold by private contract about 23 July, 1880.

"Dreadnought." In this ship, which was engaged in the battle of Trafalgar, 21 Oct. 1805, was established a hospital for the seamen of all nations by the Seamen's Hospital Society, established 1821. The old vessel was replaced by others. The removal of the men to Greenwich hospital was proposed in 1867; effected April, 1870.

Dreams are mentioned in Scripture—e. g., Joseph's and Pharaoh's, 1715 B.C. (Gen. xxxvii. and xli.), and Nebuchadnezzar's, 603 and 570 B.C. (Dan. ii. and iv.). The first attempt to interpret dreams and omens is ascribed to Amphictyon of Athens, 1497 B.C.

Thomas, lord Lyttelton, dreamed that a young female, dressed in white, solemnly warned him of his dissolution in three days from that time. On the third day, his lordship had a party to spend the evening with him, and about the time predicted he observed to the company present that "he believed he should jockey the ghost;" but in a few minutes afterwards he was seized with a sudden faintness, carried to bed, and rose no more. He died 27 Nov. 1779, aged 35. [The whole story is now discredited.]

Severe contests between the allied army under the prince of Schwarzenberg and the French commanded by Napoleon. 26, 27 Aug. 1813
The allies, 200,000 strong, attacked Napoleon in his position at Dresden, and the event had nearly proved fatal to them but for an error in the conduct of gen. Vandamme. They were defeated with dreadful loss, and were obliged to retreat into Bohemia; but Vandamme pursuing them too far, his division was cut to pieces, and himself and all his staff made prisoners. In this battle gen. Moreau received his mortal wound, while in conversation with the emperor of Russia. 27 Aug.
Marshal St. Cyr and 25,000 French troops surrendered Dresden to the allies. 11 Nov.
During a political commotion the king abdicated, and prince Frederick, his nephew, was declared regent, 9 Sept. et seq. 1890
An insurrection, 3 May; suppressed. 6 May, 1849

Dress. The attire of the Hebrew women is censured in Isaiah iii., about 760 B.C. Excess in dress among the early Romans was restrained by sumptuary laws; and also in England by numerous statutes, in 1368, 1465, 1570, etc. (see Cap).—Stour. F. W. Fairholt's "Costume in England" (1846) contains a history of dress, with numerous illustrations derived from MSS., the works of Strutt, etc. J. R. Planché's elaborate "Cyclopædia of Costume" first appeared in 1876. A "dress-making company" was established in London, 6 Feb. 1865, with the view of improving the condition of the workwomen.

Sir Walter Raleigh wore a white satin-pinked vest, close-sleeved to the wrist, and over the body a doublet finely flowered, and embroidered with pearls, and in the feather of his hat a large ruby and pearl-drop at the bottom of the sprig in place of a button. His breeches, with his stockings and ribbon garters, fringed at the end, all white; and buff shoes, which, on great court-days, were so gorgeously covered with precious stones as to have exceeded the value of 6000*l.*; and he had a suit of armor of solid silver, with sword and belt blazing with diamonds, rubies, and pearls.
King James's favorite, the duke of Buckingham, had his diamonds tacked so loosely on that when he chose to shake a few off on the ground, he obtained all the fame he desired from the pickers-up, who were generally les dames de la cour.

The court dress of civilians, previously that of the time of the Georgies, was modified by the lord chamberlain, Lord Sydney, in 1819.

The BLOOMER COSTUME, introduced into America in 1849 by Mrs. Ann Bloomer, and worn there by many of the women. It resembled male attire, being an open-fronted jacket and loose trousers, the latter wide like those of the Turk, but gathered in at the ankles. The Bloomer dress was adopted

* Dresden china was invented by John Frederick Böttger (or Böttcher), an apothecary's boy, about 1709. He died 13 March, 1719. A costly service, each piece exquisitely painted, with battles, etc., was presented to the duke of Wellington by the king of Prussia in 1816.

by a few females in the west of London in Aug. 1851; but, though recommended by some American ladies in popular lectures, it was soon totally discontinued.

Dreux (N.W. France). Here Montmorenci defeated the Huguenots under Condé, 19 Dec. 1562. Here is the burying-place of the Orleans family since 1816. The duke of Guise, aged 18, the last surviving child of the duc d'Aumale, was buried here 27 July, 1872. The bodies of king Louis Philippe and others of his family were brought here from England and buried, 9 June, 1876.

Drinking-fountains. Several were erected in Liverpool in 1857. The Metropolitan Drinking-fountain Association was formed in London in April, 1859, by lord John Russell, the earl of Carlisle, Mr. S. Gurney, and others. The first of the numerous fountains since erected is that near St. Sepulchre's church, Skinner street, 21 April, 1859. The magnificent fountain in Victoria park, London, was inaugurated by the donor, Miss (afterwards baroness) Burdett-Coutts, 28 June, 1862. A remarkable drinking-fountain (the gift of the maharajah of Vizianigram) was inaugurated in Hyde park, 29 Feb. 1868; another in Regent's park, the gift of a Parsee, Aug. 1869.—324 in the metropolis, June, 1877; 392 fountains, 404 cattle-troughs, July, 1879; 437 fountains, 438 troughs, July, 1880.

The fountain at the Royal Exchange, with the statue of Charity (cost, by subscription, 1500*l.*), finished Oct. 1879.

In the United States, the first drinking-fountains were the town pumps, maintained at the public expense. In New York a number of ice-water drinking-fountains were established under the auspices of the Business Men's Moderation Society in the summer of 1880.

Drogheda (E. Ireland), formerly Tredagh, a place of great importance, having the privilege of coining money. Here was passed Poyning's law (which see) in 1494. In the reign of Edward VI. an act was passed for the foundation of a university here. The town was besieged several times in the contests between 1641 and 1691, and Cromwell took it by storm, and put the governor, sir A. Aston, and the whole of the garrison, to the sword, 12 Sept. 1649. More than 3000 men, most of them English, perished. It surrendered to William III. in 1690.

Dromore, BISHOPRIC OF (N.E. Ireland), founded by St. Coleman, first bishop, about 556. By an extent returned 15 James I., this see was valued in the king's books at 50*l.* Jeremy Taylor was bishop of Down and Connor in 1660, and of this see in 1661. In 1842 Dromore was united to Down by the Irish Church Temporalities Act of 1833.

Drontheim, capital of Norway, founded by Olaf I. about 998.

Drowning, an ancient punishment. The Britons inflicted death by drowning in a quagmire, before 450 a.c.—Stow. It is said to have been inflicted on eighty intractable bishops near Nicomedia, a.d. 870, and to have been adopted as a punishment in France by Louis XI. The wholesale drownings of the royalists in the Loire at Nantes, by command of the brutal Carrier, Nov. 1793, were termed Noyades. 94 priests were drowned at one time. He was condemned to death in Dec. 1794. Societies for the recovery of drowning persons were first instituted in Holland in 1767. The second society is said to have been formed at Milan in 1768, the third at Hamburg in 1771, the fourth at Paris in 1772, and the fifth in London in 1774. The motto of the Royal Humane Society in England is Lateat scintillula forsan—"A small spark may perhaps lie hid." François Texier, of Dunkerque, after saving 50 lives at different times, was drowned in a storm, Oct. 1871.

Drowned in inland waters in England and Wales, 1877, 2692.

Drugs, sales regulated by Sale of Food and Drugs act, passed 11 Aug. 1875; see Pharmacy.

Druids. Priests, among the ancient Germans, Gauls, and Britons, so named from their veneration for the oak (Brit. derv). They administered sacred things, were the interpreters of the gods, and supreme judges. They headed the Britons who opposed Caesar's first landing, 55 a.c., and were exterminated by the Roman governor, Suetonius Paulinus, a.d. 61.

Drum: the invention is ascribed to Bacchus, who, according to Polyænus, "gave his signals of battle with cymbals and drums." It was used by the Egyptians; and brought by the Moors into Spain, 1713. The drum, or drum capstan, for weighing anchors, was invented by sir S. Morland in 1685.—Anderson.

Drumclog (W. Scotland). Here the covenanters defeated Graham of Claverhouse on 1 June, 1679. An account of the conflict is given by Walter Scott in "Old Mortality."

Drunkards were to be excommunicated in the early church, 59 (1 Cor. v. 11). In England, a canon law forbade drunkenness in the clergy, 747. Constantine, king of Scots, punished it with death, 870. By 21 James I. c. 7, 1623, a drunkard was liable to a penalty of five shillings, or six hours in the stocks; see Temperance and Teetotaler.

DRINK BILL.—Mr. William Hoyle computes that the nation in 1860 spent in intoxicating liquors, 86,897,683*l.*; in 1876, 147,288,760*l.*; in 1870, 128,143,863*l.* In 1880, for beer, 67,881,673*l.*; British spirits, 28,457,496*l.*; foreign spirits, 10,173,014*l.*; wine, 14,297,102*l.*; British wines, etc., estimated 1,500,000*l.*; total, 122,279,275*l.* On comparison, it was asserted that our drink bill does not exceed that of France, 1881

Drury-lane Theatre derives its origin from a cockpit which was converted into a theatre in the reign of James I. It was rebuilt and called the Phoenix; and Charles II. granted an exclusive patent to Thomas Kilgrew, 25 April, 1662. The actors were called "the king's servants," and ten of them, called "gentlemen of the great chamber," had an annual allowance of ten yards of scarlet cloth, with lace; see under Theatres. Drury-lane Theatrical Fund established 1766.

Druses, a warlike people dwelling among the mountains of Lebanon, derive their origin from a fanatical Mahometan sect which arose in Egypt about 996, and fled to Palestine to avoid persecution. They now retain hardly any of the religion of their ancestors: they eat pork and drink wine, and do not practise circumcision, pray, or fast. In the middle of 1860, in consequence of disputes (in which doubtless both parties were to blame), the Druses attacked their neighbors the Maronites (which see), whom they massacred, it was said, without regard to age or sex. Peace was made in July; but in the meantime a religious fury seized the Mahometan population of the neighboring cities, and a general massacre of Christians ensued. Fuad Pacha with Turkish troops, and gen. Hauptpoul with French auxiliaries, invaded Lebanon in Aug. and Sept. The Druses surrendered, giving up their chiefs, Jan. 1861; see Damascus and Syria.

Dualin, a new explosive substance (said to be from four to ten times more powerful than gunpowder), composed of varying proportions of cellulose (woody fibre), nitro-starch, nitro-mannite, and nitro-cellulose; invented by Carl Ditmar, a Prussian, and made known in 1870.

This name is also given to another explosive compound, invented by Mr. Nobel, composed of ammonia and saw-dust, acted on by nitro-sulphuric acid.

Dualism, a term applied to the principles of the advocates for a separate government of Hungary under the emperor of Austria; effected in 1867.

Dublin, capital of Ireland, anciently called Ashled, said to have been built 140. Auliana, daughter of Alpinus, a lord or chief among the Irish, having been drowned at the ford where now Whitworth bridge is built, he changed the name to Auliana, by Ptolemy called Eblana (afterwards corrupted into Dublana). Alpinus is said to have brought "the then rude hill into the form of a town," about 155; see Ireland and Trinity Colleges.

Dublin, ARCHBISHOPRIC OF. It is supposed that the bishopric of Dublin was founded by St. Patrick in 448. Gregory, bishop in 1121, became archbishop in 1152. It was united to Glandalagh in 1214. George Browne, an Augustine friar of London (deprived by queen Mary in 1554), was the first Protestant archbishop. Dublin has two cathedrals, Christ church and St. Patrick's. The revenue was valued, in the king's books, 30 Henry VIII., at 534*l*. 15*s*. 2*d*. Irish. Kildare, on its last avoidance, was annexed to Dublin, 1846; see Bishops.

Ducat, a coin so called because struck by dukes.—Johnson. First coined by Longinus, governor of Italy.—Procopius. First struck in the duchy of Apulia, 1140.—Du Cange. Coined by Robert, king of Sicily, in 1240.

Ducking-stool; see Cucking-stool.

Duelling took its rise from the judicial combats of the Celtic nations. The first formal duel in England, between William count d'Eu and Godfrey Baynard, took place 1096. Duelling in civil matters was forbidden in France, 1305. Francis I. challenged the emperor Charles V. 1528 without effect. The fight with small-swords was introduced into England, 1587. Proclamation that no person should be pardoned who killed another in a duel, 1679.* Duelling was checked in the army, 1792; and has been abolished in England by the influence of public opinion, aided by the prince consort. A society "for the discouraging of duelling" was established in 1845. "The British Code of Duel" published in 1824, was approved by the duke of Wellington and others; see Battle, Wager of; Combat; and Jarnac.

Dulwich College (Surrey), called God's-gift College, founded by Edward Alleyn, an eminent comedian, was completed and solemnly opened 13 Sept. 1619. Alleyn was its first master, and died in 1626. In 1686 Wm. Cartwright, an actor, gave a library and some portraits, and on 26 Dec. 1810 sir Francis Bourgeois bequeathed his collection of pictures, the gallery for which was erected by sir John Soane, and opened in 1812. Sir Francis died 8 Jan. 1811. In 1857 an act was passed by which the college was reconstituted. Two schools were established; and the number of the almshouse increased. In 1860 the annual income was 11,482*l*. The new school buildings, founded 26 June, 1866, were opened by the prince of Wales, 21 June, 1870. The Endowed Schools Commissioners put forth a draft scheme for remodelling the charity about Oct. 1872; and another scheme was issued in 1881. Four parishes are benefited by the charity: St. Luke's, Middlesex; St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate; St. Saviour's, Southwark; and St. Giles's, Camberwell.

Dunblane, or DUNBLANE (Perth), an ancient city, near which took place a conflict called the battle of Sheriffmuir, between the royalist army under the duke of Argyll, and the Scots rebels under the earl of Mar, 13 Nov. 1715. Both claimed the victory.

Dunbar (Haddington). Here the Scottish army and king John Balliol were defeated by Warrenne, earl of Surrey, 27 April, 1296, and Scotland was subdued. Near here, also, Cromwell obtained a signal victory over the Scots, in arms for Charles II., 8 Sept. 1650.

Dunciad, the celebrated satirical poem by Alexander Pope, was published in 1728.

Duncombe Park, N. Riding of Yorkshire, the magnificent mansion of the earl of Feversham, with valuable treasures (really a museum open to the public), was destroyed by fire, 11 Jan. 1879.

Dundalk (Louth, Ireland). On 5 Oct. 1318, at Foughard, near this place, was defeated and slain Edward Bruce, who had invaded Ireland in 1315. The walls and fortifications of Dundalk were destroyed in 1641. It was taken by Cromwell in 1649. The first cambric manufacture in Ireland was established in this town by artisans from France in 1727.

Dundee (E. Scotland), on the Tay. The site was given by William the Lion (reigned 1165-1214) to his brother David, earl of Huntingdon, who built or strengthened the castle, and erected a large church, the tower of which, 156 feet high, still remains. The town was taken by the English in 1385; pillaged by Montrose, 1645; stormed by Monk in 1651; and visited by queen Victoria in 1844. It has thriven since 1815, through its extensive linen manufactures; at one of these (Edwards's) a steam explosion took place on 15 April, 1859, when twenty persons were killed. Claverhouse, viscount Dundee (killed 1689), had a house here. Population in 1861, 90,425; in 1871, 118,974.

Dunes, see Dunkirk.

Dungan-hill (Ireland). Here the English army, commanded by col. Jones, signally defeated the Irish, of whom 6000 are said to have been slain, while the loss on the side of the English was inconsiderable, 8 Aug. 1647.

Dunkeld (Perthshire) was made a bishopric by David I. in 1127; the ancient Culdee church, founded by king Constantine III., becoming the cathedral. The beautiful bridge over the Tay, erected by Thomas Telford, was opened in 1809.

Dunkirk (N. France), founded in the seventh century, was taken by the Spaniards, Sept. 1652, and retaken from them by the English and French after Turenne's victory over them under Condé on the dunes (or sands), 14 June, 1658, and put into the hands of the English, 25 June following. It was sold by Charles II. for 500,000*l*. to Louis XIV., 17 Oct.; restored 1662, and was one of the best-fortified ports in the kingdom; but the works were demolished in conformity with the treaty of Utrecht in 1713. The works were ordered to be demolished at the peace of 1763; but in 1783 they were again resumed. The English attempted to besiege Dunkirk; but the duke of York was defeated by Hoche and forced to retire with loss, 7 Sept. 1793. It was made a free port in 1816.

Dunmow (Essex), famous for the tenure of the manor (made by Robert Fitz-Walter, 1244), "that whatever married couple will go to the priory, and, kneeling on two sharp-pointed stones, will swear that they have not quarrelled nor repented of their marriage within a year and a day after its celebration, shall receive a fitch of bacon."

The earliest recorded claim for the bacon was in 1445, since when, to 1865, it is said to have been demanded only five times.

The last claimants, previous to 1855, were John Shakeshanks and his wife, 20 June, 1751; they made a large sum by selling slices of the fitch to witnesses of the ceremony (5000 persons).

Fitches were awarded to Mr. and Mrs. Barlow of Chipping-Ongar, and the Chevalier Chataine and his lady, 19 July, 1855.

The lord of the manor opposed the revival; but Mr. W. Harrison Ainsworth, the novelist, and some friends, defrayed the expense and superintended the ceremonials.

A fitch was awarded in 1860 and 9 July, 1873; on 17 July, 1876, to James Henry and Mary Boosey; to others, 23 July, 1877.

Dunse (S. Scotland). Here, on 18 June, 1689, by treaty between the Scots commission and Charles I., their demands were acceded to, and they agreed to disband their army. Disputes arose, and the treaty was not carried into effect.

Dunsinane (Perthshire). On the hill was fought the battle between king Macbeth, formerly the thane of Glamis, and Siward, earl of Northumberland, 27 July, 1054. Edward the Confessor had sent Siward on behalf of Malcolm III., whose father, Duncan, the usurper had murdered. Macbeth was defeated, and it was said was pursued to Lumphanan, in Aberdeenshire, and there slain, 1056 or 1057.

Dupplin (Perthshire). Here Edward Balliol and his English allies totally defeated the Scots under the earl of Mar, 11 Aug. 1332, and obtained the crown for three months.

Durbar, an East Indian term for an audience-chamber or reception. On 18 Oct. 1864, a durbar was held at Lahore by the viceroy of India, sir John Lawrence, at which 604 of the most illustrious princes and chieftains of the northwest province were present, magnificently clothed. Similar ones were held in 1866, 1867, and on 27 March, 1869, at Umballah.

Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, governor of Bombay, held a great durbar of the princes of Western India at Poona, 6 Oct. 1868
The earl of Mayo, the viceroy, held a solemn durbar at Ajmere in Rajpootana, 22 Oct. 1870
The marquess of Ripon's grand durbar (as viceroy) at Lahore (after Afghan war), 15 Nov. 1880

Durham, an ancient city, the Dunholme of the Saxons, and Durême of the Normans. The BISHOPRIC was removed to Durham from Chester-le-street in 995, whither it had been transferred from Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, on the coast of Northumberland, in 875, in consequence of the invasion of the Danes. The bones of St. Cuthbert, the sixth bishop, were brought from Lindisfarne and interred in Durham cathedral. This see, deemed the richest in England, was valued in the king's books at 2821*l*. Present income 8000*l*.

College founded (abolished at the Reformation) 1290
Near Durham was fought the decisive battle of Neville's Cross (see Strikes) 17 Oct. 1346
Durham ravaged by Malcolm of Scotland, 1070; occupied by the Northern rebels 1569
By the Scots 1640
Cromwell quartered his Scotch prisoners in the cathedral 1650
Cromwell established a college, 1637; which was suppressed at the Restoration 1660
The palatine privileges, granted to the bishop by the Danish Northumbrian prince Guthrum, taken by the crown June 1836
Present University established in 1831; opened Oct. 1833; chartered June 1837
Certain new ordinances recommended by a commission, 1862, set aside 1863
Cathedral renovated; reopened 18 Oct. 1876

RECENT BISHOPS.

Dust and Disease. A controversy respecting the connection between them originated with a lecture on the subject by professor Tyndall at the Royal Institution, 21 Jan. 1870, when he demonstrated the presence of organic matters in the dust of the atmosphere in conformity with the experiments of Pasteur and other eminent philosophers; see Germ Theory.

Dutch Plays, "Annie Mie," by Rosier Faassen, and others, were performed at the Imperial Theatre, Westminster, 7 June et seq. 1880. Madame Catherine Beersman's acting was much approved.

Duumviri, two Roman patricians appointed by Tarquin the Proud, 520 B.C. to take care of the books of the Sibyls, which were supposed to contain the fate of the Roman empire. The books were placed in the Capitol, and secured in a chest under the ground. The number of keepers was increased to ten (the Decemviri) 365 B.C., afterwards to fifteen; the added five called quinque viri.

Dwarfs, ANCIENT. Philetas of Cos, distinguished 15 about 330 B.C., as a poet and grammarian, was said to have carried weights in his pockets to prevent his being blown away. He was preceptor to Ptolemy Philadelphus.—Ælium. Julia, niece of Augustus, had a dwarf named Coropas, two feet and a hand's-breadth high; and Andromeda, a freed-maid of Julia's, was of the same height.—Pliny. Aug. Cæsar exhibited in his plays a man not two feet in stature.—Sueton. Alypius of Alexandria, a logician and philosopher, was but one foot five inches and a half high; he seemed to be consumed into a kind of divine nature.—Vos. Instit.

MODERN DWARFS.—John D'Estrix of Mechlin was brought to the duke of Parma, in 1592, when he was 35 years of age, having a long beard. He was skilled in languages, and not more than three feet high.

Geoffrey Hudson, an English dwarf, when a youth, 18 inches high, was served up to table in a cold pie, before the king and queen, by the duchess of Buckingham, in 1626. He challenged Mr. Crofts to fight a duel; but the latter came armed with a squirt. At another meeting the dwarf shot his antagonist dead, 1653.

Count Borowiaski, a Polish gentleman of great accomplishments and elegant manners, well known in England, where he resided for many years, was born in Nov. 1739. His growth was at one year of age, 14 inches; at six, 17 inches; at twenty, 33 inches; and at thirty, 30. He had a sister, named Anastasia, seven years younger than himself, and so much shorter that she could stand under his arm. He visited many of the courts of Europe, and died in England in 1837.

Charles Stratton (termed general Tom Thumb), an American, was exhibited in England, 1846. In Feb. 1863, in New York, when 25 years old and 31 inches high, he married Lavinia Warren, aged 21, 32 inches high. He, his wife and child, and commodore Nutt, another dwarf, came to England in Dec. 1864, and remained here some time.

Mr. Collard, aged 22, smaller than Stratton, sang at concerts in London, and was termed the "Pocket Sims Reeves," May, June, 1873.

Several dwarfs (said to be smaller than the preceding) exhibited at the Westminster Aquarium, July, 1874.
Che-mah, a Chinese, 42 years old, 25 inches high, exhibited at the Westminster Aquarium, 11 June, 1860.

Lucia Zarate, born 3 Jan. 1863, in Mexico; height 20 inches, weight 4*l* lbs.; and General Mite, born 2 Oct. 1864, in New York State; height 21 inches, weight 9 lbs.; exhibited in Piccadilly, 22 Nov. 1880 et seq. Exhibited in New York in company with the preceding, under the collective term of "The Midgets," 1879 et seq.

Dyeing is attributed to the Tyrians, about 1500 B.C. The English are said to have sent fine goods to be dyed in Holland till the art was brought to them, probably in 1608. "Two dyers of Exeter were flogged for teaching their art in the north" (of England), 1628. A statute against abuses in dyeing passed in 1783. The art has been greatly improved by chemical research. A discovery of Dr. Stenhouse, in 1848, led to M. Marnas procuring mauve from lichens; and Dr. Hofmann's production of aniline from coal-tar has led to the invention of a number of beautiful dyes (mauve, magenta, red, green, black, etc.); see Aniline.

Dynamite, a new explosive compound, consisting of 25 parts of silicious earth saturated with 75 parts of nitro-glycerine (which see). It is suitable for mining purposes, and was tried and approved at Merstham 14 July, 1868. It was invented by A. Nobel to obviate danger. Its manufacture is very dangerous.

Thirteen men killed by explosion of dynamite in a railway tunnel at Cymmer, S. Wales, 21 April, 1876.

A man named Thomson, Thomassin, or Thomas, consigned a cask of dynamite to Bremerhafen, to be conveyed by the North German Lloyd's steamer Mæd. With it he sent a clockwork machine, which would in eight days give the cask a blow powerful enough to explode the dynamite and destroy the ship. From some cause the machine went off and exploded in the dock, killing above 80 and wounding about 200 persons, chiefly emigrants and their friends, 11 Dec. 1875. Thomson committed suicide, dying 16 Dec. 1875, after confessing his crime, his object being to obtain the paltry sum for which he had insured his goods. It appears that similar machines were known in 1873.

Use of dynamite for killing oxen tried and advocated, summer, 1877.

Its use in fisheries prohibited by parliament, 14 Aug. 1877.

A parcel containing 27 cartridges of dynamite placed on the London and N. W. Railway, between Bushey and Watford (perpetrators not discovered), night 12-13 Sept. 1880.

Dzoungaria, a region of Central Asia, N. of China, with about 2,000,000 inhabitants—fierce, warlike Mahometans. After being long tributary to China, they rebelled in 1864, massacred the Chinese residents, and set up their countryman Abel Oghlan as sultan. As he was unable to restrain predatory attacks upon the Russians, the czar declared war in April, 1871. After a brief campaign in May and June, and several conflicts in which the Russians were victors, the sultan surrendered himself to gen. Kolpakovskise, 4 July, and the country was annexed to the Russian empire.

E.

Eagle, an ancient coin of Ireland, made of a base metal, and current in the first years of Edward I., about 1272, was so named from the figure impressed upon it. The American gold coinage of eagles, half-eagles, and quarter-eagles began 6 Dec. 1792; an eagle is of the value of ten dollars, or about 2*l.* 1*s.*—The standard of the eagle was borne by the Persians at Cunaxa, 401 B.C. The Romans carried gold and silver eagles as ensigns, and sometimes represented them with a thunderbolt in their talons, on the point of a spear, 102 B.C. Charlemagne added the second head to the eagle for his arms, to denote that the empires of Rome and Germany were united in him, A.D. 802. The eagle was the standard of Napoleon I. and Napoleon III., as well as of Austria, Russia, and Prussia; see Knighthood.

Earl (Latin, comes), introduced at the Conquest, superseded the Saxon ealdorman, and continued the highest rank in England until Edward III. created dukes in 1337 and 1351, and Richard II. created marquesses (1385), both above earls. Alfred used the title of earl as a substitute for king. William Fitz-Osborn was made earl of Hereford by William the Conqueror, 1066. Gilchrist was created earl of Angus, in Scotland, by king Malcolm III., in 1087, and sir John de Courcy created baron of Kinsale and earl of Ulster in Ireland, by Henry II., 1181.

EARL MARSHAL of England, the eighth great officer of state. This office, until it was made hereditary, always passed by grant from the king. Gilbert de Clare was created lord marshal by king Stephen, 1135. The last lord marshal was John Fitz-Alan, lord Maltravers.—Camden. Richard II., in 1397, granted letters patent to the earl of Nottingham by the style of earl marshal. In 1672, Charles II. granted to Henry, lord Howard, the dignity of hereditary earl marshal. The earl marshal's court was abolished in 1641; see Howard. EARL MARISCHAL of Scotland was an officer who commanded the cavalry, whereas the constable commanded the whole army; but they seem to have had a joint command, as all orders were addressed to "our constable and marischal." The office was never out of the Keith family. It was reserved at the Union, and when the heritable jurisdictions were bought, it reverted to the crown, being forfeited by the rebellion of George Keith, earl marischal, in 1715.

Earthquakes. Anaxagoras supposed that earthquakes were produced by subterraneous clouds bursting into lightning, which shook the vaults that confined them, 435 B.C.—Diog. Laert. Kircher, Des Cartes, and others supposed that there were many vast cavities underground which have a communication with each other, some of which abound with water, others with exhalations, arising from inflammable substances, as nitre, bitumen, sulphur, etc. Dr. Stukeley and Dr. Priestley attributed earthquakes to electricity. They are probably due to steam generated by subterraneous heat. An elaborate Catalogue of earthquakes (from 1606 B.C. to A.D. 1842), with commentaries on the phenomena, by R. and J. W. Mallet, was published by the British Association in 1858. In 1860 the velocity of their propagation was estimated by Mr. J. Brown at between 470 and 530 feet per second.*

Easter, instituted about 68, the festival observed by the church in commemoration of Our Saviour's resurrection, so called in England from the Saxon goddess Eostre, whose festival was in April. After much contention between the Eastern and Western churches, it was ordained by the council of Nice, 325, to be observed on the same day throughout the whole Christian world. "Easter-day is the Sunday following that fourteenth day of the calendar moon which happens upon or next after the 21st March: so that, if the said fourteenth day be a Sunday, Easter-day is not that Sunday, but the next." Easter-day may be any day of the five weeks which commence with March 22 and end with April 25. The dispute between the old British church and the new Anglo-Saxon church respecting Easter was settled about 664.—Easter-Sunday, 1883, 25 March; 1884, 13 April; 1885, 5 April.

Easter Island, in the Pacific Ocean, was discovered by Davis in 1686; it was visited by Roggewein, April, 1722, and from him obtained the name it now bears; it was visited by captain Cook, March, 1774. At the south-east extremity is the crater of an extinguished volcano, about two miles in circuit and 800 feet deep.

Eastern Question Association formed, the duke of Westminster president, Dec. 1876.

Eastern Roumelia, see Roumelia.

Ebelians, a German revivalist sect, which began at Königsberg, in Prussia, about 1836, its leaders being archdeacon Ebel and Dr. Diestel, who were tried and condemned for unsound doctrine and impure lives in 1839. The sentence was annulled in 1842, it is said by royal influence. The sect is popularly termed "Mucker," German for hypocrites. Their theory and practice of spiritual marriage are described by Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in his "Spiritual Wives," 1868.

Ebionites, heretics, in the first century, a branch of the Nazarenes, were of two kinds: one believed that our Saviour was born of a virgin, observed all the precepts of the Christian religion, but added the ceremonies of the Jews; the other believed that Christ was born after the manner of all mankind, and denied his divinity. Photinus revived the sect in 342.

Ebonite (vulcanized India-rubber), see Caoutchouc.

Ebro, a river in Spain—the scene of a signal defeat of the Spaniards by the French, under Lannes, near Tudela, 23 Nov. 1808; and also of several important movements of the allied British and Spanish armies during the Peninsular war (1809–13).

Ecclesiastical Commissions, appointed by queen Elizabeth, 1559; by James I. in Scotland, 1617; by the English parliament in 1641; and by James II., to coerce the universities, in 1687. A Church Inquiry Commission, appointed 23 June, 1832, reported June, 1835. The present ecclesiastical commissioners (bishops, deans, and laymen) for the management of church property were appointed in Feb. 1835, incorporated in 1836, and their proceedings regulated in 1840 and 1841. The law relating to them was amended in 1868.

Ecclesiastical Courts. There existed no distinction between lay and ecclesiastical courts in England until 1085, after the Norman conquest; see Arches and Consistory Courts. Till the establishment of the Divorce and Probate courts (which see), in 1857, the following were the causes cognizable in ecclesiastical courts: blasphemy, apostasy from Christianity, heresy, schism, ordinations, institutions to benefices, matrimony, divorces, bastardy, tithes, incest, fornication, adultery, probate of wills, administrations, etc.

A royal commission of inquiry respecting these courts agreed to, house of lords; 7 March, 1881, appointed.

Ecclesiastical Dilapidations, law respecting amended by acts passed in 1871 and 1872.

Ecclesiastical Gazette, Church of England semi-official journal; sent gratuitously to all dignitaries and incumbents; established 10 July, 1838.

Ecclesiastical State, or STATES OF THE CHURCH, see Rome, Modern.

Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 60 (1851); repealed 24 July, 1871; see Papal Aggression.

Echo. The time which elapses between the utterance of a sound and its return must be more than one twelfth of a second to form an echo. The whispering-gallery of St. Paul's is a well-known example. The Echo, independent evening paper, price $\frac{1}{4}$ d., established Dec. 1868.

Eckmühl (Bavaria), the site of a battle between the main armies of France (75,000) and Austria (40,000); Napoleon and marshal Davoust (hence prince d'Eckmühl) defeated the archduke Charles, 22 April, 1809.

Eclectics (from Greek, ἐκλέγω, I choose), ancient philosophers (called Analogetici, and also Philulethes, the lovers of truth), who, without attaching themselves to any sect, chose what they judged good from each: of them was Potamon of Alexandria, about A.D. 1. Also a Christian sect, who considered the doctrine of Plato conformable to the spirit of Christianity.

Eclipse (the race-horse), see Races.

Eclipses. Their revolution was calculated by Calippus, the Athenian, 336 B.C. The Egyptians said they had accurately observed 373 eclipses of the sun, and 832 of the moon, in the period from Vulcan to Alexander, who died 323 B.C. The theory of eclipses is said to have been known to the Chinese before 120 B.C. The first eclipse recorded happened 19 March, 721 B.C., at 8.40 P.M., according to Ptolemy; it was lunar, and was observed with accuracy at Babylon.

A list of eclipses to the year 2000 is given in "L'Art de Vérifier les Dates."

The Royal Astronomical Society published a volume of "Observations made during Total Solar Eclipses," 1880.

ECLIPSES OF THE SUN.

The Nineveh eclipse (recorded, according to sir Henry Rawlinson, on a Nineveh tablet in the British Museum).....	763
That predicted by Thales (Pliny , lib. ii. 9), believed to have occurred (see Italy).....	585
[Sir G. B. Airy thinks the date should be 610; others say 603 or 584 B.C. It is the one recorded by Herodotus as interrupting a battle between the Medes and Lydians.]
Eclipse of Xerxes, when setting out on his expedition against Greece.....	478
One at Athens (Thucydides , lib. iv.).....	424
Eclipse of Agathocles (Airy).....	310

The true sun, and the appearance of another, so that astronomers alone could distinguish the difference by colored glasses.....	"
Observed in Scotland: termed the "black hour".....	1433
Observed in Scotland: termed "Mirk Monday".....	1652
Total eclipse, visible in England; the darkness so great that the stars shone, and the birds went to roost at noon.....	1715
Last total eclipse observed in England; seen near Salisbury.....	1724
Remarkable one, central and annular in the interior of Europe.....	1802
Total eclipses—17 July, 1833; 8 July, 1843; 28 July, 1851.

An annular eclipse; it was seen and photographed at Oundle; but not seen well at other places... 15 March, 1860
Total eclipse of the sun; well seen by sir G. B. Airy, astronomer royal, and others in Spain; Mr. Warren De la Rue took photographs..... 18 July, 1860
Total eclipse of the sun of the longest possible duration; (the Royal Society provided means for its observation in India, by col. Walker, Mr. Herschel, and others), 18 Aug. 1868

During the solar eclipse, 18 Aug. 1868, as observed in India, M. Janssen invented a method of studying the phenomena of the sun at any time, by employing several spectroscopes, whereby the spectrum is lengthened and the dazzling brilliancy diminished. Mr. Joseph Norman Lockyer had suggested a similar method of observation in 1866, but did not use it till 20 Oct. 1868, being then not aware of M. Janssen's discovery.

The solar eclipse well observed in North America. 7 Aug. 1869
Two expeditions to observe the solar eclipse of 22 Dec. 1870, sent out by the British government, were not successful..... 22 Dec. 1870
The solar eclipse well observed at Ceylon and in southern India, 12 Dec. 1871; and in North America..... 30 July, 1878
[The same eclipses (about 70) recur in a period of 18 years 10½ days.]

Except the total eclipse, 12 Aug. 1909, there can be no total eclipse of the sun visible in England for 250 years.
—Hind: July, 1871.

ECLIPSES OF THE MOON.

The first, observed by the Chaldeans at Babylon (Ptolemy, iv.)..... B.C. 721
A total one observed at Sardis (Thucydides, vii.)..... 413

One at Rome, predicted by Q. Sulpitius Gallus (Livy, xlv.)..... 108
One terrified the Roman troops and quelled their revolt (Tacitus)..... A.D. 14

Ecnomus, see Himera.

École Polytechnique, a military academy at Paris, established in 1794, and reorganized and given its present name on 1 Sept. 1795. The "Journal" (1795–1867) contains profound mathematical papers. The school was reorganized 4 Sept. 1816. The pupils helped to defend Paris in 1814 and 1830.

Economic Museum (or Museum of Domestic and Sanitary Economy), at Twickenham, open free, was established chiefly by the agency of Mr. Thos. Twining, in 1860. It originated from the Paris exhibition of 1855.

Economist, London weekly journal, devoted to financial matters, first appeared 2 Sept. 1843.

Économistes, a philosophical sect, founded by François Quesnay (1694–1774), who exalted agriculture above all other arts; he asserted that it gave two things, the support of the laborer and an excess of value which belonged to the proprietor of the land ("product net"), and which alone should be taxed. He also favored great freedom for industry and trade. His "Physiocratie" (1768) and other works were at the time very popular, even at court, and are said to have influenced Adam Smith, author of "The Wealth of Nations."

Écorcheurs (Flayers), bands of armed adventurers who desolated France and Belgium during the fifteenth century, beginning about 1435. Among their leaders were Chabannes, comte de Dammartin, the bastard of Armagnac, and Villandras; and they at one time numbered 100,000. They are said to have stripped their victims to their shirts, and flayed the cattle. They were favored by the English invasion and the civil wars.

Ecuador, or EQUATOR, a South American republic, formerly Quito and other provinces, part of Colombia, 1821; independent in 1831, when the Colombian republic was divided into three; the other two being Venezuela and New Granada. The population of Ecuador is about 1,040,400, of which 76,000 are in Quito, the capital.

Eddas (thought formerly to mean Oldemoder, or "mother of mothers;" by others, "art"), two books of songs and sagas (prose and verse) containing the Scandinavian mythology (or history of Odin, Thor, Frea, etc.), written by skalds, or bards, about the eleventh or twelfth century. Translations have been made into French, English, etc. MSS. of the Eddas exist at Copenhagen and Upsal.

Eddystone (or EDYSTONE) Light-house, off the port of Plymouth, erected by the Trinity House to enable ships to avoid the Eddystone rock. The first light-house was commenced under Mr. Winstanley, in 1696; finished in 1699; and destroyed in the dreadful tempest of 27 Nov. 1703, when Mr. Winstanley and others perished. A wooden one, by Rudyerd, was built by order of parliament, and all ships were ordered to pay one penny per ton inwards and outwards towards supporting it, 1708. This light-house was burned 4 Dec. 1755; and one on a better plan, erected by Mr. Smeaton, finished 9 Oct. 1759. The woodwork of this, burned in 1770, was replaced by stone.

The foundation having given way, a new one was designed by Mr. James N. Douglass, engineer of the Trinity House. The foundation-stone was laid by the duke of Edinburgh in the presence of the prince of Wales, 19 Aug. 1879. The corner-stone was placed by the duke on 1 June, 1881.

"Eden," ship burned; see Wrecks, 1873.

Edessa (now Orfah), a town in Mesopotamia, said by some to have been built by Nimrod; by Appian, to have been built by Seleucus. It became famous for its schools of theology in the fifth century. It was made a principality by the crusaders, and was taken by the Saracens, 1145; by Nur-ed-deen, in 1144; and the Turks, in 1184. Its ancient kings or rulers were named Abgarus and Mannus.

Edgecote, see Banbury.

Edgehill Fight (23 Oct. 1642), Warwickshire, between the royalists under prince Rupert and the parliament army under the earl of Essex, was the first important engagement in the civil war. Charles I. was present, and the earl of Lindsay, who headed the royal foot, was mortally wounded. The king lost 5000 killed. The action was indecisive, though the parliament claimed the victory.

Edict of Nantes, by which Henry IV. of France granted toleration to his Protestant subjects, 13 April, 1598, was confirmed by Louis XIII. in 1610, and by Louis XIV. in 1652. It was revoked by Louis XIV. 22 Oct. 1685. This act cost France 50,000 Protestant families, and gave to England and Germany thousands of industrious artisans. It also caused a fierce insurrection in Languedoc; see Camisards. Some of the refugees settled in Spitalfields, where their descendants yet remain; others settled in Soho and St. Giles's, and pursued the art of making crystal glasses, and carried on the silk manufacture and jewelry, then little understood in England.

Edicts, public ordinances and decrees, usually set forth by sovereigns; originated with the Romans.—The PERPETUAL EDICT: Salvius Julianus, of Milan, a civilian at Rome (author of several treatises on public right), was employed by the emperor Adrian to draw up this body of laws for the prætors, promulgated 132.

Edinburgh, the metropolis of Scotland, derives its name—in ancient records Edinbure and Dun Edin, "the hill of Edin"—from its castle, founded or rebuilt by Edwin, king of Northumbria, who, having greatly extended his dominions, erected it for the protection of his newly acquired territories from the incursions of the Scots and Picts, 626. But it is said the castle was first built by Camelon, king of the Picts, 330 B.C. It makes a conspicuous appearance, standing on a rock 300 feet high at the west end of the old town, and, before the use of great guns, was a fortification of considerable strength.

Edinburgh, Bishopric of, was created by Charles I. when in Scotland in 1633; and William Forbes, minister of Edinburgh, first bishop. The king allotted the parishes of the shires of Edinburgh, Linlithgow, Haddington, and a part of Berwick and of Stirlingshire, to compose the see. The sixth and last prelate was Alexander Ross, who was ejected on the abolition of episcopacy, at the period of the revolution, in 1689. Edinburgh became a post-revolution bishopric in 1720; see Bishops.

Edinburgh Review (by Francis Jeffrey, rev. Sydney Smith, Henry Brougham, and other whigs) published first on 10 Oct. 1802.

Edinburgh University. A college was commenced by the town council of Edinburgh in 1581, for which queen Mary had given the site of ancient religious houses, and Robert Reid, bishop of Orkney, the funds in 1558. In 1582 the university was chartered by James VI., afterwards James I. of England. The first principal was appointed in 1585. The foundation-stone of the new buildings was laid by Francis, lord Napier, grand-master of the Masons of Scotland, 16 Nov. 1789. In 1845 the library contained upwards of 80,000 volumes, besides numerous curious and rare MSS. and documents. Dr. Lyon Playfair elected the first M.P. for Edinburgh and St. Andrew's universities in conformity with the act of 1868, Dec. 1868. Great movement to extend the university; meeting in London; large subscriptions, 7 Dec. 1874.

Education in the United States. In the United States popular education is provided for by the several states acting independently; but the systems in the several states differ only in details. Early in the history of the country, free district schools became common in the North, and out of these has grown the vast system of absolutely free, popular education now in existence in all the states, by means of which every child in the country is offered thorough elementary secular education, without cost. The common-school system is supplemented by state normal schools, and the higher education is provided for by the colleges (which see).

- He invests Azoth, which holds out for nineteen years, the longest siege of antiquity (Usher)..... 647
- Necho begins the canal between the Arabian gulf and the Mediterranean sea (Blair)..... 610
- This canal abandoned after costing the lives of 120,000 men (Herodotus)..... 609
- Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon deposes Apries..... 581
- Apries taken prisoner and strangled in his palace (Diod. Siculus)..... 571
- The philosopher Pythagoras comes from Samos into Egypt, and is instructed in the mysteries of Egyptian theology (Usher)..... 536
- The line of the Pharaohs ends in the murder of Psammeticus by Cambyses (Blair)..... 526
- Dreadful excesses of Cambyses; he puts the children of the grandees, male and female, to death, and makes the country a waste (Herodotus)..... 524
- He sends an army of 50,000 men across the desert to destroy the temple of Jupiter Ammon, but they all perish in the burning sands (Justin)..... "
- Egypt revolts from the Persians; again subdued by Xerxes (Blair)..... 487
- A revolt under Inarus (Blair)..... 463
- Successful revolt under Ananyteus, who is proclaimed king (Lenglet)..... 414
- Egypt again reduced by Ochus, king of Persia, and its temples pillaged (Usher)..... 350
- Alexander the Great conquers Egypt and founds Alexandria..... 332
- Ptolemy I. (Lagus) Soter re-establishes the monarchy..... 323
- Ptolemy II. Philadelphus (with his father, 285; alone [the museum of Alexandria founded; the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Scriptures made; the Pharos completed])..... 283-247
- Ambassadors first sent to Rome..... 269
- Ptolemy III. Euergetes reigns..... 247
- Overruns Syria, and returns laden with rich spoils and 2500 statues and vessels of gold and silver, which Cambyses had taken from the Egyptian temples (Blair)..... 246
- Ptolemy IV. Philopator..... Nov. 222
- Battle of Raphia; Ptolemy defeats Antiochus, king of Syria..... 217
- Ptolemy V. Epiphanes..... Nov. 206
- Embassy to Rome..... 200
- Ptolemy VI. Philometor..... 181
- At the death of Philometor, his brother Ptolemy VII. Euergetes marries his queen, and on the day of his nuptial murders the infant son of Philometor in his mother's arms..... Nov. 146
- His subjects, wearied by his cruelties and crimes, compel him to flee..... 130
- He defeats the Egyptians and recovers his throne, 128; dies..... 117
- Ptolemy VIII. and Cleopatra his mother..... "
- Alexander II. and Cleopatra..... 107
- Ptolemy VIII. restored..... 89
- Revolt in Upper Egypt; Thebes destroyed after a siege of three years (Diod. Siculus)..... 82
- Alexander II. and Cleopatra I..... 81
- Ptolemy IX. Auletes..... 80
- Berenice and Tryphæna..... 68
- Auletes restored, 55; leaves his kingdom to Ptolemy and Cleopatra..... 51
- During a civil war between Ptolemy and Cleopatra II., Alexandria is besieged by Cesar, and the library nearly destroyed by fire (Blair)..... 47
- Cesar defeats the king, who, in crossing the Nile, is drowned; and the younger Ptolemy and Cleopatra reign..... 46
- Cleopatra poisons her brother, and reigns alone..... 43

She appears before Marc Antony to answer for th's crime; fascinated by her beauty, he follows her into Egypt. 41 1806. Mehemet Ali Pacha; abdicated Sept. 1848; dies 2 Aug. 1849.

 1848. Ibrahim (adopted son), Sept.; dies 9 or 10 Nov. 1848.
 " Abbas (his son), 10 Nov.; dies 14 July, 1854.
 1854. Said (brother), 14 July; dies 15 Jan. 1863.
 1862. Ismail (nephew), 18 Jan. (born 31 Dec. 1830); deposed by the sultan at the request of England, France, and other powers, 26 June, 1879.
 1879. Mehemet Tewfik, born 10 Nov., 1852, invested with the Star of India by the prince of Wales, 25 Oct. 1875; proclaimed 26 June, invested 14 Aug.
Heir: Abbas, born 14 July, 1874.

Egyptian Era, etc. The old Egyptian year was identical with the era of Nabonassar, beginning 26 Feb. 747 B.C., and consisted of 365 days only. It was reformed 30 B.C., at which period the commencement of the year had arrived, by continually receding to 29 Aug., which was determined to be in future the first day of the year. To reduce to the Christian era, subtract 746 years 125 days. The canicular or heliacal period of the Egyptians and Ethiopians (1460 years) began when Sirius, or the dog-star, emerged from the rays of the sun, on 20 July, 2785 B.C., and extended to 1325 B.C. This year comprised 12 months of 30 days, with 5 supplementary days.

Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, erected in 1812 by G. F. Robinson for Bullock's natural-history collections, which were sold in 1819; since used for exhibitions, concerts, etc.

Ehrenbreitstein (Honour's broad stone), a strong Prussian fortress on the Rhine, formerly belonged to the electors of Treves. It was often besieged. It surrendered to the French general Jourdain, 24 Jan. 1799. The fortifications were destroyed on its evacuation, 9 Feb. 1801, at the peace of Luneville. The works have been restored since 1814.

Eider, a river separating Schleswig from Holstein, was passed by the Austrians and Prussians, 4 Feb. 1864.

Eidograph, see Pantograph.

Eikōn Basilikē ("The Portraiture of His Sacred Majesty in his Solitudes and Sufferings"), a book of devotion formerly attributed to king Charles I., but now generally believed to have been written partially, if not wholly, by bishop Gauden, and possibly approved by the king; it was published in 1648, and sold quickly.

Eisenach Declaration, see Germany, 1859.

Eisteddfod, see Bards.

Elam, see Persia.

El Arisch (Egypt), captured by the French under Reynier, 18 Feb. 1799. A convention was signed here between the grand-vizier and Kleber for the evacuation of Egypt by the French, 28 Jan. 1800. He beat the Turks at Heliopolis on 20 March, and was assassinated on 14 June following.

Elba, ISLE OF (on the coast of Tuscany), taken by admiral Nelson in 1796, but abandoned 1797. Elba was conferred upon Napoleon (with the title of emperor) on his relinquishing the throne of France, 5 April, 1814. He secretly embarked hence, with about 1200 men in hired feluccas, on the night of 25 Feb. 1815, landed in Provence, 1 March, and soon after recovered the crown; see France, 1815. Elba was resumed by the grand-duke of Tuscany, July, 1815.

Elchingen, Bavaria. Here Ney beat the Austrians, 14 Oct. 1805, and was made duke of Elchingen.

Elcho Shield, see under Volunteers.

Elders (in Greek, πρεσβύτεροι), in the early church equivalent with ἐπίσκοποι, or bishops (see 1 Tim. iii. and Titus i.), who afterwards became a distinct and superior order. Elders in the Presbyterian churches are laymen.

Elders' Widows Fund, established by the East India Company in 1820, to provide for widows and orphans of some of its servants, was closed in 1860. In 1878 an act was passed to transfer the surplus money to the provident fund, etc.

Eldon's Act, see Bankrupts.

El Dorado (the "Gilded Man"). When the Spaniards had conquered Mexico and Peru, they began to look for new sources of wealth; and, having heard of a golden city ruled by a king or priest smeared in oil and rolled in gold-dust (which report was founded on a merely annual custom of the Indians), they organized various expeditions into the interior of South America, which were accompanied with disasters and crimes, about 1560. Raleigh's expeditions in search of gold in 1596 and 1617 led to his fall.

Eleasa, Palestine. Here Judas Maccabeus was defeated and slain by Bacchides and Alcimus and the Syrians, about 161 B.C. (1 Macc. ix.).

Eleatic Sect, founded at Elea, in Sicily, by Xenophanes of Colophon, about 535 B.C., whither he had been banished on account of his wild theory of God and nature. He supposed that the stars were extinguished every morning and rekindled at night; that eclipses were occasioned by a partial extinction of the sun; that there were several suns and moons for the convenience of the different climates of the earth, etc.—Strabo. Zeno (about 364) was an Eleatic.

Elections Petitions. The laws respecting them were consolidated in 1828, 1839, and 1844. An act passed in 1848 was amended in 1865. By the act of 1868, three new judges were appointed, and three to be selected from all the judges to try election cases; justices Willes and Blackburn and baron Martin were first appointed, Nov. 1868.

Elector Palatine, see Palatinate.

Electors for members of parliament for counties were obliged to have forty shillings a year in land, 8 Hen. VI. 1429. Among the acts relating to electors are the following: Act depriving excise and custom-house officers and contractors with government of their votes, 1782; see Customs. Act to regulate polling, 1828. Great changes were made by the Reform acts of 1832, 1867, and 1868. County Elections act, 1836; see Bribery. The forty-shilling freeholders in Ireland lost their privilege in 1829. By Dodson's act, passed in 1861, university electors are permitted to vote by sending balloting papers. Hours of polling in metropolitan boroughs extended (from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M.) by act passed 25 Feb. 1878.

Electors of GERMANY. In the reign of Conrad I., king of Germany (912-918), the dukes and counts, from being merely officers, became gradually independent of the sovereign, and subsequently elected him. In 919 they confirmed the nomination of Henry I., duke of Saxony, by Conrad as his successor. In the thirteenth century seven princes (the archbishops of Mentz, Treves, and Cologne, the king of Bohemia, the electors of Brandenburg and Saxony, and the elector Palatine) assumed the exclusive privilege of nominating the emperor.—Robertson. An eighth elector (Bavaria) was made in 1648, and a ninth (Hanover) in 1692. The number was reduced to eight in 1777 (by the elector palatine acquiring Bavaria), and increased to ten at the peace of Luneville in 1801. On the dissolution of the German empire, the crown of Austria was made hereditary, 1804-6; see Germany.

Electors, UNITED STATES. By a provision of the constitution (Art. II, Sec. 1), the president and vice-president are chosen every four years by electors. These are appointed by each state "in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct," their number for the said state being equal to the whole number of representatives and senators to which the state may be entitled in congress. The electors meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves. The result, duly certified, is then transmitted to the president of the United States senate, who, upon the meeting of congress in December, in the presence of both houses, opens the certificates, and the votes are counted. The person having the greatest number of votes is declared president, "if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such majority, and have an equal number of votes," then the house of representatives chooses one of them for president, the votes being taken by states. After this vote, the person having the greatest number of electoral votes is declared vice-president. If the house in such a case should not before 4 March following choose a president, then the former vice-president becomes acting president. In case there is no majority of electoral votes for vice-president, he is, in like manner, chosen by the senate.

Electric Clock; see p. 239.

Electricity (from the Greek ήλεκτρος, electrum, amber). The electrical properties of rubbed amber are said to have been known to Thales, 600 B.C.; and Pliny, 70 A.D.; see Magnetism.

FRICITIONAL OR STATIC ELECTRICITY.

Gilbert records that other bodies besides amber generate electricity when rubbed, and that all substances may be attracted. . . . 1600
 Otto von Guericke constructed the first electric machine (a globe of sulphur) about 1647
 Boyle published his electrical experiments 1676
 Stephen Gray, aided by Wheeler, discovered that the human body conducts electricity, that electricity acts at a distance (motion in light bodies being produced by frictional electricity at a distance of 666 feet), the fact of electric induction, and other phenomena. 1720-36
 Dufay originated his dual theory of two electric fluids: one vitreous, from rubbed glass, etc., the other resinous, from rubbed amber, resin, etc.; and showed that two bodies similarly electrified repel each other, and attract bodies oppositely electrified. about 1733
 The Leyden jar (vial or bottle) discovered by Kleist, 1745, and by Cunnous and Muschenbroek, of Leyden; Winckler constructed the Leyden battery. 1746
 Desaguliers classified bodies as electrics and non-electrics. 1742
 Important researches of Watson, Canton, Beccaria, and Nollet 1740-7
 Franklin announced his theory of a single fluid, terming the vitreous electricity positive, and the resinous negative, 1747; and demonstrated the identity of the electric spark and lightning, drawing down electricity from a cloud by means of a kite. June, 1752
 At a picnic, he "killed a turkey by the electric spark, and roasted it by an electric jack before a fire kindled by the electric bottle." 1748
 Prof. Richman killed at St Petersburg while repeating Franklin's experiments. Aug. 1753
 Beccaria published his researches on atmospheric electricity, 1758; and Æpinus his mathematical theory. 1759
 Electricity developed by fishes investigated by Ingenhousz, Cavendish, and others. about 1773
 Lichtenberg produced his electrical figures. 1777
Electro-statics: Coulomb applied the torsion balance to the measurement of electric force. 1785
Electro-chemistry: water decomposed by Cavendish, Fourcroy, and others. 1787-90
 Discoveries of Galvani and Volta (see Voltaic Electricity, below). 1791-3
 Oersted, of Copenhagen, discovered electro-magnetic action (see Electro-magnetism, next page). 1819
Thermo-electricity (currents produced by heat) discovered by Seebeck: it was produced by heating pieces of copper and bismuth soldered together, 1821. The Thermo-electrometer invented by William Snow Harris, 1827; the Thermo-multiplier constructed by Melloni and Nobili, 1831. [Marcus constructed a powerful thermo-electric battery in 1866.]
 Faraday produced a spark by the sudden separation of a coiled keeper from a permanent magnet (see Magneto-electricity, next page). 1831

 Wheatstone calculated the velocity of electricity, on the double-fluid theory, to be 288,000 miles a second; on the single-fluid theory, 576,000 miles a second. 1834
 Armstrong discovered, and Faraday explained, the electricity of high-pressure steam, which produces the hydro-electric machine. 1840
ELECTRIC MACHINES.—Otto von Guericke obtained sparks by rubbing a globe of sulphur, about 1647; Newton, Boyle, and others used glass, about 1673; Hawksbee improved the machine, about 1709; Bose introduced a metallic conductor, 1733; Winckler contrived the cushion for the rubber, 1741; Gordon employed a glass cylinder, 1742; for which a plate was substituted about 1770; Canton introduced amalgam for the rubber, 1751; Van Marum constructed an electric machine at Haarlem, said to have been the most powerful ever made, 1785; Dr. H. M. Noad set up at the Panopticon, Leicester square, London, a very powerful electric machine and Leyden battery [in possession of Mr. Edwin Clark, 1862]. 1855
 The Hydro-electric machine, by Armstrong, was constructed. 1840
 Holtz's induction machine. 1865
 The ELECTROPHORUS, a useful apparatus for obtaining frictional electricity, was invented by Volta in 1775, and improved by him in. 1782
 C. F. Varley's "reciprocal electrophorus" invented. 1802
 Sir William Thomson's "electric replenisher" described, Jan. 1868
 Mr. App's great inductorium, or induction coil, giving the largest sparks ever seen, exhibited at the Royal Polytechnic Institution. 29 March, 1869
ELECTROSCOPE and ELECTROMETER, as the terms signify, are apparatus for ascertaining the presence and quantity of electrical excitation. Pith-balls were employed in various ways as electroscopes by Gilbert, Canton, and others. Dr. Milner invented an electrometer similar to Peltier's, 1783. The gold-leaf electrometer was invented by rev. A. Bennet, 1789, and improved by Singer, about 1810; Laue's discharging electrometer is dated 1767; Heuley's 1772; Bohnenberger's electroscope, 1820; Peltier's induction electrometer. about 1848
GALVANISM, OR VOLTAIC ELECTRICITY, ELECTROLYSIS, AND ELECTRO-MAGNETISM.
 (See Electro-physiology, p. 240.)
 Sulzer noticed a peculiar sensation in the tongue when silver and lead were brought into contact with it and each other. 1762
 Madame Galvani observed the convulsion in the muscles of frogs when brought into contact with two metals, in 1789; and M. Galvani, after studying the phenomena, laid the foundation of the galvanic battery. 1791
 Volta announced his discovery of the "Voltaic pile," composed of disks of zinc and silver, and moistened card. 1800
 By the voltaic pile, Nicholson and Carlisle decomposed water, and Dr. Henry decomposed nitric acid, ammonia, etc. "
 Transfer of acids and alkalis by Hisinger and Berzelius, Behrens formed a dry pile of 80 pairs of zinc, copper, and gilt paper. 1805
 By means of a large voltaic battery in the Royal Institution, London, Davy decomposed the alkali potash, and evolved the metal potassium (soda and other substances soon after). 6 Oct. 1807
 Zamboni constructed a dry pile of paper disks, coated with tin on one side and peroxide of manganese on the other. 1809
 Children's battery fused platinum, etc. "
 J. W. Ritter constructed his "secondary pile" about 1812
 Davy exhibited the voltaic arc. 1813
 Wollaston's thimble battery ignited platinum wire. 1815
 Multipliers or rheometers, popularly termed "galvanometers," invented by Ampère and by Schweigger, 1820; by Cumming, 1821; De la Rive, 1824; Ritchie (torsion), 1830; Joule (magnetic), 1843.
 Faraday described his discovery of electro-magnetic rotation. Jan. 1822
 Ohm enunciated his formulæ relating to the galvanic current. 1827
 Improvement in constructing the voltaic battery made by Wollaston, 1815; Becquerel, 1829; Sturgeon, 1830; J. F. Daniell, 1836; Grove (nitric acid, etc.), 1839; Jacob, 1840; Smee, 1840; Bunsen (carbon, etc.), 1842; Grove (gas battery), 1842.
 Faraday read the first series of his "Experimental Researches on Electricity" at the Royal Society. 21 Nov. 1831
 Faraday demonstrated the nature of electro-chemical decomposition, and the principle that the quantity and intensity of electric action of a galvanic battery depend on the size and number of plates employed. 1834
 Wheatstone invented his electro-magnetic chronoscope. 1840
Copper-zinc Couple (which see) constructed by Dr. J. H. Gladstone and Mr. A. Tribe. 1872
Batteries: Bichromate of potash battery, a modification of Dr. Leeson's; very powerful; now much used. (Gaston Plante's lead battery, powerful, 1860.) Chloride of silver battery (14,400 cells)—results of its dis-

- charge published by Drs. Warren de La Rue and Hugo Müller. Powerful results exhibited at Royal Institution, London..... 21 Jan. 1881
- Dr. Byrne's pneumatic battery (air blown in), very effective, announced..... 1878
- ELECTRIC ACCUMULATOR, a modification by M. Faure of Gaston Plante's powerful lead battery of 1860, was exhibited at Paris, May, 1881. In June a box, one cubic foot in size, containing four cells, enclosing thin sheets of lead surrounded with felt saturated with dilute acid, etc., was conveyed from Paris to London. Sir William Thomson found it to possess the electric energy of one million foot pounds; and said, in a letter to the Times of 9 June, 1881, "This solves the problem of storing electricity in a manner and in a state useful for many important applications"..... 6 June, 1881
- ELECTRO-MAGNETISM began with Oersted's discovery of the action of the electric current on the magnetic needle, 1819; proved by Ampere, who exhibited the action of the voltaic pile upon the magnetic needle, and of terrestrial magnetism upon the voltaic current; he also arranged the conducting wire in the form of a helix or spiral, invented a galvanometer, and imitated the magnet by a spiral galvanic wire..... 1820
- Arago magnetized a needle by the electric current, and attracted iron filings by the connecting wire of a galvanic battery..... 1825
- The first electro-magnet..... 1831
- Induction of electric currents discovered by Faraday announced..... 1831
- Bequerel invented an electro-magnetic balance..... 1834-5
- Faraday discovered the electro-magnetic rotative force developed in a magnet by voltaic electricity, 1831; experiments on the induction of a voltaic current, etc..... 1837
- Sturgeon made a bar of soft iron magnetic by surrounding it with coils of wire, and sending an electric current through the wire..... 1838
- Induction coil made by prof. G. C. Page, of Salem, Mass. Joseph Henry announced his discovery of secondary currents..... 2 Nov. 1838
- Breguet used electro-magnetic force to manufacture mathematical instruments..... about 1854
- MAGNETO-ELECTRICITY (the converse of Oersted's discovery of electro-magnetism) discovered by Faraday, who produced an electric spark by suddenly separating a coiled keeper from a permanent magnet; and found that an electric current existed in a copper disk rotated between the poles of a magnet..... 1831
- The Magneto electric machine arose out of Faraday's discovery, and was first made at Paris by Pixii, 1832; and in London by Saxton..... 1833
- "Faraday as a Discoverer," by prof. Tyndall, published, March, 1868
- Magneto-electricity applied to electro-plating by Woolwich..... 1842
- Ruhmkorff's magneto electric induction coil constructed, about 1850
- Siemens's armature produced..... 1854
- H. Wilde's description of his machine (a powerful generator of dynamic electricity, by means of permanent magnets) and the magneto electric machine (constructed in 1855) sent to the Royal Society by prof. Faraday and reported..... 26 April, 1866
- The light (resembling bright moonlight) exhibited on the top of Burlington House..... 2 March, 1867
- Principle of accumulation by successive action discovered by Wilde, 1865, by mutual action (by which permanent steel magnets are dispensed with); independently by Wheatstone and Siemens..... 1866
- Mr. W. Groves's electro induction balance..... 1879
- Proposed International Electrical Congress at Paris with exhibition..... 1 Aug.-15 Nov. 1881
- Dynamo magneto electric machines, by Wheatstone and Siemens, described at the Royal Society, 14 Feb., by Ladd..... 14 March, 1867
- Trial of Siemens's dynamo magneto electric light in the torpedo service at Sheerness reported successful, 18 Dec. 1871
- Two of Siemens's machines ordered for the Lizards, announced..... 1878
- Gramme's magneto electric machine described..... 1875
- APPLICATIONS—ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.
- The transmission of electricity by an insulated wire was shown by Watson and others..... 1747
- Telegraphic arrangements were devised by Lesage, 1744; Betancourt, 1787; Cavallo, 1795; Salva, 1796; Soemmering, exhibited 29 Aug. 1809; Ronalds..... 1816
- Ampere invents his telegraphic arrangement, employing the magnetic needle and coil, and the galvanic battery. F. Ronalds publishes an account of his electric telegraph (died, aged 85, 8 Aug. 1873)..... 1820
- Prof. Wheatstone constructs an electro-magnetic apparatus, by which 30 signals are conveyed through nearly four miles of wire..... June, 1836
- Telegraphs invented by Schilling, Gauss, and Weber (magneto electric), 1833; by Steinheil and by Masson, 1837; by Morse (died 1872)..... 1837
- The magnetic needle telegraph patented by Mr. (aft. sir) William F. Cooke and Mr. (aft. sir) Charles Wheatstone. (The Society of Arts Albert gold medal was awarded to them in June, 1867.)..... 12 June, "
- Mr. Cooke set up the telegraph line on the Great Western Railway, from Paddington to West Drayton, 1838-9; on the Blackwall line, 1840; and in Glasgow..... 1841
- Wheatstone's alphabetical printing telegraph patented..... 1841
- The first telegraph line in America set up from Washington to Baltimore..... 1844
- The murderer Tawell apprehended by means of the telegraph..... 1845
- The electric telegraph company established (having purchased Cooke's and Wheatstone's telegraphic inventions)..... 1846
- Gutta-percha suggested as an insulator by Faraday..... 1847
- Prof. Charles Wheatstone drew plans of a projected submarine telegraph between Dover and Calais..... 1840
- Mr. John Watkins Brett (on behalf of his brother, Jacob Brett, the inventor and patentee), submitted a similar plan to Louis Philippe without success..... 1847
- He obtained permission from Louis Napoleon to make a trial, 1847; took place..... 28 Aug. 1850
- The connecting wires (27 miles long) were placed on the government pier in Dover harbor, and in the Goliath steamer were coiled about 30 miles in length of telegraphic wire, enclosed in a covering of gutta-percha, half an inch in diameter. The Goliath started from Dover, unrolling the telegraphic wire as it proceeded, and allowing it to drop to the bed of the sea. In the evening the steamer arrived on the French coast, and the wire was run up the cliff at cape Grisnez to its terminal station, and messages were sent to and from between England and the French coast. But the wire, in settling into the sea bottom, crossed a rocky ridge, and snapped in two, and thus the enterprise for that time failed.
- New arrangements were soon made, and on a scale of greater magnitude; and the telegraph was opened; the opening and closing prices of the funds in Paris were known on the London stock exchange within business hours, and guns were fired at Dover by communication from Calais..... 13 Nov. 1851
- Duplex Telegraphy*—two messages transmitted along a single wire at the same time in opposite directions first accomplished by Dr. Gintl, Austrian, 1853; by Messrs. Siemens, 1857; in the same direction, by Stark, of Vicenza, 1855; apparatus perfected by Stearns, an American; applied to British telegraphs..... 1873
- Quadruplex Telegraphy*—four messages along one wire; successful experiments between London and Liverpool..... 25 Sept. 1877
- Communications complete between Dover and Ostend and between Portpatrick and Donaghadee..... May, 1863
- Holyhead and Howth..... June, 1864
- Paris and Bastia..... Nov. "
- London and Constantinople..... May, 1868
- Cromer and Emden..... "
- Aden and Sucoz..... May, 1859
- Malta and Alexandria..... 28 Sept. 1861
- England and Bombay, opened..... 1 March, 1865
- Marsala, Sicily, and La Calle, Algeria..... 21 June, "
- Over-house* electric telegraphs (first erected at Paris) set up between their premises in the City and West End by Messrs. Waterlow, in 1857, extended throughout London..... 1859-73
- House's printing telegraph, 1846; Bain's electro-chemical telegraph, 1846; Hughes's system, 1855; the American combination system (of the preceding), which can convey 2000 words an hour, adopted by the American telegraph company..... Jan. 1859
- Wheatstone's automatic printing telegraph patented..... 1860
- It was stated that there are in work 15,000 miles of electric telegraph wire in Great Britain; 80,000 on the continent of Europe; and 48,000 in America; and altogether about 150,000 miles laid down in the world. July, 1862
- Bonelli's typo-electric telegraph, made known and company established, 1860; and tried between Liverpool and Manchester, 1863; promised revival..... June, 1864
- An "electric telegraph" conference, at which 16 states (not Great Britain) were represented, met at Paris, March, 1865
- The Telegraph act (see Telegraph) passed..... 13 July, 1868
- It enabled H. M.'s postmaster general to acquire, work, and maintain electric telegraphs; postal telegraphy began..... 5 Feb. 1872
- Messages rise from 6,000,000 to 20,000,000 a year..... 1875
- The "shilling telegraph" said not to pay..... July, 1872
- Society of Telegraph Engineers established..... 28 Feb. 1872
- Result of the "Derby" race sent to Calcutta in five minutes..... 24 May, 1871
- Statue of Morse at New York uncovered..... 10 June, "
- Fourth international telegraph conference opened at Rome under the auspices of the Italian government..... 18 Dec. "
- The fifth international telegraph conference opened at St. Petersburg..... 1 June, 1875
- A new international telegraphic convention came into operation..... 1 Jan. 1876
- Direct line between New Zealand and London, completed 18 Feb.; communication between lord mayor and mayors of Wellington and Dunedin..... 23 Feb. "
- ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.—The project of the Atlantic cable was originally conceived in 1853, when the magnetic telegraph had been in operation but ten years. The original projectors were American capitalists, embracing Peter Cooper, Cyrus W. Field, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, and others, including Prof. Morse. This company succeeded in building the line from St. John's across Newfoundland, and under the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the mainland. They have obtained subsidies from the British and United States governments. These have since expired.

2500 miles of wire were manufactured, and tested in March, 1857

The laying it down commenced at Valentia, in Ireland, on..... 5 Aug. "

The vessels employed were the Niagara and Susquehanna (American vessels), and the Leopard and Agincourt (British vessels). After sailing a few miles the cable snapped. This was soon repaired; but on 11 Aug., after 300 miles of wire had been paid out, it snapped again (and the vessels returned to Plymouth)..... 11 Aug. "

A second attempt to lay the cable failed through a violent storm..... 20-21 June, 1858

The third voyage was successful. The junction between the two continents was completed by the laying down of 2050 miles of wire from Valentia, in Ireland, to Newfoundland. The first two messages, on 5 Aug., were from the queen of England to the president of the United States, and his reply..... 5 Aug. "

This event caused great rejoicing in both countries; but, unfortunately, the insulation of the wire gradually became more faulty, and the power of transmitting intelligence utterly ceased on..... 4 Sept. "

A new company was formed..... 1860

The Great Eastern steamer, engaged to lay down 2000 miles of wire, with 25,000 tons burden, sailed for Valentia, Ireland, from the Thames, commanded by Capt. Anderson, accompanied by prof. Wm. Thomson and Mr. Cromwell F. Varley, to superintend the paying out the cable..... 15 July, 1865

After connecting the wire with the land, the Great Eastern sailed from Valentia..... 23 July, "

Telegraphic communication with the vessel (interrupted by two faults, due to defective insulation, caused by pieces of metal pressed into the gutta-percha coating, which were immediately repaired) finally ceased on 2 Aug. The apparatus for raising the wire proving insufficient, the vessel returned, and arrived at the Medway..... 19 Aug. "

Atlantic Telegraph Company reconstituted as the Anglo-American Telegraph Company limited..... March, 1866

The Great Eastern, with a new cable, sailed from the Medway, 30 June; the shore end at Valentia was spliced with the main cable, and the Great Eastern sailed, 13 July; 1200 miles of cable had been laid, 22 July; the cable was completely laid at Heart's Content, Newfoundland, and a message sent to Lord Stanley, 27 July; message from the queen to president of the United States sent, 28 July. "From the queen, Osborne, to the president of the United States, Washington. The queen congratulates the president on the successful completion of an undertaking which she hopes may serve as an additional bond of union between the United States and England." To which he replied..... 30 July, "

The lost cable of 1865 recovered, 2 Sept.; and its lying completed at Newfoundland..... 8 Sept. "

The Great Eastern arrived at Liverpool..... 19 Sept. "

Messrs. Samuel Canning, Daniel Gooch, and Capt. Anderson knighted..... Oct. "

[It was stated (in Sept. 1866) that the engineer of the cable passed signals through 3700 miles of wire by means of a battery formed in a lady's thimble.]

The United States congress voted a gold medal to Cyrus Field, for his exertions connected with Atlantic telegraphs..... 7 March, 1867

At a dinner given to Cyrus Field at Willis's Rooms, London, telegraphic messages were exchanged between the company and Lord Monck, viceroy of Canada, and president Johnson..... 1 July, 1868

French Atlantic Telegraph Company formed; French government grant concession for 20 years, from 1 Sept. 1869, to Julius Reuter and Baron Emile d'Erlangen, 8 July, "

Anglo-Danish telegraph (Newbiggin to Copenhagen) completed..... 31 Aug. "

European end of the French Atlantic cable laid at Brest, 17 June; the American end at Duxbury, Massachusetts, 23 July, 1869

Reported union between the Anglo-American and French Atlantic telegraph companies..... Jan. 1870

Telegraph between Bombay and Suez completed..... "

Telegraph between Adelaide and Port Darwin, Australia, completed..... 22 Aug. 1872

Message from the mayor of Adelaide received by the lord mayor of London, and replied to..... 21 Oct. "

The fourth Atlantic telegraph cable laid by the Great Eastern, from Valentia, Ireland, to Heart's Content, Newfoundland..... 8 June-3 July, 1873

The Brazil telegraph cable completely laid..... 22 Sept. "

Faraday, a great electric cable ship, built for Siemens Brothers, launched at Newcastle (see Steam), 17 Feb.;

sails to lay the "Direct United States Company's" cable, 16 May; laid shore-end in Nova Scotia, 31 May; in New Hampshire, 8 June; connected with Newfoundland..... July, 1874

The sixth Anglo-American telegraph laid by the Great Eastern..... Aug.-Sept. "

E. A. Coopey's Writing telegraph: quick plain writing (36 miles), exhibited at Royal Institution, etc..... May, 1879

The Sixth International telegraph conference opened in London..... 18 June, "

South African line laid between Mozambique and Natal, 23 Aug.; connected with Cape Town; telegrams sent by the queen to Sir Bartle Frere and others, 25 Dec.; opened to the public..... 29 Dec. "

The new French Transatlantic Cable to be laid from Brest to St. Pierre by the Faraday, sailed June; connected with Halifax, Oct. 1879; line from Paris to New York opened..... 1 June, 1880

International Congress of Electricians to be opened at Paris, 15 Sept.; exhibition on..... 11 Aug. 1881

ELECTRIC CLOCK, etc. Prof. Wheatstone invented an electro-magnetic telegraph clock in 1840. Clocks worked by electricity, invented by Mr. Alexander Bain, Mr. Shepherd, and others, appeared in the exhibition of 1851. An electric clock, with four dials, illuminated at night, was set up for some time in front of the office of the electric telegraph company, in the Strand, London, July, 1852. A time-ball was set up by Mr. French, in Cornhill, in 1856. In 1860, Mr. C. V. Walker so connected the clock of the Greenwich observatory with that of the Southeastern station, London, that they could be controlled by electricity.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Humphry Davy produced electric light with carbon points..... 1802

Apparatus for regulating the electric light were devised in 1846, and shown by W. Stait's patents, 1846, 1849; Stait's (at Sunderland, 25 Oct. 1847), and Petrie in 1848; by Foucault soon after.

Jules Duboscq's Electric Lamp (the most perfect of the kind) appeared at the Paris exhibition in 1855; and was first employed by prof. Tyndall, at the Royal Institution, London, for illustrating lectures on light and colors..... 1856

The works of new Westminster bridge were illuminated by Watson's electric light..... 1858

The Magneto-Electric light (the most brilliant artificial light yet produced), devised by prof. Holmes, successfully tried at the South Foreland lighthouse, Dover, 1858 and 1859

The French government ordered eight light houses to be illuminated by electric light..... April, 1861

M. Serrin, of Paris, exhibited a improved electric lamp, 1862

Electric Candle, invented by Paul Jablockhoff (an electric current passed through two carbons side by side with a slip of kaolin between them, produces a steady, soft, noiseless light; the carbons burn like wax); reported to the Academy of Sciences, Paris, by M. Dénayrouze, Oct. 1876

The electric light successfully employed for photography by Mr. H. Van der Weyde..... " Head, Wrightson, & Co., of Stockton-on-Tees, use Siemens's electric light for bridge building..... "

At the Magasin du Louvre, 8 electric lights replaced 100 Carcel gas burners; as manageable as coal-gas supply; tried at West India docks..... 15 June, 1877

Tyndall's experiments at South Foreland, demonstrate superiority of Siemens's dynamo-electric machine, Aug. 1876-July, "

Gramme's machine (light equal to 758 candles)..... "

Serrin's and Jablockhoff's lights improved by Rapiéff, a Russian; taken up by Mr. E. J. Reed, M.P.; a small magneto-electric machine, worked by steam; conducting wires replace the gasworks and pipes..... July, 1878

Mr. Stayton reports that the light is much dearer than gas, and not suitable for street lighting in London, Sept. "

Electric light tried at Westminster palace..... 28 March, "

Two of Siemens's dynamo-magneto-electric machines ordered for the Lizards light houses..... "

The Gaiety theatre lit by light from Lontin's machine and modification of Jablockhoff's..... Aug. " Hippolyte Fontaine's treatise on Electric Lighting, 1877; translated by Paget Biggs, published..... "

Mr. T. E. Edison announces at New York his discovery of a method of producing a great number of lights and much mechanical power from a Ritchie inductive coil, a dynamo-electric machine, which he terms "tele-machon," which may be worked by water-power or steam; this causes a panic among gas companies in London, and depression in value of shares..... Sept., Oct. "

Edison's plans of subdividing lights filed at patent office, 23 Oct. "

National Electric Light Company forming..... Nov. "

Richard Werdermann's electric light subdivided; a number of jets lit simultaneously; shown by British telegraph company..... 2 Nov. "

Electric light used for large workshops at Woolwich, etc., throughout the country..... Nov. "

Times machine-room lit by six lights from one current; Rapiëff system. Oct., Nov. 1878

Three systems trying at New York by Edison, Sawyer, and Brush. Nov. 1878

Wallace lamp (American), introduced by Mr. Ladd, autumn, 1878

Jablochhoff candle tried at Westgate-on-Sea, by Mr. E. F. Davis, 2-26 Dec.; light successful; difficulty in practice; given up. Dec. 1878

Formation of nitric acid in the air by electric light; announced by Mr. T. Wills, 13 Dec. 1878; of hydrocyanic or prussic acid by prof. J. Dewar. autumn, 1879

Machines of Farmer & Wallace, Lontin, De Meritens, Browning, Carré, and others in use in London. 1879

Light given up at Billingsgate market, about. 30 Jan. 1879

Siemens's light successful at the Albert Hall. 13 Feb. 1879

Edison obtains beautiful light from platinum which fuses; used 600 horse power to obtain 20,000 lights at one station; failure announced, March; his patent registered. 23 April, 1879

Exhibition of lights at Royal Albert Hall opened by the prince of Wales. 7 May, 1879

M. Jamin's electric candle exhibited at Academy of Sciences, Paris. about 17 March, 1879

A dynamo magneto-electric machine patented by lord Elphinstone and C. W. Vincent. 1879

A committee of the house of commons appointed "to consider whether it is desirable to authorize municipal corporations or other local authorities to adopt any schemes for lighting by electricity" (Dr. Lyon Playfair, chairman), reports: "The energy of one-horse power may be converted into gaslight, and yields a luminosity equal to 12-candle power. But the same amount of energy transformed into electric light produces 1,600-candle power. . . . Scientific witnesses considered that in the future the electric current might be extensively used to transmit power as well as light to considerable distances, so that the power applied to mechanical purposes during the day might be made available for light during the night. . . . There seems to be no reason to doubt that the electric light has established itself for light house illumination, and is fitted to illumine large symmetrical places, such as squares, public halls, railway stations, and workshops. . . . Compared with gas, the economy for equal illumination does not yet appear to be conclusively established. . . . Gas companies, in the opinion of your committee, have no special claims to be considered as the future distributors of electric light. . . . Your committee, however, do not consider that the time has yet arrived to give general powers to private electric companies to break up the streets, unless by consent of the local authorities."—Times. 19 June, 1879

Electric light placed on Thames Embankment, in British Museum, at Victoria Station, etc. Dec. 1879

System of C. F. Brush (American), exhibited in London, said to be simple and trustworthy. 23 Dec. 1879

Dr. C. William Siemens reports to Royal Society that electric light acts like solar light on vegetation. 2 March, 1880

Electric lights set up for trial on Thames Embankment, north side (Jablochhoff system), 13 Dec. 1878; Waterloo Bridge, 10 Oct. 1879; continued. April, 1880

Mr. J. W. Swan exhibits his system of dividing light, etc., at Newcastle-on-Tyne (afterwards in London). 20 Oct. 1880

Trial of three systems in London: Lontin's, Southwark bridge, etc.; Brush, Blackfriars bridge, etc.; Siemens's, Guildhall, etc. 31 March, 1881

ELECTRIC LOOM. M. Bonelli, of Turin, in 1854, devised a plan of employing magnets and electro-magnets in weaving, thereby superseding the tedious and costly Jacquard-system of cards. His loom was set up in London in 1859, and lectured upon at the Royal Institution by prof. Faraday. 8 June, 1860

Electric Pen (for copying, etc.), invented by Mr. T. Edison, an American; an electric writing company was established; active in. 1877-8

Lamp-lighting by Electricity.—Mr. St. George Lane Fox's invention tried at Fulham, and reported successful, autumn, 1877; doubtful. 1879

ELECTROPHONE. Invented by Dr. Strehlitz Wright, for producing sound by electric currents of high tension: one laid before the Royal Scottish Society of Arts (see Téléphone). 25 April, 1864

ELECTRO-TINT. Mr. Palmer, of Newgate street, London, patented inventions by which engravings may not only be copied from other engraved plates, but the engraving itself actually produced, by electrical agency, and one process he termed glyptography. 1841-2

ELECTROTYPE OR DEPOSIT. Mr. Spencer, in England, and professor Jacobi, in Russia, made the first successful experiments in this art in 1837 and 1838. Since then, Mr. A. Stuee and others have perfected the processes. In 1840, Mr. Rob. Murray applied black-lead to non-metallic bodies as a conducting surface. In 1840, Mr. Ruolz and Mr. Elkington applied it to gilding and silver-plating. Since 1850, printing-types and wood-cuts, and casts from them, have been electrotyped with copper, and the process is now largely adopted in the arts. Messrs. C. Wheatstone and F. A. Abel experiment on the application of electricity to military purposes. 1861

An Electric safety-lamp made by MM. Dumas and Benoit; exhibited at Paris. 8 Sept. 1802

The Electro-block Company established, 1860; by their processes the enlargement and reduction of engravings, obtained by india-rubber, can be immediately transferred to a lithographic stone, and multiplied. Leech's engravings, so enlarged, were colored by himself, and exhibited in. "

Ozone, generated by a current produced by Wild's magneto-electric machine, employed to bleach sugar, at Whitechapel (Edward Beane's patent). Aug. 1808

Electric furnace, formed in the electric arc, by C. Wm. Siemens, fuses platinum, iridium, etc., shown at Royal Institution. 12 March, 1890

Electric light applied by him to grow vegetables and fruit in greenhouses. "

ELECTRIC RAILWAY, by Werner Siemens and Halske, opened near Berlin. 12 May, 1881

ELECTRO-PHYSIOLOGY. Aristotle and Pliny refer to the powers of the torpedo; Walsh and Ingenhousz, the discoveries of Galvani in 1790, and the researches of Matteucci about 1830, have greatly advanced the science. "

Fowler experimented on animals with galvanism, 1793; and Aldini, 1796, who produced muscular contractions in a criminal recently executed, 1803; Ure did the same. 1818

Du Bois-Reymond lectured on animal electricity at the Royal Institution, and showed the existence of an electric current, developed by action of the human muscles, in. May, 1855

Dr. Burdon Sanderson announced his discovery of electricity in plants to the British Association at Bradford. Sept. 1873

Electrolysis, see Electricity, p. 270.

Elegy. Elegiac verse (consisting of a hexameter and pentameter alternately) was the first variation from the hexameter or epic measure, used by Tyrtæus and other early poets. The elegies of Ovid and Catullus are celebrated. Gray's "Elegy," written in a Country Churchyard," was published in 1749.

Elementary Education Act, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, passed 9 Aug. 1870; amended in 1872. Clause 25, which authorizes payments to support denominational schools, much objected to by dissenters; bill to repeal it rejected by the commons (373-128), 10 June, 1874. Another act (for agricultural districts, etc.), brought in by lord Sandon, 18 May, 1876; royal assent, 15 Aug. 1876.

Elements were formerly reckoned as four: earth, air, fire, and water. Lavoisier enunciated the principle that all bodies which cannot be proved to be compounded are elements, and to be treated as such; see table below, and separate articles. The chemical elements now are stated to be about 77 (1881).*

Elephant, in the earliest times trained to war. The history of the Maccabees informs us that "to every elephant they appointed 1000 men armed with coats of mail, and 500 horse: and upon the elephants were strong towers of wood, etc." The elephants in the army of Antiochus were provoked to fight by showing them the "blood of grapes and mulberries." The first elephant said to have been seen in England was one of enormous size, presented by the king of France to our Henry III. in 1238.—Baker's Chron. Polyænus states that Cæsar brought one to Britain 54 B.C., which terrified the inhabitants greatly. 13 elephants in lord mayor's procession, 9 Nov. 1876; see Knighthood.

A young elephant brought into Court of Exchequer to show his peaceful character, in a suit for damages for frightening a pony at the Alexandra Palace, 13 July, 1879.

Only two elephants have ever been born in captivity; one of these was born in Philadelphia, about 1878; the other in Bridgeport, Conn., 2 Feb. 1882.

Eleusinian Mysteries. The institution of these annual secret religious ceremonies (in honor of Ceres) at Athens is attributed to Cadmus, 1550; to Erechtheus, 1399; or to Eumolpus, 1356 B.C. If any one revealed them, he was to be put to death. They were introduced from Eleusis into Rome, lasted about 1800 years, and were abolished by Theodosius A.D. 389. The laws were—1. To honor parents; 2. To honor the gods with the fruits of the earth; 3. Not to treat brutes with cruelty. Cicero makes the civilization of mankind one of the beneficial effects of the Eleusinian mysteries.

Elgin Marbles, derived chiefly from the Parthenon, a temple of Minerva, on the Acropolis at Athens, of which they formed part of the frieze and pediment, the work of Phidias, under the government of Pericles, about 440 B.C. Thomas lord Elgin began the collection of these marbles during his mission to the Ottoman Porte, in 1802; and from him they were purchased by the British government for 35,000*l.* and placed in the British Museum, in 1816. The ship conveying them was wrecked near Cerigo, and Mr. W. R. Hamilton, who was on board, remained several months at Cerigo, and recovered them from the sea.

Elgueta (N. Spain); near here the Carlists defeated the republicans under gen. Sorna, and took 600 prisoners, 5-6 Aug. 1873.

Elis, a Greek state termed the "Holy Land," in the Peloponnesus, founded by the Heraclidae, 1103 B.C. Here Iphitus revived the Olympic games, 884, which were regularly celebrated after Coræbus gained the prize in 776. Elis surrendered many towns to the Spartans in war, 400. After various changes, Elis joined the Achæan league, 274; and with the rest of Greece was subjugated by the Romans in 146.

Ell (so named from ulaa, the arm) was fixed at 45 inches by king Henry I. in 1101. The old French ell, or aune, was 46.790 inches.

Ellison Gallery. In April, 1860, Mrs. Elizabeth Ellison (in conformity with the wish of her deceased husband, Richard), presented to the South Kensington Museum a series of 50 original water-color drawings by the first masters.

Ellora, or ELORA (Central India); remarkable for its very ancient rock-cut temple; excavated according to Hindoo legends nearly 7000 years ago; but more probably about A.D. 800. The town was ceded to the British by Holkar in 1818, and transferred by them to the nizâm of the Deccan in 1822.

Elmina, and DUTCH GUINEA (W. Africa), were ceded by the Dutch government by treaty, signed Feb. 1872, and consolidated with the West African settlements; first governor, Mr. Pope Hennessy, April, 1872; see Ashantees.

El Molino del Rey, BATTLE AT. On the morning of 8 Sept. 1847, less than 4000 Americans attacked over 14,000 Mexicans under Santa Anna, at El Molino del Rey (the King's Mills), near the fortress of Chapultepec, close by the city of Mexico. They were at first repulsed with much slaughter; but, returning to the attack, fought desperately for an hour, and conquered. The Americans lost about 800 men; the Mexicans left more than 1000 dead on the field; see Chapultepec.

Elopement. A wife who departs from her husband loses her dower by the statute of Westm. 1285—unless her husband, without coercion of the church, be reconciled to her. Earlier laws published elopement with death when adultery followed.

Elphin (Ireland). St. Patrick founded a cathedral near Elphin, "by a river issuing from two fountains," in the fifth century, and placed over it St. Asicus, whom he created bishop, and who soon after filled it with monks. After many centuries, Roscommon, Ardarn, Drumclive, and others of less note, were also annexed to Elphin, which became one of the richest sees in Ireland. It is valued in the king's books, by an extent returned 28 Eliz., at 103*l.* 18*s.* sterling. The see was united to Kilmore in 1841, under the provisions of the Church Temporalities act, passed Aug. 1833.

Elainore (Zealand, Denmark), formerly the station for receiving the Sound dues (which see).

Ely, an island in Cambridgeshire, on which a church was built about 673, by Etheldreda, queen of Egfrid, king of Northumberland; she also founded a religious house, filled it with virgins, and became herself first abbess. The 1200th anniversary was celebrated 17-21 Oct. 1873; about 60,000*l.* had then been spent on the restoration of the cathedral. The Danes ruined the convent about 870; but a monastery was built in 879, on which king Edgar and succeeding monarchs bestowed great privileges and grants of land; whereby it became the richest in England. Richard, the eleventh abbot, wishing to free himself from the bishop of Lincoln, made great interest with Henry I. to get Ely erected into a bishopric, 1108, and his successor Hervey was the first prelate, 1109. It is valued in the king's books at 2134*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.*; present stated income, 5500*l.*

RECENT BISHOPS.

1781. James York, died 26 Aug. 1808.
1808. Thomas Dampier, died 13 May, 1812.
1812. Bowyer Edward Sparke, died 4 April, 1836.
1836. Joseph Allen, died 20 March, 1844.
1845. Thomas Turton, died 7 Jan. 1864.
1864. Edward Harold Browne, translated to Winchester Aug. 1873.

Ely Chapel, Holborn, London, erected in the fourteenth century, sold for 5250*l.*, 29 Jan. 1874; acquired by the Roman Catholic fathers of the order of Charity, 1874; and finely restored at the expense of the duke of Norfolk and others, opened as St. Etheldreda's chapel, 23 June, 1876.

Elzevir, or ELSEVIER, a family of printers, in Holland, whose reputation is based on fine pocket editions of the classics.

Louis, the founder, was born in 1540; began business at Leyden in 1580; he printed about 150 works, and died 4 Feb. 1617. His sons (especially Bonaventure) and grandsons were celebrated for their work.

Emancipation, see Roman Catholics and Slavery. The Emancipation Society for slaves lasted 1862-5.

Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, founded in 1594 by lady Anne Dacre for aged people and children. Its original annual income had increased from 360*l.* to about 4000*l.* in 1870, when changes in the disposition of the funds were proposed by the charity commissioners, and some effected.

Embalming. The ancient Egyptians, believing that their souls, after many thousand years, would re-inhabit their bodies, if preserved entire, embalmed the dead. Some of the bodies, called mummies, buried 3000 years ago, are still perfect. "The physicians embalmed Israel," 1689 B.C. (Gen. i. 2); see Mummies. Carbolic acid was successfully employed by prof. Seely in America, in 1868.

The most perfect specimens of modern embalming are preserved in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, one being the body of the wife of Van Butchell, preserved by John Hunter by injecting camphorated spirits of wine, etc., into the arteries and veins; and the other the body of a young woman, who died about 1790 of consumption, in the Lock hospital. The method of embalming royal personages in modern times is fully described in Hunter's "Posthumous Works." He died in 1793.—During the American war (1861-5), many soldiers' bodies were embalmed and sent home.

Embankments of earth were erected by the ancients for preservation from their enemies and the inundations of the tide. Those of the Egyptians and Babylonians are described by Herodotus and Strabo. To the Romans are attributed the first dikes of Holland, and the embankments of Romney Marsh, considered to be the oldest in Britain. In 1250, Henry III. issued a writ enforcing the support of these works, and his successors followed his example. James I. greatly encouraged the embankment of the Thames. Sir W. Dugdale's "History of Embanking" first appeared in 1662; see Drainage, Levels, and Thames. Since 1830, millions of pounds have been expended in embankments for railways.

Embargo, from the Spanish embargar, to detain, applied to the restraining ships from sailing. This power is vested in the crown, but is rarely exercised except in extreme cases, and sometimes as a prelude to war. The most memorable instances of embargo were those for the prevention of corn going out of the kingdom in 1766; and for the detention of all Russian, Danish, and Swedish ships in the several ports of the kingdom, owing to the armed neutrality, 14 Jan. 1801. On account of insults to the American flag by British cruisers, the congress of the United States, in Dec. 1807, decreed an embargo, detaining all vessels, American and foreign, in their ports, and ordering all American vessels home. The embargo decree was repealed in March, 1809, and the Non-intercourse act passed. Another embargo, for 90 days, was laid in April, 1812; see Armed Neutrality.

Ember-weeks, instituted, it is said, by pope Calixtus I. (219-223) to implore the blessing of God on the produce of the earth by prayer and fasting, in which penitents used to sprinkle the ashes (embers) of humiliation on their heads. In the English church the Ember days are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the following days: the first Sunday in Lent, Whitsunday, 14 Sept. (Holy Cross), and 13 Dec. (St. Lucia).

Embroidery is usually ascribed to the Phrygians; but the Sidonians excelled in it, and it is mentioned in 1491 B.C. (Exod. xxxv. 35, and xxxviii. 23); see Bayeux Tapestry. Embroidery is now done by machinery. The first embroidery machine is said to have been invented by John Duncan, of Glasgow, in 1804. Heilmann's embroidery machine was patented by Köchlin. Berlin wool-work has been much improved of late years by the production of more elegant patterns, first published by Mr. Wittich in Berlin, about 1810.

Emerald, a precious stone, of a green color, found in the East and in Peru. It has been erroneously alleged that there were no true emeralds in Europe before the conquest of Peru; but there is one in the Paris Museum, taken from the mitre of pope Julius II., who died in 1518, and Peru was not conquered till 1545.

Emesa, now Hems, Syria, renowned for a temple of the sun, the priest of which, Bassianus, was proclaimed emperor with the name Heliogabalus or Elagabalus, 218. His atrocities led to his assassination, 11 March, 222.

Emigrants. The French aristocracy and clergy (émigrés) began to leave their country in July, 1789, at the breaking-out of the revolution: their estates were confiscated in Dec. A large number returned in 1802 by an amnesty granted after the peace of Amiens. Many were indemnified after the restoration in 1815.

Emigration. Phœnician and Greek emigrants colonized the coasts of the Mediterranean and the Black Sea; see Magna Græcia, Marseilles, etc. The discovery of America opened a vast field for emigration, which was restrained by Charles I. in 1637. It has been greatly encouraged since 1819. Regulations for emigration were made in 1831, and in Jan. 1840 the Colonial Land and Emigration Board was established. Emigration much promoted through want of employment in London, 1869-70.

The "Society of the Sons of St. George," at Philadelphia, which was established to succor emigrants, still exists. It published a letter dissuading unsuitable emigration, Emily St. Pierre, see United States, 1862.

Eminence, a title conferred upon cardinals by pope Urban VIII., 10 Jan. 1631, as more honorable than "excellency." Previously cardinals had the title of illustrissimi.—Ashe. The grand-master of Malta also obtained this title.—Pardon.

Emir, a title of the caliphs among the Turks and Persians, first awarded to the descendants of Mahomet's daughter Fatima, about 650. To such only was originally given the privilege of wearing the green turban.

Emission Theory of Light (advocated by Newton, about 1672) supposes that individual particles pass from the luminous body to the eye, and that each ray of light passes from the sun to the earth. It is opposed to the Undulatory Theory (which see) now generally received.

Emly, an Irish see, said to have been founded by St. Patrick. Emly was called Imelaca-lhair: St. Ailbe was the first bishop, in 448. In 1568 the see was united to Cashel (which see). It is now an inconsiderable village.

Empalement. This mode of executing criminals, mentioned by Juvenal, and often inflicted in Rome, is still used in Turkey and Arabia. In England, the dead bodies of murderers were sometimes staked in this manner, previously to being buried; abolished 1823; see Suicide.

Emperor, from imperator (ruler), a title conferred on victorious Roman generals.

Emperor's Hymn (of Austria), words by L. L. Haschka, music by Joseph Haydn, first sung 12 Feb. 1797.

Empire City, a name given to New York.

Empirics, a sect of physicians, formed in the third century before Christ, who contended that all reasoning respecting the animal economy was useless, and that experience and observation were the only foundations of medicine. The sect adopted the principles of Acron of Agrigentum, who flourished about 430 B.C.

Employers and Workmen Act, passed 13 Aug. 1875, relates to legal settlement of disputes, etc.

Employers' Liability Act (to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by workmen), passed 7 Sept. 1880.

Employers of Labor, National Federation of Associated, formed in London about 10 Dec. 1873. The founders were said to employ about 2,000,000, principally in N. W. and N. England. Their object was to counteract the influence of trade unions. The first annual meeting held 24 Feb. 1875.

Iron Trades Employers' Association issued a circular proposing increase in hours of labor.....Dec. 1878 (See Strikes.)

Empress of India (Imperatrix Indiarum), addition to the royal titles, proclaimed in London, 1 May, 1876.

Emucfau and Eocanachooo, BATTLES ON, on 22 and 24 Jan. 1814. These were fought by 930 Tennessee volunteers and 200 or 300 friendly Indians, under gen. Jackson, against 900 Creeks. The Americans lost 20 killed and 75 wounded. The Creeks left 190 warriors dead on the field.

Enamelling was practised by the Egyptians, Chinese, and other nations, and was known in England in the time of the Saxons. At Oxford is an enamelled jewel, which belonged to Alfred, and which, as appears by the inscription, was made by his order, in his reign, about 887. Limoges enamelled ware was popular in the sixteenth century. Magnificent specimens by Lepec, Elkington, Emanuel, and others appeared at the exhibition at Paris, 1867; see Mosaic. On 19 June, 1862, madame Rachel (Levison or Leverson) sued capt. Carnegie for 928*l.* for enamelling his wife's face, and was nonsuited; see Trials, 1868. She was convicted of fraud in 1878; and died in prison, 12 Oct. 1880; see Trials.

Encænæa, Greek festivals kept on days on which cities were built and temples consecrated; and in later times, as at Oxford, at the celebration or commemoration of founders and benefactors.—Oldisworth. The public commemoration at Oxford suspended in 1875; restored, 21 June, 1876. They were the origin of church-wakes in England, about 600. They were also feasts celebrated by the Jews on the 25th of the ninth month, in commemoration of the Maccabees cleansing the temple, which had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes, 131 B.C.

Encaustic Painting, enamelling by fire. Painting with burnt wax is said to have been known to Praxiteles about 360 B.C. This art was revived by M. Bachelier, 1749; by count Caylus, 1765; and by Miss Greenland, 1785 and 1792.

Enclosure, see Inclosure.

Enoratites, followers of Titian, about 170, denounced marriage, and abstained from flesh, and from wine even at the Lord's supper.

Encumbered Estates Act, passed July, 1849, to enable owners of land or leases in Ireland, subject to encumbrance, to apply to commissioners appointed under it to direct a sale of such property. These commissioners held their first court in Dublin, 24 Oct. 1849, and their last 28 July, 1858, a new court being established under the Landed Estates act. The number of estates sold up to 1858 was 2380, producing twenty-two millions of pounds. In 1854 a similar act was passed for the West Indies.

Endosmosis. M. Dutrochet, about 1826, found that if two fluids, gases or vapors, of unequal density, are separated by an animal or vegetable membrane, the denser will attract the less dense through the medium. This property he called endosmose, when the attraction is from the outside to the inside, and exosmose when it operates from the inside to the outside. Many natural phenomena are thus more clearly understood.—Brande.

Endowed School Commission (consisting of lord Lyttelton, canon Robinson, and others) was appointed under the act 32 & 33 Vict. c. 56 (2 Aug. 1869). It threw open many endowments to the nation, and carried out reforms, being frequently much opposed. By an act passed 7 Aug. 1874, its duties were transferred to the charity commissioners, two new commissioners (Mr. Longley, lord Clinton) and canon Robinson being appointed. The commissioners had dealt with 74 schools, prepared schemes for 66, leaving about 660 to be dealt with, Aug. 1874.

Endowed Schools Act, containing the "Conscience Clause," passed 1860; another similar act passed 2 Aug. 1869.

Enfida Case, see Tunis.

Enfield (N. Middlesex), a manor belonging to the duchy of Lancaster, is mentioned in Domesday, and was given to De Mandeville by William I. after 1066. After various changes it became the property of the crown by the marriage of Mary, heiress of the Bohuns, to Henry, duke of Lancaster, afterwards king Henry IV. (1399). Edward VI. gave it to his sister Elizabeth, who resided here in 1552, in a palace, part of which still remains (1878). The grammar-school was founded about 1586. The ancient chase was dischased and enclosed after 1 Jan. 1779.

Engen, Baden. Here Morcau defeated the Austrians, 3 May, 1800.

Enghein, or STEENKIRK (S.W. Belgium). Here the British, under William III., were defeated by the French under marshal Luxembourg, 24 July, 1692.—The duc D'Enghein, a descendant of the great Condé, was seized in Baden by order of Bonaparte, conveyed to Vincennes, and, after a hasty trial, shot by torchlight, immediately after condemnation, 21 March, 1804. The body was exhumed, 20 March, 1816.

Engineers, MILITARY, formerly called trench-masters. Sir William Pelham officiated as trench-master in 1622; the chief-engineer was called camp-master-general in 1634. Capt. Thomas Rudd had the rank of chief-engineer to the king about 1630. The corps of engineers was formerly a civil corps, but was made a military force and directed to rank with the artillery, 25 April, 1787. It has a colonel-in-chief, 16 colonels-commandant, and 16 colonels. Civil Engineering became important in the middle of the last century, when Smeaton began the Eddystone light-house, and Brindley the Bridgewater canal. Since then the Rennies, Telford, the Stephensons and Brunels, Locke, and others have constructed breakwaters, docks, bridges, railways, tunnels, etc., which are the marvel of our age.

"Engineering is the art of directing the great sources of power in nature for the use and convenience of man" (Thomas Tredgold, died 1829).

England (from Angles and land, land), so named, it is said, by Egbert, first king of the English, in a general council held at Winchester, 829; or by Athelstan, 925; see Anglo-Saxons. England was united to Wales, 1283; to Scotland in 1603; they have had the same legislature since 1707, when the three were styled Great Britain. Ireland was incorporated with them, by the act of legislative union, 1 Jan. 1801, and the whole was called the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The British empire is computed to contain about 7,000,000 square miles of territory, with 200,000,000 inhabitants. Statistical details are given under the respective headings Army, Navy, Revenue, etc. For previous history, see Britain, Histories of England, by Rapin (in English), 1725-31; Thomas Carte, 1747-55; David Hume, 1755-62; Tobias Smollett, 1757-65; John Lingard, 1819-30; Charles Knight, 1856-62; J. R. Green, 1874-80. Parts by T. B. Macaulay, earl Stanhope, J. A. Froude, Miss H. Martineau, and others; see Chronicles.
